The same handsome custode beamed a welcome, but doubtless there were many new faces among the pupils. No less than 415 had been admitted since October 1, 1901. Every floor in the large palazzo was occupied by classes. In the top rooms Miss Carruthers was showing some visitors a sewing-class of the younger children, and might well be proud of the pile of useful garments already made.

Descending, we came on other classes engaged on different studies—one, that of the elder girls, practising free-hand drawing. These are preparing to be the teachers of the future. Every department was in perfect order, and everything most thorough and practical. But the crown and blessing of this work is the Scriptural instruction it imparts daily to every pupil whom the grace of God leads within those walls. No child can pass through these schools without acquiring a large and accurate knowledge of Holy Scripture.

Each class ceased its work, and Miss Carruthers put them through a series of questions compiled by herself in her "Christian Doctrine and Morality as Taught by the Word of God," the answers being all in the words of Scripture. These books of Miss Carruthers ought to be translated and used in the schools of our own land, where, alas! the repetition of Scripture is fast dying out. I give an example of the Scriptural teaching in these Italian schools:—

ON THE NEW BIRTH.

Q. (46). What did the Lord Jesus say concerning the new birth? A. The Lord Jesus said to Nicodemus, "Verily, verily I say unto you, except a man be born again he cannot see the Kingdom of God" (John iii. 3).

Q. (47). What is the meaning of being born again? A. Those who are born again become new creatures. "If anyone is in Christ, he is a new creature. Old things are passed away; behold all things are become new."

And so on. It was delightful to hear the quick and perfect responses, and to know the good seed was being sown daily in over 400 souls in prayer and faith; and that it will not return void, but will bring forth fruit not only in this life, but in that which is to come.

Entering the Pigmy Forest.

UGANDA is so connected in the minds of the English public with the idea of "progress," brought in contact as it is with the outside world of civilization by means of that mighty work of engineering, the railway, that it is perhaps difficult to believe that about 300 miles north-west of Uganda is to be found practically the same condition of things as when Sir Henry Stanley passed through these parts in search of Emin Pasha, and surprised the civilized world by his experiences among the most lowly types of the human family, including that remarkable forest race known as the "Pigmies."

But even in these far-distant parts the light, that has dispelled the ignorance in which the Baganda had remained for so many centuries, is beginning to penetrate this thick darkness, and its rays are shedding life and healing to the many tribes around.

Toro is a separate kingdom to the north-west of Uganda, under the rule of Daudi Kasagama, who, with his ministers and chiefs, seeks most earnestly to propagate the Gospel to the most distant of his people. Three years ago, with Miss Pike, I was stationed in Toro, we being the first ladies to reach this country, which is about a fortnight's journey from our fellow-missionaries in Uganda. Here we found but one other missionary, Mr. Maddox. Since that time the European staff has been considerably increased, and now, besides my husband and myself, there are two other clergymen, Mr. Maddox and his wife, a doctor, and two ladies.

In that period of time the work has grown and extended on every hand. At present there are no fewer than offshoots of the Mother Church, that has trained and sent out its missionaries. One of the largest and most vigorous of these out-stations is situated on the borders of Stanley's Great Forest, the home of the Pigmies, and before leaving for England in the autumn, my husband was anxious to cross the great snow-capped mountain barrier, Ruwenzori, visit this furthermost post, and, if possible, extend its field of action. So, in spite of its being the wet season, on April 30 we packed up our tent, furniture, and food boxes for an indefinite journey and stay in Mboga. My hammock bearers bravely hurried along, but as we turned off the road to reach Busanga, our first halting place, the path became so congested and slippery that the porters stumbled along hopelessly.

Busanga is one of the Toro "Mission Halls," and we found the teacher had swept out and delegated to our use a tiny grass hut. In the afternoon our tent was well surrounded by broad grins and inquisitive eyes, to the owners of which we discussed the plans for the following day. What a true May-day that was! As the sun rose, all nature seemed to tremble in its endeavour to laud its Maker. No wonder that the people swarmed out of their stuffy little huts, and quickly crowded out the Mission Church for morning service. Over 200 sat listening with eager intelligence, answering questions with quick replies as my husband unfolded to them the plan of redemption. After this they turned out in a body to assist in the re-thatching of God's house. Even the children would not be left out of it, but came proudly back carrying a few strands of grass on their pates. At three o'clock they returned to be taught; so, while my husband took the men off to the tent, over ninety women came with me to the church for a class. And what a curious audience! To let the European have all the talk shows a lack of appreciation on their part; so, with one leading off, all the others will exclaim in unison, "Aye, aye"; or, "That's so"; or they will repeat a whole sentence that has specially struck them. At the close they will say: "That's very well done, very well done indeed."

At our next day's camp, Itojo, things were very different. This is known as a Roman Catholic garden. The old chief we found smoking in his courtyard, and he would not stir to greet us. All his wives and people were smoking, more or less, the result being dulled, almost dead, intellects, and absolutely no physical energy. When we asked them to come and sing with us, and listen to our message, they refused, saying they were "Papists." Alas! this too often means complete ignorance of God and our Saviour, with merely a superstitious belief in a little bronze medal of the Virgin Mary, which is offered as "religion" to the people, without any word of teaching. The idea is to prevent the people from learning the Protestant heresy, which "will send them to perdition," and not to teach them faith in God and salvation from sin.

The following morning we were up before daybreak to escape the sun's heat, as we crossed the plain that extends from the Albert Edward to the Albert Lake, through which winds and twists the broad river Semliki. A big "dug-out" canoe was brought across to ferry us over, and then returned to fetch our porters, asses, and cows. Two more days marching brought us to the end of our journeying. After very steep climbing, we caught sight of our mission station, and of running out to meet us. After a prayer of thanksgiving, I was escorted by the ladies to the chief's audience-chamber; and was offered some milk from a black, very smoky native pot, which I was obliged to enjoy! Very few of these women had ever seen a white lady, so I was subjected to hard stares from about 150 heads. The chief had erected a kind of shed, under which our tent was pitched for protection against storms and sun. They were very warm in their praises of "Bwana Fisher, who has much grace and love"; for not only did he first come to them six years ago to tell them of Christ, but now he had brought to them the first white lady to teach them.

Mboga is inhabited by representatives of all the surrounding tribes, who have filtered in from their own districts when oppressed by those under Belgian rule. The Bamba and Bakonjo are two tribes living in the Ruwenzori fastnesses, the former a wild, ungovernable people now in revolt. Their clothing consists almost exclusively of beads and wire anklets and bracelets, and they twist their hair into a thick streaky fringe by means of white grease. The Balega are a people living among the mountains on the western shores of the Albert Lake, and the people tell us that those of them that live further back from the mountains are cannibals. The Bahuka live on the borders of the forest, subsisting chiefly by hunting.

The Banyema are a people living in Belgian territory, who until recent times were the most merciless plunderers. The Bambuba and Bativa are the inhabitants of the vast impenetrable forest (the latter better known as the Pigmies). They live a wandering life, building for themselves nothing beyond grass huts that can be erected in an hour or so; they carry about with them bows and arrows, which procure for them their food, and are turned on anyone who attempts to approach them.

At our Sunday morning service, with its attendance of 450, no less than five of these different tribes were represented, and these are all learning to read from the little Scripture reading sheets, with a view to coming forward for baptism. There are others who have already been brought into the fold of the Good Shepherd, including two Pigmies. There is no reason why this station should not become the centre from which trained native teachers will in the future be sent back to their own people who are still in the darkness and the shadow of death. The baptized converts of Mboga number about 250, while over sixty are communicants. Already it has sent to Toro young men to be trained as missionaries, and during our stay here two more have come forward.

Each morning I have a class for thirty-seven candidates, men and women who, after six to eight months' instruction have come forward for baptism. My husband holds a daily service in the church with an hour's instruction, after which the men all adjourn, some to bring in poles from the forests, headed by their chief, Paulo, and others to help in the building of their new church and teacher's house. The women will go home for their spades, and rich and poor will work hard at clearing and levelling the plot. In the afternoon I have a class for Christian women, to which fifty to seventy regularly come bringing various questions to be solved.

The Delta of Egypt.

SHEBIN EL-KOM, the capital of the Province of Menoufia in the Delta of Egypt, was opened as a Mission station in 1899 by Messrs. C. T. Hooper and A. T. Upson of the North Africa Mission. For some months they were unable to make any great headway in the town, but at last, in February, 1900, they succeeded in hiring a house, and started regular meetings for the preaching of the Gospel. In October of the same year a second house was secured with shops and meeting rooms, and by the Lord's favour the work prospered.

In 1901, the workers were reinforced and were enabled to open a Bible depôt, and later on in the year to add to it a department for the sale of educational and religious publications, also to secure the services of a colporteur, who is partly supported by the British and Foreign Bible Society. Last month he sold over £10 worth of Scriptures and educational works.

Last year the workers were, through a generous gift of £50 from a lady for the express purpose, enabled to open a school for boys. This new enterprise has still further enlarged the influence of the workers, and brought them into closer touch with the young life of the town and neighbourhood. The school opened with 175 boys in attendance. This was the signal for opposition from both Moslems and Copts. The Coptic priest was especially energetic, and by dint of threats of excommunication, and misrepresentations of our teaching and purpose, succeeded in inducing some of the Copts to withdraw their children. In spite of this, however, the school prospered, and when it was closed for a short summer vacation, there were 125 boys in attendance.

The school is not a mere educational agency. A Bible lesson is given to every class in the morning. By tact and care, we have succeeded in winning attention to a full but simple statement of Christian truth; and the Bible lesson is now looked forward to by all. A Sunday-school has been commenced and bids fair to prosper.

Our present rooms, the only available premises at all suitable for the purpose, are too small for the numbers now attending, in addition to being insanitary. For the establishing and developing of the work it is necessary that we should have larger and better, and, if possible, our own house. Negotiations are in progress for the purchase of a piece of land which would not only admit of the erection of school-rooms, but of mission premises in general, all of which are sorely needed. To accomplish this some £2,000 would be needed; but the purchase of the land and the erection of suitable temporary school accommodation could be effected for about £400.

W. F. FAIRMAN.

Italian Church Reform Association.

MANY seem to think that with the death of Count Campello the work of the Reformed Catholic Church in Italy has come to an end. This is very far from being the case. In the summer of 1901, Count Campello's health quite broke down, and since that time the work has been under the direction of Rev. Professor Cicchitti, of Milan, who has been a member of the Church since 1883.

After Campello sent in a formal resignation, Professor Cicchitti was unanimously elected President by a Synod held in Rome in March, 1902. He has just brought out a new Liturgy, copies of which may be bought from Mr. Arthur Patton, I.C.R.A., Church House, Westminster. To save expense the liturgy is printed without the Psalms.

Christianity in Business.

THE LATE MR. S. W. PARTRIDGE.

A LIFE of consistent devotion to the Christian ideal of "living for others" was closed when, a few weeks since, Mr. S. W. Partridge passed to his rest, at the ripe age of ninety-two. As founder of the well-known publishing house in Paternoster Row, Mr. Partridge's name will be familiar to many who were unacquainted with the man. In his younger days, he knew what it was to struggle with poverty, but by force of ability and industry he gradually made his way. He lived in the city of London, near to the printing establishment where he was employed as a reader. Habitually industrious, he devoted much of his spare time to self-improvement. It was no self-centred life, however, that he lived. During those days of stress, as well as in the prosperous period of later life, he thought of others—not in a mere humanitarian sense, but from the standpoint of a Christian. For example, while earning £1 a week, and having at the same time to fulfil responsibilities towards his mother and sisters, it appears that, among other tokens of a generous mind, he regularly subscribed a guinea per annum to the funds of the Bible Society.

In the summer of 1836, Rev. John Natt, then vicar of St. Sepulchre, determined to establish a Sunday-School for poor children, and young Mr. Partridge threw himself earnestly into the good work, taking charge of the lowest class. In a series of vividly written papers which appeared in the Sunday School Magazine, he describes some of his experiences:—

I soon discovered that to teach in the school was but half my work, and that by no means the least necessary and laborious one was that of visiting the children at their homes, and stimulating them to regular and punctual attendance. To accomplish this end, I devoted a few portions of my scraps and fractions of time to the visitation of absentees. I found it was by no means a pleasant work to descend to the cellar and climb to the garret, inhaling the stagnant atmosphere and braving the pestilential miasma of the sick and crowded room. I was generally received courteously, often with gratitude; counsel, I found, was not always cast away; I frequently discovered self-denying piety in the most unlikely localities.

The effect of this visitation system was seen in increasing attendances as the days went by, until Mr. Partridge could write:—

Gradually my class increased; sometimes upwards of seventy were at once present on a Sunday afternoon. Each quarter, boys were selected for the higher classes, but others rapidly filled their places, and at length I wrote in my address book the name and residence of the thousand-and-first little boy who had entered the class since its formation twelve years before.

Mr. Partridge's memories of Sunday-school work and of visitation in the terrible slums which then disgraced the Smithfield district, were subsequently re-published in book form under the title of "The Class of a Thousand and One," and met with wide acceptance. All his life Mr. Partridge was active in Christian work; at one time, he was a prominent member of the Old Weigh House Chapel, during the pastorate of the esteemed and popular Dr. Binney.

After some experience with a friend in founding a printing establishment in West London, Mr. Partridge started in business and he remained at the head of the firm until his retirement in 1882. During his long and useful career in the publishing trade, he originated, or co-operated in originating, not a few publications which have had an abiding effect in creating a taste for pure literature, and which by their evangelistic character have done much to counteract secularism and materialism, particularly among the poorer classes. Perhaps the most striking figure among the worthy men who in one way or another became intimately associated with the firm was the late Mr. T. B. Smithies, founder of that sterling periodical, The British Workman, and distinguished both as editor and writer. Mr. Bewley, of Dublin, and others, also lent their influence, and The Band of Hope Review, The Friendly Visitor, The Children's Friend, and The Infants' Magazine were among the ventures that met with general approval.

Mr. Partridge was assiduous in cultivating his gift of ready and picturesque writing. Of his books the chief are in verse. He wrote with charm and on lofty themes; there is the true poetic ring in "Beads without a String," and "Jesus at Nazareth." "Upward and Onward: a Thought Book for the Threshold of an Active Life," has run through a dozen editions. He was the author, too, of many hymns—of which the best known, "How dearly God must love us," is found in many children's collections—and temperance recitations in prose and verse. He was likewise a skilful violinist, and, possessing a fine tenor voice, was for years a member of the Handel Festival Choir. As a life abstainer, the Gospel Temperance movement had his whole-hearted support.

In 1882 Mr. Partridge's business associations suddenly suffered

A TRAGIC CONCLUSION.

Proceeding one evening as usual from Paternoster Row towards the tram terminus at Moorgate Street, he was suddenly dashed to the ground by a man who was rushing with letters towards the post-office. The author of the accident did not stay to proffer help, but passers-by hastened to raise Mr. Partridge and assist him to a cab. He was driven home in an insensible condition, and was never again able to resume his business duties. At this time he was upwards of seventy years of age, but owing largely to the care of his daughter, he not only lived on into his ninety-third year, but accomplished much good work. His chief occupation was to cull helpful extracts from current literature, which were neatly pasted on sheets of paper, and made up into neat booklets. These as Mr. Partridge designated them, were prepared specially for the use of the sick and convalescent, who would be unable to hold a heavy book, or to endure the fatigue of reading a long one. To Hospitals and Homes all over the land these "Half Hour Books" were sent, although few recipients were aware of the name of the donor. Upwards of six thousand of them were circulated, and material accumulated for many more.

The later years of this long life were thus peacefully spent in doing good, and afforded an apt illustration of Mr. Partridge's own advice to young men:—

In thy worn track across the heath of life
Full many an after-traveller will tread;
See that thou lead him not astray from God,
But prove a pioneer to Christ and Heaven.

Among his papers was found a letter, addressed to his daughter, which concluded: "The anticipation of death is to me full of trust and intense joy. We shall meet again in the Morning."

Thoughts on Prayer.

WHAT is prayer? An expression (or even a feeling) of want going out from the weakest to the Strongest, or rather, from the helpless and dependent to the All-Powerful and Independent. Take these terms absolutely, and take them in connection with the fact that the "Almighty and Unconditioned" has pledged Himself in terms of love to the helpless suppliant, and what room is left for anything but inevitableness in the answers to prayer? Add to the attributes of the Deity mentioned above, the further ones of Omniscience and Omnipresence, and however urgent the particular want, or however definite the particular request, the dominant petition of a believer in God must be, "Not my will but Thine be done." This does not mean that the definite request is not granted, but that it is granted in God's way.

A critic might reply: "You are playing with words; for a request is not really granted unless the reply is identical with it in kind." This is true of an unconditional request, but such a request is not prayer. "He that cometh unto God must believe that He is"—God, Love, Omnipotent, Omniscient, Omnipresent. Without some (however faint) apprehension of these qualities existing in One Person, there is no real prayer; and with this apprehension there will be a sense of utter dependence which will find its fittest expression in the all-inclusive supplication, "Thy will be done." Most of the difficulties felt in regard to prayer vanish if we take a wide enough view of the Sovereignty of God. We are apt to make the "plan of God" include almost everything but our prayers. Include prayer in "the plan" and the bread which one man gets unasked for (save, perhaps, by the unconscious prayer of labour) is the answer in the case of another to his prayer, "Give us this day our daily bread." His heavenly Father has given him not only daily bread, but the far more priceless gift of filial trust, of which prayer is the expression.

This idea of the plan of God including everything may seem incompatible with man's responsibility. "The dictum of universal consciousness must pass unquestioned," and therefore we are morally free somewhere and somehow, far back in the region of choice, not in the series of daily decisions which are linked with antecedent motives and impulses. There is a latent, inspired spirit of prayer in every human heart; on this the Spirit of God moves, and here the mystery of the great conflict begins: "God's will or mine?" It is the entrance to the Valley of Decision.

All the fitness He requireth
Is to feel your need IN Him.
This He gives you—'tis His Spirit's rising beam.

It is thus all "of God." Time is a condition of human life which greatly tends to obscure God's answers to prayer. An answer to prayer coming years after the petition was presented—while numberless other prayers and answers have intervened—is not recognised; but a faithful record is kept by Him who cannot lie, and with whom duration is a boundless Now.

God's plan in the material universe, which we call the law of gravitation, presents some analogy to his plan in Providence (which includes prayer). The astounding fact in gravitation (Procter says, and he quotes Newton) is that it acts instantaneously, regardless of time, however great the distance. A disturbing influence originating in our planet will be felt instantly on the most distant star (though in a degree infinitesimally small); but it does not seem instantaneous to the observer, for light, which conveys the fact to him, takes time to travel, and so if the light from a given star takes three years to reach us, the instantaneous effect of gravitation could not be known here until three years had expired; so God instantly answers prayer, the prayer which He has Himself inspired. But other of His beneficent modes of action, which we call "laws" (like that which regulates light), may retard a knowledge or receipt of the blessing.

Business Men as Missionaries.

MR. W. C. K. TORRE AND HIS WORK.

THE subject of this sketch, W. Chas. Kirkby Torre, was born in 1853, at Birmingham, and was the eldest son of the late Rev. Nicholas K. Torre, a clergyman of the Church of England. He was educated at St. John's College, Hurstpierpoint, having obtained the Gilbert Scholarship given by the Bishop of Chichester. At the age of seventeen he entered the London offices of the South Eastern Railway Company, where he remained nineteen years, resigning his position at the end of that period to go out to the Argentine Republic.

During the early years of his life, Mr. Torre sought enjoyment in the pleasures of the world, and did so in no half-hearted manner. He owed his conversion to the faithful and persistent endeavours of a fellow-clerk, who used every opportunity to bring his friend to the knowledge of Christ as his Saviour. These efforts were at length rewarded, for the two friends went together one day to a meeting for men held in Cannon Street Hotel, when the faithful preaching of Rev. (now Canon) W. Hay Aitken led to his conversion.

Mr. Torre was then twenty-five years old, and from that day to this he has steadfastly served his God with true purpose of heart. Work for Christ was soon definitely begun in the evenings after his day's work was done, and in the Sunday-school. In 1879 he married Miss Alice A. Woodman, who had greatly influenced him for Christ. Mr. and Mrs. Torre, having settled down in the neighbourhood, began to attend the meetings at Clapton Hall, where they were soon received into the fellowship of that assembly.

Interest in South America was first awakened by an address from Mr. J. H. L. Ewen in 1887. Becoming burdened with the fact that there are millions of men and women there who had never heard the Gospel, Mr. Torre felt that there was a responsibility resting upon him, and that he must do all in his power to meet it. Eventually he obtained a business situation in a railway in Buenos Ayres, and with wife and three little ones he sailed for that port in 1889. Since that time he has worked steadily in his business, cheerfully giving the whole of his time, apart from office hours, to the service of the Lord; and his labours have borne abundant fruit.

The main part of his work has been in the thickly-populated Barracas district of Buenos Ayres. The first-fruits of the preaching were men of stamina and reliable character. These have steadily grown in grace, and now form a band of workers whose help and co-operation in the many branches of the work are invaluable.

At the present time, there are three halls for meetings, but as they are quite inadequate to meet the needs, a movable wooden tent, capable of seating about 500 persons, has recently been erected in one of the many districts of Buenos Ayres where there has never been any Gospel testimony hitherto. The following is an extract from the last letter received from Mr. William Payne, who has most successfully carried on the work during Mr. Torre's absence :—"Tent meetings began on Thursday with 250, Friday 375, Sunday night 450, and Monday 500—packed out, and at 7.45 p.m., we had to close the door and refuse to let more in. A big crowd turned away." As there are many thousands in the great city of Buenos Ayres still unevangelized, this new effort, and the blessing upon it, are causes for much thankfulness.

Mr. Torre also started open-air Gospel services in Buenos Ayres, which are well attended; and many owe their conversion to these gatherings. This is a somewhat remarkable feature of the work, as there are not many foreign countries (especially Roman Catholic ones) where this is allowed.

The printing-press has been busy for years; it is at present under the charge of a devoted young Christian—Mr. Ernest Airth. He and Mr. Torre are printing and freely circulating far and wide Evangelical Christian literature, of which there is a great dearth in all Spanish-speaking countries. Mr. Torre publishes two periodicals Rayos de Luz ("Rays of Light") and El Estudiante ("The Student"). The former is a Gospel paper, and the latter is for the building up of believers.

Mrs. Torre has been a true helpmate to her husband in all things, and joyfully shares in his labours; but she has taken up, as her special work for God, an orphanage at Quilmes, a suburb of Buenos Ayres. Nine years have elapsed since she took in the first child to care for; to-day there is a good brick building, with accommodation for twenty-nine children, and the place is full. They are carefully tended, and everything is done to enable them to learn how to earn their own living. Several of the older children have been placed in situations, and there has been a work of grace in many of them. There is no guaranteed support for the orphanage, which is carried on in faith, and is maintained by voluntary contributions. Mrs. Torre has two much valued voluntary helpers (Miss Westbrook and Miss Kennan) in this work among children.

MR. W. C. K. TORRE.

MANY OPEN DOORS.

The Argentine Republic is growing in importance. It contains a good many Englishmen and many millions of British money. Its capital, Buenos Ayres, is the largest Spanish-speaking city in the world, and the most populous of any south of the Equator. The religion is Roman Catholic; but there is much indifference. The priests have not so much power as in Europe, and there are many opportunities for Gospel effort; but only a few Evangelical agencies are at work. At no time has Mr. Torre's work been in a more prosperous and promising condition than at present. Last year thirty-seven converts were baptized, bringing the present membership of the Church in Buenos Ayres up to over a hundred, representing twelve distinct nationalities; and it must be remembered that the population is a shifting one.

During a visit he is now making to England with his wife, after an absence of nearly ten years, Mr. Torre is seeking to call attention to the many open doors for evangelizing the Argentine Republic. That country has now 10,000 miles of railway, serving many rapidly growing districts and towns, where the people are "sitting in darkness and in the shadow of death," waiting for the Church to obey its Lord's command to give "the Gospel to every creature." As there are so many railways, banks, and business houses in the hands of Englishmen, much work for the Lord might be done if Christian men would follow Mr. Torre's example, by obtaining business situations there, and labouring in the Gospel among the surrounding community. Such are self-supporting missionaries; but only those who are stedfast and spiritually minded, really called of God, should seek to go out in this way, as the temptations to which young men are exposed are very great indeed.

Mr. Torre intends to return to Buenos Ayres about the end of the present year, and as the Gospel work has grown so very much under his hands, he now feels led to free himself from business, and devote all his time to evangelistic work, looking to the Lord to supply his temporal needs. He will then be able to travel and preach in distant towns which he has not yet had the opportunity of visiting. His large experience renders him eminently suited to carry the Gospel to the Roman Catholics of the Argentine, especially as his way has been prepared for years by the Gospel literature which he has regularly sent out and scattered with no sparing hand. His address is care of Dr. Maclean, 10, Widcombe Crescent, Bath.

G. M.

SELF-SUPPORTING MISSIONARIES.

In a letter on the subject of "Missionary Enterprise," just received, Mr. Torre says :—

There are many places in the "foreign field" where this is not possible, but, on the other hand, there are countries such as the Argentine Republic, where Christian men can earn their living, and at the same time have the privilege of obeying the Master's command to preach the Gospel to those who have never heard it.

Gradually a band of fellow-workers and converts, all self-supporting except our colporteur, has been raised up in Buenos Ayres. In the town of San Fernando, Mr. William Finkle and Mr. Fred Smith began Gospel testimony, and have now the pleasure of seeing a prosperous work in the hands of Mr. W. B. Sallans. At Campana, a young engineer, Mr. J. McCririck, also saw the need of giving the Gospel to the people, and rented and fitted up a hall; the result is a flourishing work superintended by Mr. Cook, from Australia. At Tandil, Mr. Lister Newton (now in England) carried on a good work for Christ for nearly six years, supporting himself and family by teaching. At Córdoba, Mr. Robert Hogg has obtained employment in a railway, and is giving his spare time to work for Christ. At Rosario, Messrs. George French, Fred Coleman, and George Spooner, are carrying on a good aggressive Gospel work. Mr. E. C. Harrison, of Quilmes, is busy working amongst postal employés by means of his paper, El Correo Evangélico, with good results. Mr. F. Fletcher, who spent all his money in his work amongst neglected children, is the veteran self-supporting worker of the Argentine. At Bahia Blanca, Mr. Arch. Holder is earnestly engaged in service for Christ. At Tolosa, Mr. Ernest Airth, who superintends the printing-press, has also an excellent Sunday-school and Gospel meetings in his house.

I am now referring only to what is being done by "self-supporting" workers among the Spanish speaking people, and do not overlook the valuable work carried on by the American Methodist Church, Mr. P. Besson (French Baptist), the Salvation Army, Mr. E. Olsson, the South American Missionary Society, the Alliance Mission of New York, Regions Beyond Mission, my beloved fellow-workers in Cordoba and Tucuman, and Mr. and Mrs. Will Payne, now caring for the work in Buenos Ayres and Quilmes in my absence.

Only the fringe of the population is being touched, as there are still districts in Buenos Ayres and hundreds of towns and places in the Argentine Republic, without the Gospel.

I shall be glad to give all the information in my power to any who may be desirous of going to the Argentine as self-supporting workers.

W. Charles K. Torre.

Douay College in England.

In the middle of June there arrived in London, on their way to Woolhampton, in the Roman Catholic diocese of Portsmouth, the abbot, community, and students of the English College at Douay (a town situated 121 miles to the north-east of Paris), a body of ecclesiastics expelled by the French Government as a danger to the peace and well-being of the community. This is the second time in little more than a century that France has relieved herself of troublesome priests, and England has given them asylum. But England expelled them in the first instance, and the story of their emigrations is WORTH TELLING.

Queen Elizabeth, as all know, had an insecure throne, and the Romanists were the cause. William Allen, who had been canon of York and principal of St. Mary's Hall, Oxford, in the reign of Queen Mary, openly avowed his hostility to Elizabeth, and exhorted his co-religionists to rebel. Failing in this purpose, he fled to Louvain, and was made successively doctor of divinity, a canon of Cambray and of Rheims. The Pope created him a cardinal, so that he might act as Papal delegate in England when Philip II. of Spain had conquered it with his Armada — altogether one of those deep, treacherous, political schemes which the Church of Rome, under the pretence of religion, delights to frame and carry out; in this case it was signally defeated.

Bishop Andrewes says of Allen, that "his forehead was surely flint, and his tongue a razor." Unable to work for Romanism at home, he worked for it in France, by planning and establishing, in 1568, a college for English Roman Catholic students at Douay; the priests thus trained were to be missionaries to this country, to keep alive and spread the Romish faith. Its first and chief work was to see that, no matter what happened to them, there was always a supply of priests. The civil power, perceiving in these men the cause of sedition and rebellion, dealt out hard measure to them, and executed 160 on the scaffold, sixty of them being Englishmen. An Irish college and a Scotch college were added to the English, and thus the propaganda was recruited from the three kingdoms.

Douay shows a line of policy which has been followed with much astuteness; the Scriptures must be fought with the Scriptures. Whenever a country has been favoured with a translation, and the faith of converts is thus sustained, the Romish church offers another version, and gives along with it her own notes and comments. The scholars of Douay set themselves the task of providing for their countrymen a version of the Bible that might do something to make them true sons of the Church. Just as in Tahiti, in later days, the priests used, in the first instance, the version made by the Protestant missionaries, until they had made one of their own; and then they called in every Protestant copy they could get, piled them in a heap, and made a bonfire of them. They will not provide the Scriptures voluntarily, but when they must do something, they give the Word with a due amount of Romish thought and guidance.

A ROMANIST VERSION OF THE BIBLE.

So Cardinal Allen, Gregory Martin, and Richard Bristow united their forces to give the English-speaking people a Roman Catholic version of the Bible. Martin was a native of Maxfield, in Sussex, an Oxford student, an able controversialist, a hard worker, and the chief translator of the entire Bible. He was a pervert to Rome, and so also was Bristow, who was a native of Worcester, and a fellow of Exeter College, Oxford. He is said to have written the notes in the New Testament, while Thomas Worthington, another Oxford scholar, is said to have prepared the annotations and tables for the Old Testament.

Martin's opinion of the English Bible (the Authorized Version was not yet made) is thus expressed: "Not, indeed, God's Book, Worde, or Scripture, but the devil's worde," and he is greatly incensed at such translations as congregation for church, elder for priest, general for catholic, minister for deacon, overseer for bishop, and such like, in order, as he alleges, "to conceal and obscure the name of the church and dignities thereof, mentioned in the Holy Scriptures."

The New Testament appeared in quarto in 1582, and had on its title-page the words: "The New Testament of Jesus Christ, translated faithfully into English out of the authentical Latin, according to the best corrected copies of the same, diligently conferred with the Greeke and other editions in divers languages: with arguments of bookes and chapters, annotations, and other necessarie helpers, for the better understanding of the text, and specially for the discoverie of the Corruptions of divers late translations, and for cleering the Controversies in religion, of these daies: In the English College of Rhemes." Then follow a quotation from the Psalms, and a quotation from Augustine, with the words: "Printed at Rhemes, by John Fogny, 1582, Cum Privilegio."

UNDER OBLIGATION TO PROTESTANT VERSIONS.

Much as the translators reviled previous workers, they were under obligations to Beza, to the Genevan version, to the Bishops' Bible, and to Wycliffe. Some of their work also has been incorporated in the Authorized Version. The ordinary Douay New Testament now sold for the use of Romanists is not quite the same as that of 1582; e.g., the 1582 edition translated Rev. xxii. 14, "Blessed are they that wash their stoles" (the stole is "a long, narrow band or scarf with fringed ends, worn by ecclesiastics of the Roman and English churches"); but in the new editions published "with the approbation of the Catholic archbishops and bishops of Ireland," it is rendered "Blessed are they that wash their robes."

In 1793, the colleges at Douay were seized by the army of the French Republic, and most of the professors and students sent as prisoners to Dourlen, in Picardy. Some of the old manuscripts were used by the soldiers for making cartridges. "The buildings were converted into barracks, and some are so used to this day." Nineteen students contrived to escape to England, where they were sheltered at a fine country mansion called Crook Hall, in the county of Durham, belonging to a Roman Catholic gentleman. After the fall of Robespierre, the prisoners, twenty-six in number, were liberated and came and joined their friends, thus making a college of forty-five students and professors. And their retreat was an ideal place. It stood quite alone, half-a-mile from the high road, and attracted no attention. Here and there was a farm-house or a cottage. Three-quarters of a mile off was a wind-swept hamlet, Iveston, and two miles down the valley was the quaint and ancient village of Lanchester, where Dora Greenwell was born. The old Hall is gone; a farm-house, built with its stones, is near its site. The remainder of the stones were taken to build a house at Lanchester; the outlines of the fish-ponds and of the fine avenue may still be seen.

DOUAY COLLEGE AT USHAW.

The fear of Romanism was beginning to fade away, and in 1804 a new college was founded at Ushaw, a place about four miles from Durham, in order to receive the refugees and forward the Romish propaganda. The professors and students removed to the building in 1808, before it was finished; in 1819 it was said to be finished, but I believe many additions have been made. Twenty years ago it gave accommodation to 320 students, fifty or sixty of whom were intended for the priesthood, the rest being "laymen." The library is a fine one, and contained more than 20,000 volumes when I last saw it. It was curious to notice among the books Doddridge's "Family Expositor," Barnes' "Notes," Principal Cunningham's "Historical Theology," and other Protestant works.

Most of the priest-students from Ushaw settle as priests in the north of England; the men who landed in June have gone south, and they and their successors will spread over the south. Then it is to be remembered that there is a large college in Lancashire—Stoneyhurst—another near Canterbury, another at Tooting, and another in Wales, this last being founded in 1881 when the French Republic expelled some students. There may be more colleges in Britain, of which I have not heard. There are at least two more in Ireland.

"FREEDOM FREE TO SLAY HERSELF."

Whereunto will this grow? What will it do? Religious liberty is right; but religious privilege and supremacy ending in temporal domination, the thing for which Rome is always struggling, is the death of a nation. To drive error from one country to another by persecution is to do nothing towards destroying it; it is like blowing thistle seed from one field to another. Good cultivation is the only thing that can keep weeds down. The spread of the Gospel is the antidote to Romanism. J. P. G.

The Time to Pray.

When should I pray? When morning light
Streams brightly in to cheer my sight;
This be the act to ope the day;
Then is the time—the time to pray.

When life's fair morn is in the dawn,
Or e'er my youthful dreams are gone,
A guide to seek for duty's way,
Then is the time—the time to pray.

When noonday suns in splendour shine,
Then let me seek Thy grace Divine;
I need Thy help throughout the day;
Then is the time—the time to pray.

When mildening beams speak evening nigh,
Then let me raise the grateful eye,
Give praise for guidance through the day;
Then is the time—the time to pray.

And when my eve of life has come,
And nearer seems my blissful home,
When shadows lower, for heaven's ray,
Then is the time—the time to pray.

And when my Saviour bids me "sleep,"
Let not my friends around me weep,
As this frail spirit ebbs away,
Then is the time—the time to pray.

Come shade, come shine; come sorrow, joy;
Should friends delight, or foes annoy;
'Mid swelling hope, or bleak dismay,
'Tis ever, always time to pray.

KESWICK ADDRESSES.

*Possessing our Inheritance.

Joshua i. 1-6.

By Rev. HUBERT BROOKE.

This is a book, as you know, about the life, and quite probably written by the hand of Joshua. It tells us of something like thirty years of his life. As you see from the closing chapters of the book he had thirty-one years to live in the land, and the entire story unfolded in the book covers these thirty-one years. Notice the striking way in which the book is quoted in the New Testament. We limit our reference to three places in Hebrews. Allusion is made in chapter iv. to Joshua not giving the people perfect rest. And from this we turn our eyes to the One who can give perfect rest with all pardon, and find a deeper rest in following Him day after day.

Chapter xi. has another reference to the same fact. These imperial victories were gained right through the whole story of Joshua by faith in the great Captain of the Lord's host. In chapter xiii. 5, you have the promise of the perpetual presence of the Lord with His people, "I will never leave thee." Here is a promise of the Old Testament times, spoken by Joshua and taken by the inspired writer in the New Testament, and handed over to Christians as part of their glorious inheritance.

THE SURE PROMISES.

If we would sum up what the whole book is about, we cannot do better than take Obadiah 17, "The house of Jacob shall possess their possessions." These possessions had been promised to Moses, repeated to Jacob, and repeated to Joseph, and here is the promise as sure as when it was first given. Here is a lesson for us. We take up the Bible, some of it 4,000 years old, yet as fresh and living as ever it was. There is a striking verse in Haggai ii., "I am with you, saith the Lord of hosts, according to the word that I covenanted with you when ye came out of Egypt, so My Spirit remaineth among you; fear ye not." That was a promise 900 years old, and yet the moment and day it was claimed, it was as fresh and living as ever. This is a word for us to-day. It was a living word in that day, and when the soul comes in touch with it to-day, it finds that it is living now. So we have Israel coming in to occupy their possessions.

GOD'S ORDER.

Once more we notice that this is God's order. Israel had first to learn what pardon meant; at Sinai they had lessons on purity; as they came to the borders of the Promised Land they had given to them power. Here we have the real outcome. What is to be done with this power? It was all in order that they could go in and possess their possessions. God had given these possessions to His people, and nothing was just as He would have it till they were in possession of what He had given them in His word centuries before. And things in the Church of Christ are not perfectly right to-day until we press on to know in pardon, in purity, and in power, what it is to possess our possessions.

We find in the New Testament what these possessions are which the Lord means His people to have and hold for Him. The Apostle Paul points to many evil things remaining in the Church of Christ. Writing to the Christians at Ephesus, he says that even among themselves there were wolves who might devour the flock. Those who should be watchdogs were wolves.

THE ABIDING PRESENCE.

There are two key-words I want you to notice: (1) "I will be with thee." Again and again there are times of conquest, when the presence of God is shown. In the New Testament we find it so, as well as in the Old. What made the mountains skip like lambs, the sea flow back, and the earth tremble? The other key-word is "inheritance." Fifty-eight times this word is found in Joshua. So we ask what it is the New Testament tells us we have to do with ourselves. Turn to Acts xx. 32, where we have the Apostle's parting message to his helpers at Ephesus: "Now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of His grace, which is able to build you up and to give you an inheritance among all them that are sanctified." We do not want to have just a place among the pardoned and saved, and to get into heaven "by the skin of our teeth"; we want "an abundant entrance."

Again, in Acts xxvi. 18, Paul repeats the command he had received to go to the Gentiles, "to open their eyes, and turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified, by faith that is in Me." In Ephes. i. 11, 18, the same allusion is made to the inheritance, as in 1 Peter i. 4. Some of this inheritance you cannot have now, but you may have a good deal; and I want us to prove more completely the possession which God means His people to have.

NEW BEGINNINGS.

If you look at the Book of Joshua and the Acts of the Apostles, and then think of your own lives, you will find some striking things. These two books marked real fresh beginnings. Before the children of Israel entered the promised land they had a new leader, new crossings of the Jordan, a new separation and keeping of the Passover, a new change of food. All this took place before Joshua fell down at the feet of the Lord of hosts. And it may be the same with you. Do not be disturbed because one speaker may have said that the blessing you seek is a sudden experience, and another told you it would mean a gradual change.

If you enlist as a soldier to-day, does it take until Christmas to enrol you? At Keswick God has been speaking to some of you, and you never knew before that He wanted a gift of your life. Do not go away and think it was lightly done. I heard a man speaking on the words, "Present your bodies a living sacrifice." He said that a great many people yielded themselves to God. They go away, but find something and immediately say, "I was not consecrated." They begin over again. Now that is not the way. This man said: "When an Israelite offered up a burnt sacrifice to God he brought the prime bullock out of his herd, and the bullock was taken and bound to the altar, and whatever toucheth the altar is holy. Suppose the man comes back and says: 'Did I really leave my offering?' The priest replies: 'It is the Lord's; you cannot have it back.'" As soon as I try to live out the fact that I belong to Him, I cannot have myself back. The act was sudden, but the life has been gradual.

THE CHURCH AND ITS HERITAGE.

What has God actually given to us for an inheritance. Just as it took all Israel to occupy the Promised Land, so it will take all Christians to occupy the inheritance of the Church. Look first at Psa. xvi. 5: "The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance and of my cup." You don't wonder that the Psalmist had to say presently, "My cup runneth over." Whatever the past has witnessed, there opens up the glorious inheritance of believers being kings and priests unto God. Do you remember that it was the priests and the tribes of Levi to whom God said: "I am their inheritance." You might take His titles, and see what He possesses, and you will find that there is a new blessing in every one of them. Then we turn to Psa. cxix. 111, and find this inheritance put in a slightly different form: "Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage for ever, for they are the joy and the rejoicing of my heart."

THE BELIEVER'S TITLE DEEDS.

Suppose a gentleman took you to his mansion or country residence and said, "Look, this is my inheritance"; and taking you into his library he points to some dry documents, which he tells you are his title deeds, entitling him to the mansion, fields, mines, &c. So it is with the Word of God, the title deeds to our inheritance, and thus a wonderful realm is opened out before us. What we need is an association of Biblical colonists to go out and explore the territories that are ours. It would be a grand thing if here and now we would join such an association, the members of which go out to colonize the unoccupied heritage of the Lord. The simplest way is to put "A.B.C." after your name in your Bible. Do you not see the great realms of God's Word to be occupied and studied every morning. And when you meet another colonist, talk with him and tell him what you have found. Never mind sharing what you have discovered. It is only samples; there is plenty more where it came from. What you find yourselves is better than what you get from others. Home-made bread is superior to that which you buy from the bakers.

I want you to see that "Keswick" is a living, lasting, and blessed thing. Become members of this colonizing society, wait at God's footstool, asking the strength you are needing fresh every morning, and I do not much care if you never find your way to Keswick again, for "Keswick" will be present with you wherever you may be.

CHILDREN AND HEIRS.

Another aspect of this wonderful heritage of God springs out of Rom. viii. 17: "If children, then heirs, heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together." Again in Psalm ii. we read: "Ask of Me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost part of the earth for thy possession." And when the Master was leaving His disciples He handed over His inheritance. In John xvii. 8, He says: "I have given unto them the words that Thou gavest me"; and that Word was given as our inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for our possession. Let us pray then that the eyes of all God's people may be opened to see this wonderful inheritance lying waste. Its hedges are broken down, and the boars out of the wood are devouring it, because God's people do not go up to possess it. God is the dwelling-place and inheritance of His people, and "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty." That is the inheritance of His people—the Lord Himself, their habitation. Look again at this wonderful Book. It is open for all to go and possess and occupy, yet we crowd together in one little portion of it.

RIVAL WORKERS.

I knew a little parish where a Christian worker was proclaiming the Gospel. He told me that beside one minister there were four bands of open-air preachers among five hundred inhabitants. I asked, "How do you manage to get a congregation?" "Oh," he replied, "we just go a-grabbing of them one from another!" It is a shame that the great world should be lying waste, yet in one little corner there should be so many workers in rivalry.

Let us take to heart what God has set before us—the Lord's habitation our home, the Lord's Word our heritage, and our inheritance from Him—the heathen races, every one a precious jewel. And if we are men and women of one thought—that the Lord is our inheritance—then by His grace we shall be able to enter into full possession of that inheritance.

*The Beauties of Holiness.

By Prebendary H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.

Coming to the last subject of my series, I call your attention to 1 Thess. iii. 12, 13: "The Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you; to the end He may stablish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all His saints." Some men talk as if it were a sin to be ambitious. Those who are rightly constituted, and have learned the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, claim to be the most ambitious men upon earth. I am perfectly certain that it is a high calling of God in Christ Jesus to learn to be holy because God is holy; and those who declare their life purpose in these terms may well be pronounced the most ambitious of all men. Much is said and thought of a man whose monarch designates him a peer of the realm; but it is a far greater thing to have a reputation that is beautiful in the eyes of all the world. And it is still far higher to be a child of God—one who will be "unblameable in holiness before God, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all His saints."

We need not find fault with men for being ambitious; our only cause of complaint is that they are not sufficiently ambitious, and do not look far enough into the future—they limit their ambitions by the horizons of this world, and death puts an end to their hopes. There is a hope and an ambition that is infinitely more noble, transcending in power all the expectations of men; and that we are called upon to exhibit before all the world, to show to the principalities and powers in the heavenly places the manifold wisdom of God, who has called us out of darkness into His marvellous light, that we should be to the praise of the glory of God.

THE BELIEVER'S AMBITION.

What is the ambition of the true believer? That he should give to God unspeakable and eternal glory, to Jesus Christ the satisfaction that angels cannot render or understand, and to the Holy Ghost a joy unspeakable and full of glory—giving to the Holy Ghost the joy of passing a completed creature to the Son, that the Son may present him to the Father, and that the Father may say, "It is well—it is well for ever." This is an ambition which I would stir in your souls and mine, as I enter upon the concluding branch of my subject. I have endeavoured to afford some idea of holiness and its pursuit, of God's call, supply, and enabling. Now, lastly, we ask, what can make holiness possible in my own soul? I answer that it is by the realization of the Second Advent of the Lord Jesus Christ, and what will then be brought before the world, to prove the reality of God's love, the magnificence of Christ's work, the splendour of the Holy Ghost's arrangements; and the wisdom of the man who, setting aside every earthly ambition, looks forward to being like his blessed Saviour when He shall see Him as He is. It is to the Coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all His saints, that I now direct your holy thinking.

THE LORD'S RETURN.

I cannot understand how any man can even desire to be holy who does not believe in the Second Coming of the Lord. I cannot think that any man will have sufficient stimulus unless he is day by day, yea, hour by hour, face to face with the thought, "My God is coming; He may come to-day; and if He comes—well, 'what will it be when the King comes?'" What will it be? It will be this—"We shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as He is pure" (1 John iii. 2, 3). In other words, "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory" (Col. iii. 4). And it will be glory that will make the angels marvel.

To this ambition I would stir my own soul and yours. What if the King should come and find the mass of his disciples on the wrong side of some of those holy texts of which we have spoken? Where, for instance, Paul says, "Ye are risen in Christ; therefore set your affections (not on things of the earth, but) on things above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. . . . For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God." If Christ should find us on the wrong side of some of these things, in which the child of God is bidden to realize that he is in the heavenly places with Christ Jesus, looking down upon the trifles of earth, and realizing that he is to hold and stand in the blessed citadel of God instead of grovelling here upon earth, what then? This is not living as we should live, while in expectation of the Coming of the King in His glory.

CHRIST AND HIS PEOPLE.

Some people seem to think that only the glorified saints will travel down with Jesus. In my conviction, if the King were to come this morning, the whole of this assembly of Christians would come down with Him. We have our privileges already in the heavenlies with Him, and it is not for us to be either grovelling here on earth or struggling upwards one rung of the ladder at the time. We should be in our place as members of Christ's Body, and when the trumpet sounds we shall come with Him. The Body will descend with the Lord from the high heavenlies to the air, and from the air to the earth, to rule in the millennium.

I must ask you to realize how such a thing may be possible for men and women who have, in some cases, only just entered the family of God, or have only lately realized anything of their privileges and appointments as Christians. For the comfort of those who are downcast through the world, the flesh, and the devil, St. Paul has a word. The first of his Epistles was written to the Church at Thessalonica—as to the foundation of which you may read in Acts xvii. For three Sabbath days the Apostle had reasoned with them out of the Scriptures, and there is no certainty that he stayed in the place any longer. There is no other record concerning this church, and if you reckon the days between the Sabbaths you have a month at the most for the Apostle's work and for a body of people to "turn from idols, to serve the living and true God, and wait for His Son from heaven." Is it any wonder that it was said of Paul and Silas that they had "turned the world upside down?" When you read what the result of their conversion was, you must be staggered at the retrogression or slow progress of many who in our day claim to be Christians.

THE THESSALONIAN CHURCH.

Take up the First Epistle to the Thessalonians, and there see what kind of men came of an Apostolic mission of one month's duration. You observe throughout that one idea was put before the people as the ambition and prospect which was to lie before their souls: "They turned from idols to serve the living God, and to wait for His Son." Again, the Apostle says, "What is our hope or joy or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at His coming"—at His parousia, the visible manifestation and presence of the Lord.

Read on, and note the Apostle's prayer that the hearts of the believers may be "stablished unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all His saints." And, further, that they might not be as men without hope, he pointed them to the coming of Christ: "For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent (or precede) them which are asleep"; and he asks them to comfort one another with the words in which he told them of how the Lord would come to take them to Himself. Once more—"The very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thess. i. 9, 10; ii. 19; iii. 13; iv. 15 seq.; v. 23).

Let us imagine men who a month ago were openly serving idols, as was the custom in the Roman Empire, suddenly brought in a few weeks to know God as their Creator, Jesus Christ as their Lord, and the Holy Ghost as their Sanctifier, and enabled to live with one ambition, one thought burning itself into their lives and actions: "The coming of the Lord draweth nigh. I must be ready to go out and meet Him; and when He comes I shall desire nothing but to gaze upon Him—to 'see Him as He is.'" When such is the goal to which a man sets his face, we may expect results in the life; with such a hope one is purified, "even as He is pure." I believe that this alone will lead to the practical holiness of which the Apostle speaks. If we were living on the right side, instead of on the wrong side, of such a text as, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world," we should not be found, as many of us are, cherishing, nourishing, and caring for, the trifles which, at best, are only for a day.

"I HAVE ONE TREASURE ON EARTH."

These trifles, moreover, cannot be taken with us. I had a rich uncle who, when he died, was wearing a ring. This had to be drawn from his finger—he could not carry that to heaven, to the world beyond. For myself, I have one treasure on earth—it is the Bible. This book I hold in my hand is forty-three years old, and I pray God to have it in heaven. I suppose I shall not be allowed to take it. It is clay—it is of earth. What if our souls are so trammelled and weighted that we cannot rise! That the balloon may ascend, sandbags have to be dropped. There are sandbags in many of our lives, and they must be cast overboard. You must lighten the ship, or you will not rise.

Many children of God, though professing faith in Christ, seem to have no ambition for God. The Bible knows but one great ambition—to set forth God: "In the beginning God." That is how the Book starts; and when the new creation is put forth at the end of the volume, we see the New Jerusalem "having the Glory of God." "The glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof." The Saviour died that sinful man might live, and be raised to the holiness of God. We must be ready for God if we would stand in the King's glory and see Him as He is. The Apostle says that we are to be "unblameable before God—our Father."

"JESUS ONLY."

There is a sentimental weakness exhibited to-day by some Christians, and by those who are not Christians; they talk of "Jesus" and "Jesus only." It is quite true that on the Mount of Transfiguration the disciples saw Jesus, and Jesus only, but that was upon earth; yet Moses and Elijah, as well as Jesus, raised their eyes to God the Father. We must not think only and exclusively of the gentle Jesus and tender Friend, of One who is all and alone Love and Pity. In the coming day, we shall face the Christ of God; He will bring the Godhead into manifestation, and before Him man will have to stand. I humbly believe that it would be well for the Church if a more severe tone was sometimes used, and a more solemn declaration was made by preachers in regard to coming judgment, and in reference to the future, when the Christ of God shall be revealed. "We shall all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, and receive the things done in the body, whether they be good, or whether they be evil."

We must not deceive ourselves with any such idea as that Jesus is too gentle to condemn, and too kind to visit sin. Now He loves the sinner, and would save him; then He will judge and give judgment. As to judgment, it must be according to righteousness, and not according to mercy. We shall stand before God in His holiness, majesty, glory, and perfection; and in that day nothing will prevail but the righteousness of Christ as given to us, the character of Christ as imparted to us, the power of Christ as infused into us, and the Spirit of Christ as carried out in us by God the Holy Ghost.

Though God is our Father, and "like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him"—the coming day will be one of His demanding holiness, and the only hope we have is that we shall be found

* Notes of Bible Reading in Eskin Street Tent on July 24.

"unblameable" in holiness in the appearing of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ in all his saints.

UNBLAMEABLE IN HOLINESS.

What shall it be to be unblameable in holiness, or hagiôsunê, the perfect attainment of that which God demands? It will be in and through the Lord Jesus Christ, and by the power of the Holy Ghost, I know; but let us remember man's part—he has a high, holy, and heavenly calling, and is commanded to walk worthy of his calling. Then he will be ready for the coming of the Lord, and not only by hope and ambition, but by realization, he will meet the King in His glory and holiness.

"What will it be when the King comes?" Thank God we shall reach perfection of spirit by being absorbed in the Spirit of God; perfection of soul because our whole soul will be committed to God; perfection of body because we shall receive that for which we wait—"The earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body" (Rom. viii. 19). Then with the principalities and powers be amazed when they see the sons of God made like unto the Son of God, because the Son of God became son of man that men might become sons of God.

What will it be when we realize this ambition? The answer is found in this word: "The Lord make you to abound in love one towards another and towards all men." The more we look at this Epistle and think of those men who had only lately been brought out of heathenism, the more I marvel at the power of the Gospel imparted by the Holy Ghost to men; and the more I am driven to this conclusion, that shame should come upon us if we fall short of the holiness that ought to be found in us.

FAITH, HOPE, LOVE.

In the beginning of the Epistle, Paul speaks of their "work of faith, labour of love, and patience of hope." These people were joined to the Lord by a holy covenant, and a study of the Epistle shows the marvels of their faith, the beauty and the determination of their love, and the splendour of their hope. In the third chapter alone their faith is spoken of five times; study the whole Epistle for its references to their hope and love, and see that the Thessalonian Christians were men of one ambition, an ambition, in fact, which so overcame them that Paul had to write the Second Epistle to steady them, and also to call upon them to "study to be quiet and do their own business."

(1) Are you prepared from this very hour to "turn from idols"; (2) "to serve the living and true God." If so—(3) "The Lord make you to increase and abound in love"—a love going beyond that which is beautiful and attractive, a love implanted by God, and going back to Him, and showing itself among the whole household of God.

I have sought to stir you up to realize God's magnificent gift to us in His Son Jesus Christ, that He may make us to be like Him; so that the angels and principalities and powers in heavenly places shall marvel to all eternity at the wisdom of God, in taking vile worms of the earth and conforming them to the image of His glorious Son. Do we hesitate? Read the Apostle's words: "This is the will of God, even your sanctification."

Islam Darkness.—Writing a few days ago from Tunis, Mr. Arthur V. Liley gives a striking instance of a Mohammedan's view of Christian discipleship. "Most of the converts," says Mr. Liley, "continue to give us great joy. One is most zealous in getting the Arabs into the depôt in order that he may read and explain the Word of God to them. Another has to be careful not to raise the anger of his bigoted father. The other evening the young fellow heard his father praying: 'O Lord, why has my son become an infidel? If he had become a drunkard it would not have mattered, or even got into bad society. If he had stolen and was imprisoned, I could set that right with money: but why, O Lord, should this disgrace come upon me by my son becoming a Christian?'" That so many converts have been gathered out of this benighted people calls for praise to God for the witness of his Spirit in those who are seeking to cause the darkness of Mohammedanism to disperse before the light of the Gospel.

The Holy Roman Empire.

By H. GRATTAN GUINNESS, D.D.

HERE in Aix-la-Chapelle, the home of the Emperor Charlemagne, the centre of the empire which he founded, and the city in which no less than thirty-seven kings and ten queens of that empire were crowned, one's thoughts naturally turn to the wonderful story of the revival, under a nominally Christian form, of the Imperial power of Rome, after it had been overthrown by the invasions of the Goths and Vandals.

In Aix-la-Chapelle one sees the very church built by the Emperor Charlemagne, after his own design, and the sculptured sarcophagus in which his mortal remains are still enclosed. When sitting in that church two days ago, we were impressed with its unlikeness to any other we had ever seen on the Continent of Europe, and its similarity to some of the churches in the East, especially to the church of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem. Its style is not that of the Grecian temple or the Roman basilica, nor again that of the Norman or Gothic cathedral. It is octagonal in form and marked by a series of arches supported on massive square pillars of masonry, rising arch above arch, and covered in by a gilded cupola.

How suitable a place is this old church of Charlemagne in which to meditate on the rise and decline of "the Holy Roman Empire," whose story fills the records of a thousand years. Here before our eyes were the mighty pillars and arches which the hand of Charlemagne had built; here was his rude conception of a Christian Church, partly borrowed from Eastern, and probably even Saracenic sources, for the mosque of Omar at Jerusalem is somewhat of the same type; while around the central structure were the numerous additions which had been made to the building in mediæval and modern times; and close by, just across a separating courtyard, stood the hall of the coronation of Charlemagne's successors, situated near the beautiful gardens which adorn the healing springs for which the place is famous.

Viewed politically, the empire of Charlemagne was an ambitious attempt to restore the Roman Empire in the West, while from a religious standpoint it was an effort to found a holy state, or to employ the name it took, "the Holy Roman Empire"—an empire nominally Christian in character, but anti-Christian in spirit, since it sought to transform the Kingdom of God into one of the proud and warring kingdoms of the world. The religion which Charlemagne adopted as that of his new-formed state was the corrupt and superstitious Christianity of Rome in the ninth century, and this he imposed with an iron hand on the nations which he conquered in the course of his warlike career. The relation between Pope and king in the new Empire was of the closest character. The Pope crowned Charlemagne at Rome, in the year 800, as monarch of Western Christendom, while Charlemagne bestowed upon the Pope extensive possessions.

Between the political and ecclesiastical powers thus united, a rivalry gradually arose. Which of the two was to wield supreme authority, the King or the Pope? The struggle was prolonged to the centre of the Middle Ages, and having witnessed the humiliation of the German Emperor, ended by the extinction of the ruling house of Hohenstaufen, and the absolute dominion of the Papacy. This culmination of Papal power coincided with the darkest hour of the Middle Ages. Thence followed the long decline of the Papacy, mainly due to its own inherent corruptions and tyrannies, through scenes of schism, captivity, religious wars, and political revolutions, to its present depressed position. The decline of "the Holy Roman Empire" of Charlemagne ran a parallel course, until it reached its extinction in the Napoleonic period which followed the French Revolution.

It is a memorable fact that the unhallowed union of Church and State, consummated in "the Holy Roman Empire," issued first in the long struggle of the Church for supremacy over the State, and secondly in that warfare of the State against the Church which has resulted in the spoliation of ecclesiastical wealth, and the complete overthrow of the temporal power of the Papacy which it had possessed for more than a thousand years. The infallible word of Prophecy, which had predicted the rise of the so-called Holy Roman Empire, under the figure of the healing of the wounded head of the Wild-Beast power, had also foretold that that event would be followed in due time by a warfare of State against Church, that "the horns shall hate the harlot, and make her waste and desolate, and burn her flesh with fire, for strong is the Lord God which judgeth her."

Romanism still clings to the city of Charlemagne. On Sunday last we saw a striking evidence of the fact, in a great procession of vestured priests carrying under a canopy in the open streets the consecrated elements, followed by a crowd of choristers, nuns, and gaily-dressed children, mostly girls, from the numerous Catholic schools. Altars were reared at various points in the principal streets, before which Mass was said, the assembled crowd kneeling down bare-headed in superstitious adoration.

Just now crêpe-bedecked flags are hanging in the streets of Aix-la-Chapelle, to commemorate the death of the Pope. Who shall succeed him? What events shall mark the closing hours of the Papacy? already to a large extent "consumed by the breath of the Lord's mouth," it is destined to perish by the brightness of His coming. How near that great event may be!

Aix-la-Chapelle.

Since Dr. Guinness wrote the above article the new Pope has been appointed, and has taken the title of Pius X. It remains to be seen whether this title indicates, as the Jesuits assert, the intention of the Pope to follow in the footsteps of Pius IX., the irreconcilable assertor of Papal sovereignty and infallibility.

The Zionist Congress.

THE sixth Zionist Congress opened at Basle on Sunday. Dr. Herzl, the President, in his opening address, stated that the British Government had offered to the Zionists the concession of a large extent of territory in East Africa as a Jewish settlement. Furthermore, the Jews are to be granted autonomous government, the Jewish officials, however, being under British control and sovereignty. The announcement was received with great enthusiasm, cheers being given for Great Britain.

There is some speculation as to whether the offer will be accepted. The Congress is likely to be much divided on the question. If the majority accept, it will be on the clear understanding that the projected settlement is not to extinguish the ideal of the Zionists of ultimately obtaining Palestine as the Jewish fatherland. Can it be that the seed of Shem shall willingly dwell in the tents of Ham? Is there to be a realisation, along unexpected lines, of the words spoken long ago—"the Lord shall bring thee into Egypt again with ships"? (Deut. xxviii, 68.)

The Y.M.C.A.

A MOVEMENT is on foot to secure a new building for the Association at Ashton-in-Makerfield. It will be centrally situated in the Wigan main road, opposite the site of the proposed Carnegie Free Library.

An Association has been opened at Bloemfontein with an initial membership of 200, and with excellent prospects. The Lieut.-Governor is patron of the branch. An Association has also been inaugurated at Uitenhage, Cape Colony.

At the recent Biennial Conference of the Danish Associations of Fredericia over 2,000 delegates assembled. There are now 297 Associations in the Danish Alliance with a gross membership of 10,729.

Mr. Raymond Stevens, writing in the World's Work, says of the Y.M.C.A.: "It is distinctly an association for mutual helpfulness, and not a charitable institution. It is democratic in its management and in its underlying idea that the real way to help men is to give them opportunities to help themselves. It represents to-day the strongest, largest manifestation of enlightened, practical, strenuous Christianity in the United States, and probably in the world."

The Northfield Conference.

THIS year's Christian Workers' Conference has been a notable success and will leave behind it very happy memories and an influence for good. It is twenty-three years since the first Conference for Christian workers was held here by Mr. Moody; it was attended by 300 persons, including some friends from Great Britain. Year by year it has grown in usefulness, and now it attracts Christians from all parts of the world. Mr. W. R. Moody presides with a wise control which keeps the meetings to the point and adds to their value. The New York Tribune again gave columns every day to reports of the proceedings, a tribute to the importance attached to them.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan (whom I met at Northfield, resting in his pleasant country home) began a series of lectures on "The Minor Prophets," which were heard with close attention. One of the newer voices at the Conference was that of Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, of St. Paul's, Portman Square. His first address was on "The Christian Pilgrimage," and his text was, "Can two walk together except they be agreed?" "The greatest word, the highest word in the Bible," said Mr. Griffith Thomas, "is fellowship. God's ideal for man's life is fellowship. The mountain peak of New Testament Christianity is to be found in the words, 'Truly our fellowship is with the Father.'"

Rev. Charles Stelzle, who aroused much attention in the Bible Institute Convention last June by his account of labours among working-men, spoke on "The Church Reaching Working-men." Mr. Stelzle has written a book on this topic, and from his own personal experiences in a machine shop in New York he is well qualified to discuss the subject. He quoted Carroll D. Wright as saying that strikes are never going to settle the labour question, but that it will be settled as the Gospel of Jesus Christ comes into the hearts of employer and employed.

"GOD'S RAVENS ARE NOT DEAD."

What has been described as one of the most thrilling missionary addresses of the Convention, was given by Rev. Willis R. Hotchkiss, recently returned from British East Africa. He said: "The people did not want me any more than the world wanted its first great missionary, Christ. They told me that they would kill me if I remained more than three days. I felt I was in the place God wanted me to be, so I sent word back to them, 'I am here to tell you about God. I expect to stay.' It would have fared very ill with me if it had not been for a Divine provision. An old woman who used to pass my hut going to and from her work in the fields managed secretly to drop a root of casava before my door; it is a root from which comes our tapioca. I roasted that root, and it enabled me to eke out my slender supply of provisions through the months. God's ravens are not dead yet. When we get to the end of ourselves, we find God there every time, if we are looking for Him."

A SILENT WITNESS.

The Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas in his second address told this incident. Soon after the death of a prominent business man in Liverpool, a letter was received by his brother from a total stranger, saying that he had taken his lunch for years in the same restaurant as the deceased merchant. Invariably he had seen him offer a silent blessing, and this little act had affected his whole life profoundly.

PROFESSOR JAMES ORR'S ADDRESSES.

Another of the newcomers to Northfield was Professor James Orr, of the Free Church College, Glasgow. He spoke most powerfully on Repentance, and said it was unnecessary to discuss which of the graces—repentance toward God and faith toward the Lord Jesus Christ—is prior, for they could be no more separated than the two poles of the magnet. Professor Orr's address on "The Drift from Scepticism to Faith" was a splendid pronouncement. In the course of it he mentioned that Professor Tait, one of the most eminent physical scientists we have ever had, came across an article saying that all men of science were sceptics. He wrote an article in reply, asking, "Who are the greatest men of science of our time?" He went over the list of them, and could not find a sceptic in the whole list.

VOLTAIRE'S FOOLISH BOAST.

"Give me twelve men," Voltaire said, "to found Christianity. I will show the world one who can overthrow it—Voltaire." "Well," said Professor Orr, "the Bible stands, and Voltaire's books—who reads them? You will find them piled up, eighty-four volumes of them, selling very cheap, and the dust thick upon them, and no one reads them through except for some historical or literary purpose."

OTHER ADDRESSES.

So great was the attendance that any series of meetings had to be organized. Dr. W. J. Erdmann, of Germanstown, therefore began a series for Bible study and answering questions. One of the latter was, "Should a Christian young woman marry a godless young man?" The answer came emphatically, "No!" Dr. L. G. Broughton spoke on "Unanswered Prayer." He said that one of the frequent causes of ineffectual prayer was some unconfessed sin. A young man came to him saying he had not enjoyed religious life for years, and he now understood it was because he had never confessed a theft of many years ago. "I am going to pay it back with interest," he said. Dr. Hanson, the London Presbyterian minister, was heard in the Auditorium with great satisfaction. His quiet, logical method was a delight to his audience. Dr. Pierson spoke on "The Threefold Basis of Certain Knowledge of Christianity" (2 Peter i, 16). He is always certain of very deep attention at Northfield, notwithstanding the fact that he is such a familiar friend.

All who had heard Rev. S. Chadwick two years ago were glad to welcome him again. His address on "Let us arise and go to Bethel" had many sentences which will linger in the memory. "Bethel is a place of visions, vows, ideals, ambitions, a place of angels. It is a poor life which sees no angels, has no ambitions, and registers no vows." Mr. Chadwick said, "You cannot get back to Bethel when you are engaged in a family quarrel."

FOREIGN MISSIONS AND WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY.

A very interesting and suggestive address was on "Prayer," illustrated by a complete apparatus of wireless telegraphy. Rev. C. H. Tyndall's address on this theme will long be remembered. The "Missions Day" is always full of inspiration. Dr. Pentecost spoke on "The Orient, the Anglo-Saxon, and Christianity," reviewing the work of foreign missions throughout the world. "Godless Americans and Europeans," said Dr. Pentecost, "in the Far East are the hindering and retarding forces. Their faithless lives speak so loudly that the Asiatic cannot hear what God the Lord has to say."

THE NORTHFIELD WORK.

Mr. W. R. Moody, after paying a fine tribute to the late Hon. W. E. Dodge, spoke of the results of the educational work at Mount Hermon and Northfield. He said his father hated a lazy man, and used to quote: "The devil tempts most men, but a lazy man tempts the devil." So the rule of the schools was work on the part of the student. It cost 200dols. a year to educate and board a student, and half of this sum had to be raised by the schools. A very good record was given of what had been accomplished during the past year in all sections.

Lydd Home in Camp.—A disastrous fire, cause unknown, has burned this little Home, along with the dwelling for workers, which was only just completed. Those who loved the Home in Camp have banded themselves together to raise funds for rebuilding, and their wish is to have a bungalow, with concrete walls and tiled roof. The insurance will nearly cover the cost of the property destroyed, but none who saw it burn can doubt it would be wiser to spend more money and have a safe building. Communications may be sent to Gen. Sir W. Stirling, treasurer, Papillon Soldiers' Home, Sandgate.

A Summer Campaign.

AN "Occasional Paper" of the Evangelization Society gives a telling account of what God is accomplishing through the Society's evangelists in their tent missions throughout the country. "Hundreds of immortal souls," we read, "are rejoicing to-day in the knowledge of pardon, of acceptance with God, through the precious blood of the Lord Jesus Christ, who have been brought to this knowledge in our tents since they began their work in May last. We say this not on our own testimony; the evangelists themselves are not our witnesses, and the following specimen letters are only an infinitesimal portion of the many in our possession":—

From Cockermouth, Cumberland:—Not only for myself, but in the name of every Church in Cockermouth, do I send hearty thanks to your Society for sending down Mr. Towers as an evangelist. His work has filled us with joy and thankfulness to God. The number and character of those who have been led to decision by his powerful ministry are the best evidence of how God has owned him. Mr. Towers has a masterly grasp of the Scriptures, and presents the Gospel with a force and freshness which has drawn and held crowds night by night. What has gratified us all is the absence of the least sensationalism; in fact, his methods have redeemed such mission work from the prejudice which had gathered round it. We are only sorry that the mission is closed, and thank the Society for all that God has done amongst us.

From Govan, N.B.:—It is with extreme pleasure that I send you my impressions of the special Tent Mission which has been conducted by your evangelist, Mr. Moodie, during the past four weeks. He has been in Govan on previous occasions, but I believe I am right in saying that never before has he conducted a mission in this place that has been so signally blessed of God. Several months ago a United Mission was held in the new Town Hall, by another evangelist, and many professed conversion; but it was generally felt at that time that only the fringe of the work had been touched, and there was much prayer for a continuance of the blessing. These prayers have been abundantly answered, and our hearts are full of thanksgiving to God for His unspeakable goodness. The Govan Cross Mission, under the auspices of which the meetings have been held, made very complete arrangements for the conduct of the work, and from the outset a splendid spirit of unity prevailed that gladdened the heart of the evangelist, whose opening addresses were immedfately fruitful of results—believers being quickened and many unsaved gathered in. Not an evening has passed since without numbers professing their faith in Christ. It would be difficult to estimate the good that has been accomplished, and the workers are strong in faith that God will yet send even a richer blessing.

From Nelson, Lancashire:—Your esteemed and highly respected evangelist, Mr. Shields, commenced a three weeks' mission with a workers' meeting, which was largely attended. The prayer meetings on Sunday mornings have been "times of refreshing," and the special children's services held on week-nights prior to the Gospel meetings in the tent most helpful.

I never remember realizing more the presence of God in our midst. Many testimonies have reached me from Christians who have been greatly helped and filled with a stronger desire to be used in the Master's service. On behalf of the workers, I must thank you for sending Mr. Shields and the tent to us. The evangelist came to the town a stranger, but he has left behind many grateful hearts who will follow him with their prayers. His kind and gentle spirit has won their confidence. Mr. Shields was all that could be desired, both in and out of the tent. He has preached the Gospel earnestly and faithfully, and all who have come within the sound of his voice have been held spellbound, while with no uncertain sound he made clear the hopeless condition of all who have not surrendered to the Lord Jesus Christ. Would to God that the Gospel was preached as faithfully and fearlessly from every pulpit as it has been in your tent during the past weeks.

We have had many manifestations of the Lord's presence and saving power in our midst. The good that has come to us through the mission will never be known fully. I trust we may have the privilege of another visit from Mr. Shields next year, when many friends would again welcome him in our midst.

With so many signs of Divine blessing upon the activities of the Society, it is felt that the committee will not plead in vain for their hands to be strengthened in a work so fruitful in the ingathering of many. The address of the hon. secretary, Mr. John Wood, is 21, Surrey Street, Strand, W.C.

Foreign Mission Week.

RULER-OF-SILVER'S CONVERSION.

AN interesting little book has just been published by the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society (6d.), entitled "Station Class Sketches," stories of women in Foochow, by Emilie Stevens.

From this book I want to tell you something about one of the women who attended these classes, which will perhaps help you to understand what it means for a Chinese woman to become a Christian. Station classes form a very important department of missionary work in China, for by means of them it is possible to instruct the Chinese women in the truths of Christianity, and then send them to their homes, where they, in their turn, shall teach others. The missionaries gather into classes as many women as possible, and give them food, lodging, and daily teaching for three months, in the hope that by this means they may become Christians.

Miss Stevens writes:—

Would it be of any use to gather these women in like this? Each one was bound-footed, and hobbled about in tiny shoes from two to three inches long, her feet crushed out of all resemblance to a human foot, aching and miserable, and perhaps even with the bones broken; yet she was almost ready to part with life itself rather than unbind, and so meet the persecution of her heathen friends and relations. Each one was an idolater, possessing her own particular idol, a perfect slave to superstitions too numerous to mention. Could it be that in three months light would enter these dark minds?

Then came the thought, "Nothing is too hard for the Lord," and, with a heart full of peace, and strong in the power the weakest may have for the asking, God's servant began the fight against Satan, and unfolded the "Old, old story" to her wondering pupils.

One day there came to the class a woman whose name was Ruler-of-Silver. She was the daughter-in-law of a mandarin. Her husband had died, and then her only child. The family were very cruel to this poor little widow because they said she must possess an "evil eye," which had brought all this misery on her, and she was given to understand that they hated her. Ruler-of-Silver, in her misery, decided never to leave her room, but there to drag out a miserable existence.

Just at this time a relative, a bright Christian woman, went to see her, and told her something that stirred new hope and life in her heart. She said, "Go to the Christian school, and they will teach you about the true God and His Son Jesus Christ, and you will find peace and joy." So she went and was taken in.

Ruler-of-Silver, though not pretty, had a gentle, clinging manner, and a certain pathetic interest attached to her. She was very aristocratic, and her feet being only two inches long, she hobbled about with the peculiar, swaying, tottering gait so much admired by the Chinese.

The weeks sped on until half the term was over. Of the twenty women who had joined the class all but two had remained. Even in that short time a change had come over them, and the missionary felt it was time to tell them it was wrong to bind their feet, though not urging them to unbind unless they desired to do so. At one of the Saturday night prayer meetings she spoke to them on Romans xii. 1, and pointed out that our bodies were to be presented unto God as "a living sacrifice."

She asked her pupils whether they thought God was pleased when He looked upon the feet He had made so perfect, to see them bound and crushed. They all said they felt sure He could not be, but then if they unbound their feet their heathen relatives and friends would persecute them. But, as they listened to what Jesus had suffered for them, many of them resolved for His dear sake to brave everything and to unbind their crushed, misshapen feet.

A few days after, the teacher, on taking her accustomed place, saw that something unusual had happened, and vainly she tried to discover what it was, until the matron whispered to her to look at their feet, and then to her joy she saw that nearly all had unbound them, and were wearing differently shaped shoes, Ruler-of-Silver amongst them. But as the unbinding always causes great pain, the women were all obliged to learn their lessons lying down for some days.

In course of time Ruler-of-Silver was deemed suitable for training in the Bible-women's school, but she had only been there one year when her mother-in-law insisted upon her leaving and going to live with her, which she did, and behaved in a most filial manner. The mother-in-law commanded her to help her to prepare idol-paper. Ruler-of-Silver refused for a long while, but, under great pressure and persecution, eventually gave way and helped in making it. Next, her tyrant insisted upon her binding up her feet again, and had tiny shoes made for her.

All alone in a heathen village, with no one to help her, Ruler-of-Silver cried constantly to God, and one night she had a very vivid dream. She thought she was taken up a narrow and steep road until she reached heaven. All along the way she cried that she must fall, but her guide held her hands, and so she surmounted all the difficulties and reached the top. She saw heaven in all its glory, and the Lord Jesus who held a paper with her name, "Ngung-Guang," written on it. He said to her, "Is not this your name?" She said "Yes," and then He told her how she had sinned in making the idol-paper, and that she must go back to earth and do battle with temptation, and He would fight for her.

This so impressed Ruler-of-Silver that she determined not to bind her feet, nor to make any more idol-paper. But her mother-in-law was very angry, and refused to give her any food, and so all her clothes were pawned by degrees to buy a little rice. Then a kind neighbour, pitying her sad condition, gave her most of her clothes to pawn. At length, when her missionary friend came down from Kuliang, after her holiday on the hills, Ruler-of-Silver went to her and told her how her mother-in-law had given her the choice to bind her feet and become a heathen, or to be cast out from her house for ever, and that she had chosen the last alternative. So, once more, Ruler-of-Silver is in the Bible-women's school, and is being trained as a worker.

This is the story of one heathen woman, but many similar ones could be written of those who have attended these brief station classes, and who have returned to their homes to witness for Christ. Only three months in which to learn of the love of Jesus! How long have you and I had? Friends, classes, home influence, all these are on our side to help us to be good. How much have we learnt with our many opportunities? Let us strive more earnestly to be faithful disciples of Jesus Christ, seeking to serve Him whether in the homeland or in the foreign field as He shall choose. K. H.

An Evening with our Colonial Missions.
(Isa. lx. 1-11, 17-22.)

IT would appear that the selecter of this topic, with its heading and Scriptural reference, wishes us to compare the British Empire and her colonies with the glories of the chosen city in its millennial beauty. With all my enthusiasm for my fatherland, I own to considerable diffidence in acquiescing in the entire appropriateness of that comparison.

As it stands, the prophet's vision is a very beautiful and striking one. The valleys of the world are supposed to be veiled in blackest darkness, when suddenly the light of dawn, which had been stealthily gilding the Eastern sky, is seen shining on the high mountain where the City of God, with its battlements and towers, was awaiting it. Lo, the glory of the Lord, like morning light, has arisen upon her; and at the spectacle the prophet summons her to arise and shine. "Arise from the dust," he seems to say, "where thou hast too long been seated in shame and humiliation. Rise to catch as much as possible of the dawning light, and to reflect it, with as much advantage as possible, on the waiting world. Let His glory be seen on thee!"

He proceeds to show what a wide sphere of influence is awaiting the awakened city. The abundance of the western lands comes in ships across the Great Sea; the peoples of the east come on camels and dromedaries. From Sheba on the south, from Kedar and Nebaioth, the nations of the Gentiles bring their tribute, and indeed, the whole of the adjacent lands recognise the suzerainty of the Holy City.

Would that the influence of Great Britain had always been healthy and elevating on her daughter-colonies! Every great nation which has thriven at home has sent forth her sons and daughters to found colonies to the ends of the earth. Tyre founded Carthage; Rome's colonies extended the world of her time to Spain and Britain; Spain colonized large tracts of the New World; the Dutch colonized South Africa; France has colonized Algeria; whilst England's colonies include Canada, Australia and New Zealand, Cape Colony, and the recently acquired territory of the Boers.

It is impossible to doubt that God has given our country these vast colonial possessions for a specific purpose, that we may through our sons and daughters carry to all the world that love of liberty, that passion for free institutions, and above all that loyalty to the Bible, by which the mother-land has been characterized.

Our statesmen are devising plans for welding more and more closely to the mother-country the lands which her children have populated, but probably the strongest bonds of all would be to send out good and Christian officials. We should pray, openly and earnestly, that those who represent us in foreign lands should be men of high Christian principle and purpose.

It is important also that Great Britain should exert her strong influence against furnishing the native races with strong drink, and on behalf of all that would educate and elevate them.

The Imperialism of which we hear so much may be a marvellous blessing to ourselves, our colonies, and the world, if it is Christianized. Alas! the efforts of certain statesmen seem to lie in the direction of self-aggrandisement, and of the vaunting of the splendour of an empire upon which the sun never sets, whereas the only true bond must be the ties of mutual help and emulation in the righteousness which exalteth a people.

If any read these words who are contemplating making one of the colonies their home, let them endeavour to maintain there the highest traditions of of our greatest Christian statesmen and citizens.

Death of Saul and Jonathan (1 Sam. xxxi. 1-13).
Golden Text—Prov. xiv. 12.

STRESS of circumstances seems to have weakened David's faith in God. Reading untrustworthiness between the sentences of Saul's fair speech, he turned for security and rest to Achish, King of Gath, who welcomed and housed him and his company for sixteen months in Ziklag; made him chief captain of his own bodyguard, and engaged him to join forces with the Philistines against Israel at Aphek; but he was rejected by the princes of the Philistines, probably on the review ground.

While David and his 600 were absent from the city, the Amalekites raided and burned Ziklag, but David sought the blessing of God and recovered all the spoil (xxx. 1, 3, 8, 23).

The Battle of Gilboa.

"The battlefield of Palestine." The plain of Jezreel, the place occupied by the Midianites when Gideon routed them with his 300. The attack was made by the Philistines. Israel fled, and the battle became a running fight up the slopes of Gilboa. The army was overcome and disaffected, the king's sons slain, and Saul wounded. The triumph of the Philistines was commemorated by them with festal honour to their idols, and public desecration of Israel's king and his two sons (vv. 9, 10).

The Gratitude of the Men of Jabesh-Gilead was shown for relief given to them by Saul in former times (1 Sam. xi. 1-13). Valour, heroism, and sympathy. They burnt the flesh of Saul and his sons, probably to prevent more indignity being done to either (1 Sam. xxxi. 12). What made the men of Jabesh-Gilead to differ from the Philistines?

Suicide is a crime, because life is God's gift, entrusted to us until He recalls it; an act of moral cowardice. Saul, Ahithophel, Judas (note the character of each). Saul committed moral suicide when he disobeyed God. Jonathan was a type of filial obedience under very difficult circumstances. But see and compare 1 Sam. xxiii. 18 with John vii. 53-viii. 1. Does this explain the non-fulfilment of Jonathan's expectation of being next to David in the kingdom? See 1 Sam. xxxi. 12.

Special Points.

1. David's trials drove him to God in prayer, and thus proved blessings in disguise (Ps. cxix. 67).

2. By going over to the Philistines, David got (1) contempt from the enemy—"make this fellow return"—was called a ringleader of runaway servants (xxix. 10). (2) Chastisement from the Lord, who "in judgment remembered mercy." David acknowledged the help and grace of God (xxx. 6, 23).

3. It is useless to try and live without Divine help. Saul would not accept God's guidance, and therefore could not fulfil the Divine purpose for him. Life without God is a failure, and death without Him is destruction.

4. The way to win the crown of life is to do God's will in life, by the power of His Spirit through Christ Jesus. Keep step with Jesus (Rev ii. 10).

5. Jesus said: "Without Me ye can do nothing." We dare not try to fight the enemies of our soul without His strong arm with us.

6. What was the secret of Saul's failure in life? Self-will; "he waited not for God's counsel." His death was an act of self-will.

7 He had disregarded the prophet, and had no one left to help him in his extremity.

8 Had given way to temper and wilfulness. Had killed the priests; therefore had no sacrifice, and when he cried to Heaven there was no answer (Prov. i. 22-28).

"Behold now is the accepted time."

DANGEROUS PATHS.

Visitors to Ramsgate will have noticed that the cliffs between the town and Broadstairs are continually falling away. Paths have been closed, and the public have been warned of the dangerous state of the locality. A long section of the parade has been railed in because of the dangerous cliff; and the whole district is an apt illustration of the verse in Proverbs, "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death" (Golden Text). God in His goodness rails off many paths in our lives, and though we are at times inclined to rebel at the restrictions, we learn later that His ways are right.

THE OUTCOME OF DESERTION.

When one sees a deserter from the King's army, handcuffed and ready to be marched back to the barracks, one feels that such a soldier has proved false to the trust imposed upon him. He has shown himself unworthy of the King's uniform, and in his failure to keep faith with his Sovereign and country such a man alienates the sympathy one might otherwise feel for him. Saul, who had started his kingship so well, soon displayed his disloyalty to his heavenly Sovereign, and in going his own way became a deserter from the ways of righteousness. Hence his ignominous end.

GOD FIGHTING FOR US.

Before the battle of Agincourt, King Henry rode from banner to banner cheering and exhorting his men. On hearing an officer express a wish that some of the good knights away in England might be transported to the field of battle, the king replied, "No, I would not have a single man more. If God gives us this victory, it will be plain that we owe it to His goodness; if He does not, the fewer we are the less will be the loss to our country." When his success was assured, Henry sent for the clergy and ordered a service of thanksgiving to be performed in the presence of the whole army. In allusion to their escape from the enemy the troops chanted the 114th Psalm, and at the verse, "Not unto us, O Lord—not unto us, but to Thy name give the glory," every man knelt on the ground. How different this from the attitude of Saul! He had not asked God's assistance, and having gone to battle in his own strength, in his own strength he failed.

WITH AND WITHOUT A GUIDE.

Present-day pilgrims to Canterbury are permitted to enter the Cathedral, and wander as they will through the beautiful nave. No guide is needed in the main part of the building, and the way is easy until one desires to see certain parts of interest within the Cathedral. To visit Trinity Chapel, Becket's shrine, the monument to Edward the Black Prince, and other notable places, a guide is needed to direct the way and open the gates. Without his assistance the visitor will never reach the most interesting points of the Cathedral. Just as surely we shall fail in the walk of life unless we are led by One who knows all the paths we would tread. In certain directions we may go unaided, while at other times, when doubts present themselves, no one but the Lord, the Guide of our life, can unbar the doors and lead us aright. While Saul refused God's leading, Jonathan committed his way to the Lord.

A Trip to the West.

MR. JOHN KIRK ON HIS AMERICAN TOUR.

IT has become almost a commonplace that the busiest of men are invariably the most accessible and ready to give attention to matters which many with fewer claims upon them ignore on the plea of "no time." With this in mind a few days ago I ventured to seek out Mr. John Kirk, secretary of the Ragged School Union, to learn something of his recent tour in the United States and Canada. After an absence of three months he has resumed the important duties which for five-and-thirty years have devolved upon him, with the buoyancy and fervour of youth. Innumerable matters were demanding attention on the occasion of my call, but Mr. Kirk heartily welcomed the opportunity of giving to readers of THE CHRISTIAN some particulars of his experiences in the West.

The passengers on the outward bound vessel included a party of sixty young people, sent out by Miss Macpherson to the home at Stratford, Ontario, in connection with her work. The demeanour of the children during the voyage was a tribute to the careful upbringing they had had, and their evening devotions when passage after passage of Scripture was repeated from memory, touched the hearts of many on board the liner.

Everywhere Mr. Kirk was accorded a hearty greeting. His tour extended right across to the Pacific and British Columbia. It afforded him unique opportunities of observing the boundless possibilities of those who settle in Canada. He spoke in enthusiastic terms of the advantages of emigration. "Nothing better can be done than taking the children from our own congested districts, and, after a season of training, put them into a country where everything is in their favour. Such a course not only relieves our labour market at home, but strengthens the empire also."

"Do you think the picture of prospects in Canada set before the mind of English youth is at all overdrawn, Mr. Kirk?"

"I do not think it is. But I am sure the majority of English people have little idea of the scope for enterprising industry which the Dominion affords. No sooner is the land under cultivation than towns rapidly spring up, offering employment for every class of labour. These communities must be catered for, and it seems to me that providing a man is content to work hard for a few years, and determined to adapt himself to his environment, failure is an impossibility."

"And the Canadians are really anxious to welcome Englishmen to their shores?"

"Yes; I was urged again and again to persuade young people—and the younger the better—to emigrate, and to invite others to go out and see what can be done in the vast territories lying waste. All possible is being done by the Government to encourage emigration."

"Of course you came in contact with some annexes of our philanthropic institutions?"

"Nothing in my travels gave me greater satisfaction that what I witnessed in this direction. Dr. Barnardo has four centres. I visited at his Toronto headquarters, and stayed at his institution for girls at Peterboro'. Then there is the Home at Winnipeg, and the Farm at Manitoba. Mr. Fegan has a large Distributing Home at Toronto, and Miss Macpherson's commodious premises at Stratford, Ont. In each case I took the trouble to investigate the organization and arrangements, and was more than delighted with what I learnt. The Homes are for the purpose of receiving the young emigrants, and from these centres they are 'planted' with approved Protestant families.

"And you consider that the best methods are adopted in the distribution of these young emigrants?"

"In every case. The business-like way in which the work is done impressed me more than once, and I saw that the greatest care is taken in selecting homes, to prevent abuse, and secure the highest good for the children. Nor do the workers consider that their responsibility ends when once the children are placed. From time to time visits are paid to the homes of the settlers who have adopted the young people, and the rights and interests of the boys and girls are made the subject of careful inquiry. More than this, they look upon these institutions as their real homes, and one of the happiest gatherings I attended during my visit was a reunion of girls at Dr. Barnardo's Home at Peterboro' on Victoria Day (a Canadian holiday). It was indeed a joy and satisfaction to be able to witness the far-reaching effects of the labours of philanthropists in the homeland, and to observe the thoroughly efficient way in which the branches in the Dominion are managed.

"The Ragged School Union itself, I believe, has no Homes in the West corresponding to those of Dr. Barnardo, Mr. Fegan, Miss Macpherson, and others?"

"No; we have none of our own, but we have sent a number of young men through the Self-Help Emigration Society, an organization that is doing valuable work. Many of these fellows, whose lives were being wasted in loafing in the district of Hoxton, are now earning good wages on farms, and I have letters from some who are able to save £1 per week after paying board and lodging. We have a number of Christian hard-working young men ready to go out, and we are hopeful that our friends will enable us to give them this chance of beginning life in the New World. The Ragged School Union led the way in this matter of emigration among the youth of poor people, and we sent ont our first party in 1847."

Conversation naturally turned on many other forms of Christian service. Mr. Kirk had been greatly impressed by the splendid activity of the Young Men's Christian Association both in the United States and Canada, where many more advantages seem to be offered to youth than is the case in this country. Reference was also made to the helpful fraternization among the various Christian communities; and while feeling that America has nothing to teach us in the matter of church organization or as regards worship, Mr. Kirk was of opinion that we might with advantage emulate the inter-denominational comity and co-operation which flourish on the other side of the Atlantic.

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

RECENT developments in connection with the Barbican Mission to the Jews illustrate what may be done when men of purpose and energy wait on God and enter the doors that open to them in the pursuit of Christian work. The letters issued from time to time by Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe, the president, have kept the work well before the Christian public; and, with the Divine blessing on their labours, the Committee have carried through undertakings of far-reaching importance as regards the Mission and its operations. In the course of three years the work has passed from a hired building into a Mission House fully paid for, and there has been added to the tale of institutions a Home in the country, in which converts are helped to face life in new conditions after being cast off by their friends, and inquirers are sheltered during such time as may be needful to ascertain their motives and intentions, and to instruct them in Christian truth.

The work at the Mission centre in Whitechapel Road is varied and continuous. The staff is fully occupied with the daily Bible Class, the Gospel meetings, and efforts for the help of the distressed poor. A number of Hebrew Christians associated with other organizations lend occasional aid, thus showing how good and pleasant it is for Jewish brethren to labour together in unity. While the Bible Class discussions are regarded as so important as to demand close attention, the Saturday gatherings are specially provided for. Jews are cordially invited to come and hear what the preacher has to say about God's message in Christ; and the attendance is not only very encouraging, but made up of men who, for the most part, have learned how to behave while listening to statements that controvert the deadening prejudices in which they have been brought up.

The Home for Converts, which is also the residence of the director of the Mission (Prediger C. T. Lipshytz), is at Gorringe Park House, Mitcham, Surrey. The building is admirably suited for the purpose, the inmates being kept fully occupied, on the land and otherwise, for their own good and with a view to assisting in the maintenance of the institution. According to the published report, forty-four Jews were benefited in this way last year. The housefather says:—"We make it clear from the first that nothing short of a faith that shall welcome the loss of all things for Christ will stand a Jew in stead in the time of trial. Those who are prepared to suffer shame and injury for the Name, find ready sympathy and all possible help in enabling them to witness a good confession." And some do confess; for in the same report Mr. Webb-Peploe says, with rejoicing, that he has baptized thirty-four converts of the Mission. It is interesting to note that one of these is in the C.M.S. Training College, preparing for the foreign field.

The Committee of the Mission has recently decided to retain a plot of land adjoining the Mission House, and to lay it out as an open-air preaching ground. A kind donor who lately freed the building from debt, has promised £500 towards this object, the site to be also used as a playground for the Jewish children of Whitechapel. About £3,000 will be required to pay for the land and fit it up for the purposes described. Beyond these considerations, it is felt that it would be deplorable for the land to get into hands that would put it to uses inimical to the welfare of the Mission, whose further development it is calculated to promote in a variety of ways. A recent issue of Immanuel's Witness, the organ of the Mission, speaks of a medical dispensary as an adjunct to the work that is much to be desired. Looking back upon the past few years, the Committee and the workers have many reasons to "thank God and take courage."

Cadets at Woolwich.—Captain Frank Young will be glad to receive the names of cadets now joining the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, for the first time, from friends who may wish them to receive personal invitations to the Cadets' Bible Class. Captain Young may be addressed at the Academy.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Revival in Govan.

THE remarkable awakening at Govan is still continuing. Interest in Mr. DUNN'S mission seems to be increasing, the tent being filled to overflowing and many standing outside at each service; in fact, they are believed to be the largest tent services ever held in Govan. Mr. Dunn has given most telling and faithful addresses on such subjects as "Justification by Faith," "The Precious Blood," "The Great White Throne," and "The Lord's Coming," which were listened to with close attention. Much lasting good will, we believe, be the outcome.

We hear of several men who have not been in a church for years, who have attended these services night after night. One woman has been holding prayer-meetings in her house during the day, that her unsaved friends might be brought to the knowledge of the Truth. The spirit of unity among all classes of Christians is happily being maintained, and is shown by the hearty way that all are working for one common end—the saving of the perishing. The revival is spreading, and on Sabbath evening the Town Hall was entirely filled by an audience of over 3,000.

Mr. Dunn preached a searching and powerful address on "The True Foundation." Much valuable help has been given by Mr. R. F. Beveridge and others in song-preaching, which has no doubt been used of God in impressing many. We believe that in Govan God is going to work yet more mightily, and that the prayers which are now ascending for a great revival within and without the church are about to be answered in a great manifestation of the Spirit's power. Mr. Dunn had to leave for a mission at Aberdeen on Friday; but the work at Govan is being continued by Mr. J. J. Sims, of Canada, who three years ago was so much used of God in the district.

W. DOUGLAS.

Another correspondent writes:—"The campaign begun by Mr. W. D. DUNN in the tent, Shaw Street, Govan, has been blessed by God in a very remarkable manner, hundreds professing conversion within the brief period of three weeks. The tent has been packed to overflowing every night, and on the second Sunday evening it was found necessary to engage the New Town Hall, where the evangelist addressed an audience of 2,000 souls. It was wonderful testimony to the power that is accompanying the present awakening to see men and women of all ages, and all sorts and conditions in life, responding eagerly to the invitation to accept Christ. In the tent, also, it was no uncommon occurrence for crowds of people to stand listening outside in drenching rain while the preacher delivered his message. Nothing like the present movement has been seen in Govan for many years. Mr. Dunn was earnestly invited to remain for a few weeks longer, or to return again in the autumn; but owing to his numerous engagements he finds it quite impossible to do so, although he may revisit the town in the spring."

Mr. W. Collard at Luton.

We have been glad to have Mr. Collard at North Street Mission for his first visit. It was a great joy to see the number of people who came on Sunday, August 18, to hear the glad message of the Gospel and wonderful to see the power of the Spirit of God manifested in these services. Both young and old were brought into touch with God. So deep was the interest in the mission that the hall was crowded long before the time for commencing the closing gathering, when Mr. Collard related the impressive story of his life.

H.M.

Tent Mission at Hurstmonceux.

The tent mission held in the village of Gardiner Street, by Messrs. HALFORD and FULLER, of the Edendale Gospel Car, has been greatly owned and blessed of God. At the concluding meeting on Thursday, August 13, many glad testimonies were given of blessing received. Specially marked was the work among the older lads and young men; some who came to scoff and disturb the meetings went away joyfully to confess Christ in their homes. Many, too, of the Lord's children thankfully acknowledge deep blessing received and the stepping out into fuller liberty and joy. All who have decided for Christ have also signed the Temperance pledge, and those who hitherto were smokers have put away the use of tobacco.

Tent Work in Lancashire.

For some seasons past the Evangelization Society has held tent meetings in many of the large manufacturing towns situated in the east part of Lancashire. During these missions many souls have been brought out of darkness into light, and are still serving God with gladness. In every instance where one mission has been held in a town, the Society has been warmly invited to repeat it. Mr. JAMES SHIELDS, one of the evangelists, has just completed his third tent mission in Preston, a town of 120,000 inhabitants. For a whole month the tent, holding 400, has been crowded every night, and almost without exception, at every meeting there have been anxious inquirers. One of these is the manager of a public-house, whose conversion places him in a position in which he needs much prayerful sympathy. One of the tents is now at Lytham, where Messrs. SHIELDS and COOK are preaching the Gospel among visitors from all parts of the country.

Skegness Sands Mission.

Attracted by the singing of Rev. G. Goodchild's band of workers at Skegness the other day, I found some 200 or 300 people at 11 a.m. listening to the Gospel story in song and word. Again, in the afternoon, Mr. A. T. A. MILLERSHIP (country secretary of the London City Mission) and two of the missionaries gathered a meeting of some 400 or 500; and at night it is estimated that not less than 1,000 persons stood or sat on the sands listening attentively to the Word of God simply and faithfully proclaimed.

One of the missionaries, accompanying himself on his little portable organ, sang at the conclusion, "Lord, bring some wanderer home to-night." The vast audience was asked if there were any present tired of wandering who wanted to come home, and four or five present expressed their desire to do so. A large number afterwards solemnly responded to the inquiry, "Will you trust Christ?"

I have attended many open-air meetings, but never remember one in which I was more conscious of the presence and power of the Divine Spirit, convincing, converting, and sanctifying those present.

The Needs of Villages.

The undenominational mission work in Norfolk villages, in which Miss KATHERINE BROWNE has been engaged for some years with such happy results, and in which she has been assisted from time to time by Miss Pearse (Sister Maud) and Miss Gertrude Dixon, was materially helped last week by Mr. George White, M.P. (President of the Baptist Union), who has addressed meetings at Yarmouth and Sheringham; also by Gipsy Smith, who preached at the Baptist Chapel, Cromer, to a crowded congregation, and who gave the story of his life at the Town Hall, Sheringham. Rev. C. Silvester Horne occupied the chair. Miss Browne has been the Lord's honoured instrument in the conversion of many souls. She is able to reach a class of people who are strangers to churches, and many are willing listeners to the gentle voice of a Christian woman. Miss Browne and her fellow-workers meet with obstacles from those who should welcome them, and whose churches they would help to fill, and are constantly confronted with the fact that the necessary funds are nearly or quite exhausted.

Mr. Bewley Weaver at Hollinwood.

It was the now sainted Richard Weaver who thirty years ago went to Hollinwood to find widespread darkness and indifference to the things of God, and gathered around him a band of faithful workers. This little community steadily developed, and commenced a vigorous evangelist work in the Hollinwood Mission Hall. It was only fitting that the founder's son should be interested in the work, and this year Mr. BEWLEY WEAVER was secured as the preacher for the anniversary services. Referring to this occasion, a writer in the Mission magazine, Glad Thoughts, says: "To the veterans it was a joy beyond words to welcome the son of their old leader. This was Mr. Bewley Weaver's first visit as a preacher to the Hall. An old worker said to me a week or two ago: 'We will welcome him for his father's sake.' After our evening service many said to me: 'He will get a welcome the next time he comes for his own sake.'

"The three services which Mr. Weaver conducted will long be remembered. In this age when so many are preaching a cold lifeless philosophy from the pulpit, when the Bible is being treated as a human document, not divinely inspired at all, when the Cross is being relegated to a back place, and often, alas, finding no place, it was refreshing to sit and listen to one who believed that the old Gospel is true and sufficient. Mr. Weaver believes in his message. It would not be true to say that he has gripped his message—the message of the Gospel has gripped him. It is a small wonder, then, that he holds his congregation spellbound."

Mr. THOMAS PAYNE, evangelist, has been conducting meetings at the Temperance Hall, East Croydon; also Assembly Hall, Highgate, N. Much blessing was realized both among saved and unsaved.

Mr. R. FOSTER OWEN has conducted a series of meetings on the beach at Ringsdown, North Devon, in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission. Much blessing, especially to young people, has resulted.

Requests for Prayer.

A prayer in which all will heartily unite is that our God may graciously stay the rain, and grant fine weather that the crops may be safely garnered. And that a spirit of humility, and of grace and supplication, and of thanksgiving for countless blessings received, may be given to our whole nation.

We believe God answers prayer.
We are sure God answers prayer.
We have proved God answers prayer.
Glory to His Name.

Fallen Asleep.

The death took place recently in Calcutta of Rev. KENNETH SOMERLAND MACDONALD, D.D., one of the most well-known missionaries of the Free and U.F. Church of Scotland, and had laboured for forty-one years in Bengal. He was in his seventy-second year.—The much-loved headmaster of Southlands College, Battersea, Mr. JAMES BAILEY, has passed to his rest at the age of seventy-six. Metropolitan Methodism and Sunday-school work generally suffer keenly by his death. In almost every part of the country he had lectures to teachers on the best way of managing classes and instructing the young.—The death has occurred of Mr. ROTHWELL NUTTALL, of Norwich, a prominent member of Princess Street Church, and president of the mission band.—Mr. WILLIAM ELMERSON, of Dublin; his godly, consistent life, as much as his preaching of Christ, spoke to many.

Obituary.

REV. ROBERT HALL.

A GENIAL Christian has just entered into rest in the person of Rev. Robert Hall, who had touched his seventy-sixth year. Trained at New College, London, for the ministry, he began as pastor of the Congregational Church at Basingstoke, but twenty-five years ago he had to retire from the ministry owing to nervous breakdown when pastor at Dawlish. Since then he has cheerfully waited upon the Lord, and as he had opportunity and was able for it, rendered service at Chapel Street Church, Southport (Rev. Adam Scott). He was a scholarly man, and had a fine aptness for teaching. Not a few at Southport will miss him, for he was a gracious personality. "The Word" was his first and last book every day, and whilst, with his well-informed mind he could enjoy conversation on general topics as well as most men, the things of the Kingdom were those he delighted most to talk about.

MR. S. WOOLCOTT, TEIGNMOUTH.

Recently there passed away at Coombe, Teignmouth, Mr. Samuel Woolcott. For some time previous to his departure, advancing years had made their influence felt, and amid much weakness, he patiently and quietly waited for the home-call. His simple faith and trust in the atoning work of Christ for his soul's salvation never faltered for one moment. Born at Exeter in the year 1819, he, as a young man removed to London, and was early in life brought to the Lord. He was for many years a deacon at Dr. Raleigh's Church, Islington. He was an active worker in Gospel mission work, and was superintendent of Ragged Schools at Islington and Hoxton. During the closing years of our brother's life he resided at Newton and Teignmouth. Whilst at Newton he identified himself with the Baptist church, and was an earnest worker and a liberal giver among them. At Teignmouth he united himself with Brethren meeting in the Name of the Lord, and enjoyed happy fellowship with them. He was a warm and liberal supporter of missionary work in foreign lands, and ready at all times to help in the extension of his Master's kingdom.

MR. WILLIAM WILKINSON, SOUTHPORT.

A few days ago, Southport lost by death one whose sympathies with and activities in Christian work were large and wide. Mr. William Wilkinson had for many years been closely associated with Wycliffe Hall, Shakespeare Street, but was always willing to render assistance in the efforts of other churches. At the funeral on Thursday the departed worker's brother (Rev. John Wilkinson) gave an address. It was impossible, he said, to estimate the blessing that children had in having Christian parents. His brother was well grounded in the Bible from early youth, and could recite whole chapters of the New Testament. His Biblical knowledge was the foundation of his Christian character, and it was of immense service to him in later life.

Mr. Wilkinson added he had never found him doubting the inspiration of the Bible in any part, and that was something to say in these days. He had larger sympathies with Christian work and a greater love for Christian people than any one denomination could hold. He had a heart for all Christians as Christians, and was loyal to conscience, to God, and to truth. Among other things he believed firmly in the restoration of the Jews to the land of their fathers, and showed a growing and intelligent interest in their welfare, temporal and spiritual.

Native Girls in South Africa.—Miss Anna M. Coote writes that after a time of waiting, during which there was much prayer on the subject, a site has now been granted on the native location at East London, for the erection of a training home and schools for native girls. The faith of the young people was very touching as they waited upon God for what seemed to be, humanly speaking, impossible, and their hearts were filled with thanksgiving.

The Churches.

Church of England.

The Bishop of Durham has appointed Rev. Walter Andrews (late of the C.M.S. Mission in Japan), to the vicarage of Middleton St. George, near Darlington.

The parishioners of St. Mark's, Marylebone Road, find that the Rev. James Adderley is as little in love with the simplicity of English Church worship as was his predecessor. They have objected among other things to a representation of the Madonna and Child, before which a light was kept burning, and to the use of a third "altar" which was at intervals wheeled into the church. Chancellor Tristram has decided in their favour, and Mr. Adderley intends to appeal.

From the recently published report of Rev. J. B. Barraclough's work at Lambeth, it is seen how varied and extensive are the operations at St. Thomas's. The Sunday engagements alone number twenty-two, and all the week through there are classes, meetings, services, &c., almost without number. The population is rapidly growing, and now numbers 11,000. Mr. Barraclough, who has nearly completed ten years at St. Thomas's, says: "Our means of grace are many and varied; and I think I see a growing interest in them, and at some of them a larger attendance than heretofore. May the Lord abundantly use and bless them! Visitors have often spoken in kindly terms of our congregational singing and responding. I am anxious that it should be both general and hearty. So long as I am your minister not a single step shall be taken that would tend to transform the House of God into a concert-room; but I am anxious that all the congregation should unitedly take an earnest and hearty part in both singing and responding, and thus make our worship both devout and inspiriting."

Congregational.

The deputation which the London Missionary Society is sending to visit the stations in China, consisting of Revs. George Cousins and William Bolton, M.A., hope to leave London on September 17, travelling by the Canadian-Pacific route to Japan, and thence to Shanghai. The deputation expect to be absent from England nine months, and a report of the visitation may be anticipated in June next.

Haslingden Church (Rev. J. W. Nairn) has received an unexpected legacy under the will of a lady who recently died, and who was not known to have any connection with the church. She has, however, bequeathed £50 to the school in recognition of the fact that all the education she received in her early days was at the old Congregational Sunday-school, which at that time taught reading and writing.

Tottenham Court Road Chapel is in the hands of the builders and decorators, and preparations for the opening as a mission centre of the London Congregational Union on September 20 are being pushed forward. The erection of the institute at the back of the chapel will be proceeded with as quickly as possible, and it is hoped that the building will be ready for occupation during next spring. Some little delay has been caused owing to the necessity of removing a number of bodies from the burial ground and vaults. As soon as the warrant of the Home Secretary can be obtained, these will be reverently removed and interred elsewhere.

Mr. Leonard Weaver is drawing large congregations at the Dawes Road Baptist Chapel, Fulham, despite the holiday season, and consequent absence of usual workers and worshippers. On Sunday last, at the close of the service, many raised their hands to solicit the prayers of the meeting.

Baptist.

During the past eighteen months Woodlands Road Church, Nelson, has doubled its membership. A new church, costing between £4,000 and £5,000, is in course of erection. The energetic labours of its pastor, Rev. Herbert Nicholls, are having very fruitful results.

The centenary of the Sansome Walk Sunday-school, Worcester, will be celebrated in October next. Present and former pastors, Revs. Henry Wyatt, James Lewitt, Forbes Jackson, M.A., and J. Bell Johnson, M.A., are to take part in the special services on the 4th and 5th.

The Sunday evening services in the Philharmonic Hall, Liverpool, conducted by Rev. John Thomas on account of Myrtle Street Church being closed for renovation, are attracting crowded audiences. The earnest and practical addresses of Mr. Thomas are making a deep impression.

In the August issue of The Remembrancer, the magazine of Cavendish Church, Ramsgate, Rev. T. Hancocks (pastor) acknowledges the gift of a new bicycle. The donor is not connected with the church. The pastor records his grateful thanks for "this means of good health and pure pleasure, and far more for the Christian love that prompted it."

On Sunday week the Crigglestone Church celebrated its anniversary, when two sermons were preached by the newly-settled pastor, Rev. C. B. Birch, A.T.S. At the annual meeting on Monday, the report read by the secretary (Mr. H. Wilson), mentioned that the meeting had a two-fold object, viz., to celebrate the anniversary, and also to bid a very hearty welcome to Rev. C. B. Birch, as the new pastor of the church. Addresses were given by Rev. C. Welton, of Leeds, Rev. J. Young, of Normanton, and the pastor.

Services of a special character have been arranged by the church at Rye Lane, Peckham (Rev. J. W. Ewing, pastor), while the chapel is being renovated. A tent is being erected at the back of some business premises in Rye Lane, and here daily services will be held from Sunday next till September 28. The first week will be an Interdenominational Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life, and the speakers include—Revs. W. Fuller Gooch, F. B. Meyer, F. S. Webster, and J. Mursell (Edinburgh), who is to address the gatherings for Christian Endeavourers on Saturday afternoon and evening, September 5. Following the Convention, mission services are to be conducted till September 28 by Rev. W. Y. Fullerton, and Rev. J. O. West, Rector of St. Philip's, Bristol. In order to reach those who habitually neglect the means of grace a system of house-to-house visitation is being organized.

Methodist.

Sunday and Monday, October 18 and 19, will be observed as Young People's Days throughout the Primitive Methodist Connexion, and November 29 as Temperance Sunday.

The Methodist New Connexion Ministers' Association of the two districts, Leeds and Halifax, has decided to invite the Bible Christian and Free Methodist ministers to their next meeting. This is another indication of the welcome movement towards Methodist reunion.

For the benefit of holiday visitors to Douglas, Isle of Man, a series of week-night lectures and sermons by leading men of different denominations has been organized at Victoria Street (Wesleyan) Church. Crowded audiences have been attracted, and the arrangement has proved successful in every way.

In order to liquidate the debt of £480 on Hamilton Road Primitive Methodist Church, West Norwood, S.E., a member of another Christian community has generously offered to give £240, provided the trustees will raise an equal amount. Before the end of the year it is expected that the church will be entirely free from debt.

The anniversary of the Manchester and Salford Mission will be held on Tuesday, November 17, the preacher being Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A. In the afternoon and evening public meetings will be held, at which the following will speak:—Revs. Marshall Hartley (President of the Conference), J. H. Jowett, F. L. Wiseman, B.A., Silvester Horne, M.A., S. Chadwick, Gipsy Smith, and others.

The plans for the Stepney New Central Hall and premises have been prepared. The Central Hall will have seating accommodation for over two thousand persons, and will be capable of accommodating many more when needful. School-rooms are to be provided, also a suite of twenty-one large rooms, two residences for ministers, two for evangelists, one for the caretaker, and a suite of forty rooms for the lady helpers' use. There will be six shops with stores in connection. The prospective outlay will not be less than £47,000.

The Methodist New Connexion Conference have decided that a series of Conventions shall be held in all the districts to consider the deepening of spiritual life, and the best methods of work for the present needs of the age. The annual committee has already made arrangements for some of the deputations. One of the first meetings will be held at Woodhouse Lane, Leeds, in September, when Rev. Dr. Townsend and Sir C. T. Skelton will be the deputation. Dr. Townsend will speak on "The Church's Mission to the Outsider," and Mr. D. Terry (Dewsbury) will open discussion on the subject.

Presbyterian.

On Wednesday of last week Sir George Bruce laid the foundation stone of the new building adjoining Westmoreland Road Church, Newcastle. The need of better accommodation for the various classes and associations of modern church life have been keenly felt for some years.

Rev. W. W. Duncan, for the past three years assistant to Rev. A. Connell at Regent Square Church, is leaving to assume the pastorate of the Worcester congregation. Mr. Duncan has rendered excellent service in connection with the King's Cross Mission, one of the church's centres of activity among the poorer classes.

It is expected that the new church at East Ham, London, which is to seat 650 and cost £4,000, will be opened towards the end of September. Three-fourths of the cost of this church has been defrayed by the Synod from its Church Building Fund. The remainder has been provided through the generosity of the congregation at St. John's, Kensington (Rev. C. Anderson Scott).

The fact that the Sustentation Fund of the English Presbyterian Church, though purely voluntary, has all the stability of a Government endowment, is at present attracting attention in various quarters, amongst others in Scotland, where the United Free Church is overhauling its ministerial support arrangements, as a result of the recent union. The equal dividend of £200 has been maintained in England without any difficulty since 1876, thanks to the admirable manner in which the fund is organised and administered.

Society of Friends.

The Oxford Summer Meeting is proving a distinct success. At the close of the first and opening of the second part, J. A. R. Marriott, secretary to the Delegacy, stated that between 1,200 and 1,300 tickets had been taken, and the second part of the proceedings promised to be far larger in the numbers attending than ever before, which means that year by year more persons are attending for the whole period of three weeks or a month. The Oxford students have suffered a disappointment in the absence of Paul Sabatier, who was to have lectured on "St. Francis of Assisi." He is detained at Assisi owing to the distress of the people among whom he lives, due to a bad season and the destruction of crops by storms.

Oregon Yearly Meeting was held recently at Newberg. Seven Friends were present from California Yearly Meeting, including Amos Kenworthy and Levi D. Barr and wife, two from Western, and one from Kansas. All these Friends had acceptable service in the Meeting, their voices being frequently heard. The Meeting heartily favoured the proposition of the Five Years Meeting for a representative gathering of the churches at Washington, D.C., in 1906, to consider combined action against the liquor traffic. It urges earnest effort and prayer, that something of a very positive character may result. On the subject of education the members of the alumni of Pacific College provided a good discussion on various aspects of the matter. The attendance at the College has been much larger than usual this year. Something like £250 was subscribed in the Meeting for the expenses of the College.

Among the many practical subjects which were considered at the Home Mission Conference, Leighton Park, was "Bringing out the Gifts of Others." Joshua Rowntree gave the lecture on this phase of Christian service. He said that as Christians we are invited to enter into a new relationship, the regenerated household of faith. "The household of faith does not just come together to listen to a man preach, but every one in the family is to take his right part. Every man and woman who accepts Christ as Redeemer has a part in the service of the Family. As our members are called out into service we shall increase. More meeting-houses in a town, if smaller and simpler, may be a means of calling out more of the gifts of our members. A number of smaller communities may often be the most healthy. Sometimes a few Friends in a small country town are leavening the thought of the whole population. Let us see if we cannot meet some of our difficulties by recognising other forms of ministry and of gifts besides the one of preaching. Do not let us be mere temple-treaders. It would be well for us to open out more facilities for every member to have active service. The life and prosperity of a meeting cometh not with observation."

Oxford Notes.

THE third, and practically the last week of the Oxford Summer Meeting has passed. The third week began with about 600 students, making a total of about 1,800 for the session. The lectures have been admirable, embracing every possible section of literature, science and art, while the sermons preached have been from many of our greatest divines.

The autumn gathering of Nonconformist ministers will be held September 7-11. The subjects include—The Minister's Relation to His Lord; The Causes of Failure in Spiritual Work; The Religious Needs of the Hour, Individual and Social; The Preacher and the Bible; The Preacher in Prayer; Reconsecration. Among those who have promised to take part are Rev. Principal Adeney, Dr. Monro Gibson, Dr. Townsend, Rev. James Travis (President National Free Church Council), Rev. George Jackson (Edinburgh), Dr. Campbell Morgan (Northfield), Principal Forsyth, Dr. Robertson Nicoll, J. H. Jowett, F. B. Meyer, John Thomas (Liverpool), and Dr. Goodrich.

Personalia.

Mr. HERBERT FRANCIS is arranging to give lectures on the Tabernacle (with model) next winter. He has some weeks vacant which he will be glad to fill up. Address to our care.

Mr. WM. W. HEADING, who for a considerable time has rendered acceptable service in connection with the Billingsgate Christian Mission, is leaving that sphere of labour in order to enter Dunoon College.

Pastor MOJOLA AGBEBI, of Lagos, West Africa, passed through London on his way to America last week. He hopes to stay for a time in the United States, and afterwards to return to his work by way of England. His work is founded on principles of self-support; but he is desirous of enlisting the prayerful interest and help of friends of the negro.

Rev. JAMES LYALL sails to-day (Thursday) in the steamer Derbyshire from Marseilles for Ceylon. The preliminary missions in the suburbs of Colombo, already referred to in our columns, have been arranged to begin on September 1; and, while Mr. Lyall has been detained in this country too late for him to take part in these, he hopes to reach the city in time to conduct the central mission.

Among Gipsies and Fruit Pickers.

MISS ROSE MAY MOORE writes: "I have been having good times among gipsies and fruit-pickers in different part of Herefordshire. Only by facing danger and difficulty has the work gone through, but I have been encouraged by well-attended meetings.

"As illustrating the rougher experiences of the work I may say that recently my pony bolted and smashed up my trap! The needful repairs have cleared me out of funds, so I shall be glad of help."

Miss Moore's address is Brook House, King's Pyon, Weobley, Herefordshire.

Ministering to the Blind Poor.

The Indigent Blind Visiting Society.

The object of this Society is to improve the condition of the blind resident in and near London, by providing them with (1) Readers of the Scriptures at their own homes; (2) Instruction in Reading, Writing, Knitting, and other branches of education; (3) Temporal Relief where needed.

By a recent Evangelistic Mission the Society reached nearly two thousand blind persons of both sexes. The Samaritan Fund has come to the help of many who would otherwise have been thrown upon the streets. Funds are urgently needed.

Full particulars from Annual Report, to be had from the Secretary, I.B.V.S., 8, Red Lion Square, W.C.; or the Superintendent (Mr. W. Mead), 95, Gurney Road, Stratford, E.

VICE-ADMIRAL H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G. the FOUR ARCHBISHOPS and the BISHOPS, &c.

INCREASED FUNDS are urgently NEEDED to meet the expenditure involved by the recent extensions of the operations of the Missions to Seamen to several ports abroad, where formerly the crews of British ships were destitute of religious ministrations.

In consequence of these valuable extensions in ports abroad it has become unhappily necessary to reduce the staff working afloat in home ports. Further funds are required to fill up the vacancies thus caused.

The Society maintains 198 Chaplains, Readers, Boatmen, &c., working amongst the shipping and fishing vessels in 75 seaports in every part of the world.

Sixty-eight Mission Steamers, Sailing Vessels and Boats, and 106 Seamen's Churches and Institutes, are in daily use, winter and summer.

God's Call through Nature. The long-continued wet season, with its disastrous result upon the harvest, has had the double effect of developing some men's profanity, and other men's prayers. It is quite evident that some of our newspaper writers are in the situation described by the prophet Hosea, "She did not know that I gave her corn." A number of people have grown so arrogant because of the material and scientific advances made in our time, that they seem to have arrived at the conclusion that the world belongs to them, and that their will should be supreme. The real helplessness of such people, and indeed of us all, is strikingly exemplified in our inability to alter, in the least degree, the course of nature, and the will of God exhibited through it. We cannot control the forces upon which we depend for daily bread. These are in the hands of God, and if men understood things they would know that God has been teaching us, through unseasonable weather, our dependence upon Him. God has often touched a country's harvest in order to touch the people's conscience. Happy are those men who are wise enough to heed His message.

The New Campaign. The first Sunday in September seems the recognized day for recommencing those forms of Christian service which have been suspended during the summer. Multitudes of workers who have been resting for a while now return to their spheres of labour. What will take place during the fall and winter? We wish we could see signs of a widespread revival of religion. In many places there are cheering tokens and the promise of a richer life. Our friends, Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander, commence their campaign at Liverpool on Sunday next, and great preparations have been made. We hope to present our readers with accounts of a mighty movement in that populous city. Other cities would do well to follow the example of Liverpool, and prepare the way of the Lord by prayer, independently of the visit of any special evangelist. Amidst the unrest and bitterness which prevail, the Church must not forget her chief duty. Not in any perfunctory spirit, but in the Spirit of Him whom we serve, and who was consumed with zeal for the glory of God, ought we to embark upon the campaign which a new autumn opens up to us.

Russia and Zionism. Perhaps one of the most painful facts in the history of the children of Israel is that it still remains impossible for a Jew to hold any land in the country which once was the home of the chosen people. The "indestructible race," as it has aptly been called, yet looks forward to a restoration around Jerusalem, and Zionism year by year deepens in earnestness and interest. The English offer of land in East Africa for a Jewish settlement, may furnish the occasion for a temporary diversion, but it will not have any other effect upon the movement. The offer of Russia not only to "tolerate" Zionism on condition that it returns to its former plan of action, that of a concentration in Palestine, but to give the movement moral and material support, is of more importance, and possibly may be relied upon, as the result would be to cause a diminution in the Jewish population of Russia. The student of prophecy, however, is assured that whatever attitude is taken by "the Powers," the end will come sooner or later in the fulfilment of the Divine promise, "I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity, and Jacob shall return and shall be at rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid" (Jer. xxx. 10).

The Parent as Priest. There is much in the new Wesleyan Pastoral Letter which applies to all Christian people, particularly the appeal to parents to understand and to employ the power of home education for their children. The letter says:—

> When all is said and done, home education is the most important. Fathers and mothers exert a subtle influence which no teacher, however sympathetic, can command. Value this power you have over your own children, and study how to use it well. . . . An atmosphere made genial by the light of Heaven will be created by a Power mightier than men.

If this power were realized, we should have advanced a long way towards solving the vexed question of religious teaching which has become a stone of stumbling to so many just now. If every parent realized that he is God's appointed "priest in his own house," we should hear less of the professional priest, whose shadow is so baneful. Schools are grand institutions, and indispensable; but the very best school cannot fulfil the function that God has naturally committed to the parent. Many Christian parents need an awakened conscience about this matter. Loyally to discharge parental duty towards the children, would mean the sacrifice of many little personal pleasures and visits to friends; but no sacrifice can be too great to ensure the salvation and the true education of the rising generation.

A Regrettable Fact. One of the evils of the recent Education Acts of the Government is to bring to the front the political aspects of our religious divisions. Free Churchmen, who, until now, have been anxious to keep the unrest and ferment of political strife out of their religious lives, find themselves forced to advocate a distinctive representation in Parliament. The next election will thus be largely influenced by religious considerations. This is a calamity from many points of view, but chiefly because it emphasizes religious distinctions in civil life. The responsibility lies with those who have stirred up strife by taking advantage of a chance majority for sectarian purposes.

The Modern Young Man. The picture of the modern young man, drawn by Mr. F. A. Atkins, in the current number of the Leisure Hour, is, we think, admirably, yet sadly, correct. It would be an excellent thing if the persons portrayed could be induced to behold themselves in this mirror, but we fear that such persons are not enamoured of literature like the Leisure Hour. Mr. Atkins complains, justly, that the average young fellow of to-day cares nothing about the great questions which need facing in the life of our country. He does not take his proper part in helping to send the right men to County Councils and to Parliament. He cares chiefly for pleasure, to which there is a growing devotion, and his strength is not devoted to his country's true interests. Chiefly, Mr. Atkins charges the average young man with the folly of dissipating his mental powers by reading of the "Bits" order—not necessarily impure, but silly, frothy, and superficial. This explains the growing distaste for more solid reading, and particularly it explains why the Rationalists find such a ready public to impose upon. One of the gravest problems for the Church to solve is that of winning the young men for Christ and for the country. It is still, as in the olden time, by means of the young men that God wills to win many of His victories.

Brewer Compensation. A leading authority on points connected with the drink traffic—Mr. W. C. Amery—has stated recently that it would be difficult to compute how many millions sterling have gone into the pockets of the "tied-house" brewers and distillers, through the lowness of taxation imposed upon the drink sold in the tied houses. When that system of brewer-publican was introduced, the tax upon beer stood at 4½d. per gallon; to-day it is only 2½d., and the retail prices are generally higher than they were under the former tax. The growing grip of the brewers is a notorious fact, one brewery in London having more money out to-day in binding loans to nominal public-house keepers than the value of the whole of the brewing interest in licences when the system was commenced. The injurious monopoly is now all but complete, and it is to its holders that the proposed compensation of the publican would really go. This condition of things has been allowed to develop despite the warnings of two Parliamentary Committees in regard to the brewer-publican scheme.

The Poor and the Pauper. A few weeks ago Mr. Walter Long, M.P., of the Poor Law Department, stated cheerfully that the task of providing in the workhouses for those who are physically capable of maintaining themselves by their labour "has dwindled into comparative insignificance." It is, therefore, surprising to find from the latest official return that there are no fewer than 38,000 able-bodied paupers in the unions, nearly 20,000 being males, in addition to 12,000 casuals who are provided for nightly. Of these paupers, of course, a number are more or less ill, but 15,310 were set down as in perfect health. Recently, at Stepney, a work task was given to such, and rather than perform it nearly one-half of them left the workhouse, and went out into the streets. A few days ago a coroner's jury in their verdict declared that a poor woman named Atherfield had died from "insufficient food." She and a daughter were dependent upon another daughter's earnings as a sempstress, varying from 9s. to an exceptional 18s. per week, and from these earnings 7s.

per week had to be paid for their room. From that rent a portion had to go as "poor rate" to help to support the 15,310 idle paupers. Yet our administrators refuse to see the crying need there is to lessen the woful waste of public money, and to put an end to the grievous inhumanity to the honest and deserving poor which characterizes the present system.

Ambassadors for Christ. A recent writer, in referring to the adulterated Gospel which unhappily is proclaimed from not a few modern pulpits, has reiterated the fact that in the Gospel's own plain doctrine there is but one Way, one Name, one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism. Those who multiply these, toning down the Divine warning, and widening the Divine conditions, would do well to ponder over Gal. i. 9. That text, it has been said, makes the ministry a serious business. Rev. Dr. Pierson has amplified this line of thought in dealing with 2 Cor. ii. 17: "For we are not as many, which corrupt (literally huckster) the Word of God," and he has pointed out that the remedy for this huckstering is to be found in the words that follow: "But as of sincerity, but as of God, in the sight of God speak we in Christ," i.e., as ambassadors.

So long as you are acting as an ambassador, and are speaking within the limits of your instructions, all the omnipotence of God is behind you.

And no man has a right to substitute his own ideas for those of Him whose messenger He professes to be.

A Good Example. Our contemporary, the Daily News, records the pleasant fact that at Douglas, the crowded resort in the Isle of Man, special effort has been made by the Wesleyan body to meet the spiritual needs of the thousands of visitors. A series of week-day sermons and lectures in the various places of worship was arranged to be delivered by eminent men of different denominations, and crowded audiences attended each, making so generous a response that no financial loss resulted. Such an effort to counteract the debasing temptations which are so numerous and powerful in the town in question deserves commendation. The example set, is one which might be followed with advantage in other large holiday resorts.

Sowing and Reaping. It is encouraging to learn from the twenty-eighth annual report of the Wesleyan Methodist Sunday School Union that nearly a million scholars are in attendance at the Wesleyan Sunday-schools in England, the net increase this year being 16,445, the total being larger than that given in any previous report. During the past five years there has been a net increase of 18,184. No fewer than 256,547 scholars are over 15 years of age. These should be the seed of the Church, if care be taken to prevent that leakage which generally is at the root of a falling-off in numbers. The fields are indeed white, and those who are labouring therein shall "joy before Thee according to the joy in harvest" (Isaiah ix. 3).

The Hindu and Christ. A recent capable writer, Rev. T. E. Slater, of the London Missionary Society, dealing with the changed attitude of Hindus towards Christianity, has pointed out that two generations or more of university youths have, since the days of Macaulay and Duff, been nurtured by the British Government on the literature, philosophy, and science of the West, and the strong meat of English political ideas, so that a powerful and rapidly increasing educated class has been created in India. Mr. Slater says that a new missionary agency has thus had to be supplied, as the special needs of this class and the duty of the Church in respect to them have come to be more clearly recognised, and he strongly urges the need for its development. The importance of reaching this class certainly cannot be overrated, for, as Mr. Slater states, "there are a million of English-speaking Indians waiting to be won to Christ."

The Loaves and the Fishes. A French writer, Monsieur Hardvin, puts forward a very powerful reason why the newly-elected Pope will be extremely careful not to provoke a quarrel with the French Government. The Matin has stated that if the separation of Church and State in France should come about, they early sum necessary for the maintenance of the parish priests alone would amount to not less than thirty-seven million francs. So, says M. Hardvin:—

It would be utterly impossible to screw this gigantic sum year after year from the Catholics of France. Moreover, if the Church of France should be forced to sustain her own clergy by pure voluntaryism, it must be by a serious diminution, if not entire cessation, of the large contributions of Peter's Pence which still find their way from France to the Vatican.

Of late years Rome, despite her claim to changelessness, has become very fond of the via media, and with her coffers impoverished by the late Pope's unfortunate money-lending and building speculations, there is ample reason for following it once more in the case of France.

Exposition of the Apocalypse.

ON p. 24 are brief notices of books on prophecy—a subject to which, in these days, "we do well to take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place." For the most part, the books are "Futurist" in their interpretation of the Apocalypse, some of them exclusively so. In our judgment this lessens their usefulness, and implies, on the part of the expositors, contracted views of the greatness of the wonderful succession of visions with which the New Testament closes. The crisis with which the "Futurist" deals implies a previous history; for a consummation is only reached by a chain of events and influences hastening to an end. The same principles are continually at work in the moral and spiritual spheres; history repeats itself, and will do so until the dawn of the day of glory, when "old things shall have passed away, and all things have become new."

We hold—That (with the exception of those portions which, on any system of interpretation, have manifestly not yet become history) the Revelation had (1) an initiatory fulfilment, in a Preterite sense, under Pagan Rome; That (2) it is being fulfilled, in a Presentist sense, under Papal Rome, including the essential papalism which leavens Protestantism, whose works, like those of Sardis (iii. 1-6), He that hath the seven Spirits of God and the seven stars hath not found complete before His God; and That (3) the antagonistic forces of good and evil, the oppression and the endurance, the persecution and the suffering, which have marked the Christian ages, will attain a brief but terrible intensity in the crisis with which these ages close, and which ushers in the appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ; and so far will realize a fulfilment in a Futurist sense.

We think that neither of the humanly-devised systems, Preterist, Presentist, and Futurist, can be accepted in all their details. Yet we have never read a book on the Apocalypse in which we did not feel that the declaration was fulfilled, "Blessed is he that readeth and those who hear the words of the prophecy, and keep the things which are written therein."

All Scripture has an inward fulfilment in the microcosm of the individual soul, as real as any outward fulfilment in the microcosm of the world. For "the world is in their heart" (Eccl. iii. 11). Wars and fightings come of the lusts which war in our members (Jas. iv. 1). And they who by meditation in the Word and their own experience are most sensible of this fulfilment are best qualified to understand and expound the inner meaning of Scripture in general, and of the Apocalypse, the Unveiling, in particular. For every scribe instructed unto the Kingdom of God, which is within him, is like a man that is a householder, who bringeth forth out of his treasury things new and old (Matt. xiii.; Luke xvii. 21).

The germ of all Scripture prophecy and history is hidden in Genesis, which is its root; the development is made manifest in the Revelation, which is its flower and fruit.

The Apocalypse is a book of great realities made known in a succession of symbolic visions which Jesus signified (sign-ified), by His angel unto His servant John (i. 1).

In order to read a document written in cipher, the equivalent of the characters must be discovered, and then it is easily read. What the message when read may mean is an after question; but evidently its interpretation must be decided by the ascertained significance of the cipher, not the cipher expounded by a presupposed interpretation. Had this rule been observed we should have been saved from many grotesque attempts at exposition.

We believe that the symbols are taken from previous Scripture, and that the key to many of them is found in the first chapter, where Jesus is seen by John in the Tabernacle, in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks. Moses was commanded to make all things (the Tabernacle and all its vessels) according to the pattern shown him in the Mount. The Tabernacle was the central object in the camp; the place of God's manifested presence. The seven candlesticks represent the seven churches—the sevenfold Church of God; the seven stars are the angels (bishops, pastors?) of the seven churches.

In accord with this keynote must, we think, the other symbols be interpreted. They are all parts of a consistent whole. One of the first necessities for the interpretation of this, as of any other symbolic writing, must be a dictionary or glossary of its symbols, showing of what they are the synonyms. Will our readers help us forming such a glossary? If those who have studied these subjects would send us their conception of the significance of the most obvious symbols, it would be a useful beginning and might lead to light on those more abstruse.

God's Place.—Allow God to take His place in your heart and life. Luther often said to people, when they came to him about difficulties, "Do let God be God." Let God be all in all, every day in your life, from morning to evening. No more say, "I and God;" let it be "God and I"—God first, and I second; God to lead, and I to follow; God to work all in me, and I to work out only what God works; God to rule, and I to obey. Even in that order there is a danger, for the flesh is so subtle, and one might begin to think, "It is God and I. Oh what a privilege that I have such a partner!" There might be secret self-exaltation in associating God with myself. There is a more precious word still—"God and not I; not God first, and I second; God is all, and I am nothing." Paul said, "I laboured more abundantly than they all, though I be nothing."—Andrew Murray.

Middle-Age.

By REV. E. GRIFFITH-JONES, B.A., Balham.

1.—Its Privileges.

It is become so trite a commonplace to speak of youth as a time of unique privilege—a period full of opportunities and enjoyments which cannot last, and which will never be renewed—that we are prone to take for granted that the best of life is necessarily crowded into its earliest years. It is well, therefore, to point out that there is another side to this question, and to unfold some of the compensations, and a few of the privileges, peculiar to what is somewhat disparagingly called "the plain of middle age."

One limitation of our subject we must make at the outset. There are no privileges for middle-aged people whose youth has been misspent, who have formed evil habits to which they are enslaved, who have missed their legitimate opportunities, and who, having sown the wind, are now reaping the whirlwind. Life to such is a closing vista, and the gathering years bring them inevitably to an anti-climax of disappointment, difficulty, and despair.

But of those who have grown in grace as the years have passed by, who have not succumbed to the seductions of vanity and vice, but have "kept their course," have we nothing better to say than that when the hot years of youth are past, the best of life is gone? Is the morning always and necessarily finer than the noonday? Is the promise of life better than its realization?

Courage, my reader! Granted that youth has its charm, its zest, its novelty, its passionate absorption in the pleasure and the experience of the moment; yet "the best of life" is not with the young man. Let us "count our blessings," we who are crossing, or have just crossed, the magic line of forty, and see where we are.

(1) We may certainly rejoice, with a tone of grateful joy, that temptations peculiar to youth are over.

How great and pressing, how imminent and constant these temptations are, none know better than those who have passed through and survived them. As we look back at the period when the choices of life, and therefore the issues of life, hung in the balance; when pleasure, siren-voiced, wooed our half-eager, half-reluctant spirits, and a featherweight, as it were, would have turned the balance, can the best of us help a sigh of relief at the thought of how narrow was our escape, and of how nearly we fell? "As for me, my feet were almost gone; my steps had well-nigh slipped." It is well that we can think of some forms of temptation that they are past for us; that we shall never go that way any more. Other dangers may await us; but not those ravaging and devouring monsters of vice that passed through the thicket on each side of the primrose way of youth. Is this not a privilege?

(2) Another benefit that belongs to middle life is the fact that so many of the uncertainties of youth are conquered.

One of the delights of younger days was the sense of unknown possibilities that life contained. Anything may happen to a young man; there is nothing too good to come true! We lose that rich and potent feeling as we grow older. But we gain infinitely in another direction. For there are possibilities of failure and disappointment and defeat before every young man. Not only may he fail of his pet ambition, but he may never get a chance of attaining it. Instead, he may be dogged by misfortune, or he may be condemned to utter obscurity all his days. But by the time he is forty the sense of uncertainty at least is gone. Probably long before this he has settled more or less into his groove, has found his place, has formed his circle of relationships, with, perhaps, a home of his own. Life's struggle may be harder than ever, but it is not so beset by a sense of instability as in the years when he knew not what a day might bring forth, or where his lot would be cast, or what that lot would be.

Many inward uncertainties are also largely settled. Character has taken something like a permanent bent. We begin to know where we stand, and to realize, by the grace of God, what are the things to avoid, and what are the ends really worth striving after. None of us, even the best and the noblest, are what we yet may be; but there is room for grateful acknowledgment that many a skirmish has been won, that the battle-smoke is clearing off the field, and that the final victory is assured. There is a sense of inward harmony of mind, of warfare between sense and spirit that is dying down, of settled principles, and clarifying beliefs, and insight into the grand inevitable laws that govern the moral and spiritual world, which come only with ripening years. The perpetual see-saw that goes on in the judgment, preferences, and guiding principles of youth, has quieted into equilibrium. Life has found its centre of gravity, and feels its foundations.

THE POSITIVE SIDE.

(3) But there are yet more positive privileges belonging to the middle years of life. If we miss the pleasures of zest and novelty, we begin to realise the less vivid but more enduring pleasures of habit. The daily round has its compensating feelings and satisfactions. The well-worn path is easy to travel. The orderly sequence of routine, and (if only we throw ourselves con amore into our occupation) the recurrent duties and even drudgeries of every day, come to us with a familiar appeal that is not without its happiness.

The joy of the honeymoon is as nothing compared with the solid satisfactions, the rich and manifold interests, of happy married life. Even those who are not ideally mated come to depend with an increasing sense of mutual regard on each other's companionship and help. And to those who are blessed with children, what untold wealth of interest and appeal opens out! The prattle of the baby, the dawning intelligence of the four-year-old, the unexpected unfoldings of the child of eight, the budding manhood and womanhood of the stripling and the girl—all these factors in family life, denied to the newly married, await us in the maturer years, and fill life with an intense and absorbing interest.

Unless the sense of hopeless lack of means poisons happiness, these crowded years are quick and potent with deep satisfactions; and to those who rise to the call of circumstance, even poverty has its subtle compensations; for does it not draw forth the noblest side of our nature, and exercise us in the glory of self-denial and loving self-sacrifice for those whom we love better than our own life? How true all this is, is seen in the fact that nearly all parents dread nothing more than the inevitable hour when the birdlings will begin to scatter, and the house-nest will lose them one by one.

(4) It is the privilege of middle-age to realize in a practical and experimental manner the value of truth and religion as no young man or woman can possibly do.

A young man's religion is pre-eminently a matter of faith. He has to take the truth on trust. But, as the years slip by, and he puts his religion to the test of life, a new sense of its reality, its stability, and its rewarding power, gradually grows upon him. Uncertainties that used to perplex him, gradually give way to a feeling that deep down beneath all uncertainty lies the solid rock. He believes now, not because of the word of others, but because he has himself seen and tasted and handled the Word of Life. Eternal verities will grow into his life, will grip his soul with a grasp of steel, and he will feel that he can stake his all upon them, because he knows and has proved that they are the deepest of all realities.

The hour when we begin to discover this is one of the most fateful in life, and its satisfaction, unlike many things that make for the joy of youth, will grow with each year, till it lies beneath the touch of frost, or the mildew of decay.

Therefore, let us part with our youth without too many regrets, and face the busy years of later life with a quiet but serene welcome, and say with Browning, with thankful hearts—

> Grow old along with me!
> The best is yet to be—
> The last, for which the first was made.

The Outcome of Missions.*

By HARLAN P. BEACH, M.A.

As one passes in imagination from land to land, and glances hastily at some present conditions and achievements of the missionary enterprise, he must be impressed with the extent of the work, and at the same time with its utter inadequacy to meet the colossal needs of a thousand millions of fellow mortals, children of the same Father, though they know Him not. Their rescue and upbuilding, in all that makes life worth living and death not a dying, should be a foremost concern of every one who has given allegiance to the great Captain, whose marching orders are as plain as they are imperative, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to the whole creation."

Even if the residual impression is a combination of dismay and hope, because of the enormity of the enterprise, and the manifest presence of God in the work, the urgency of the need of all nations should prompt to immediate response. The Chinese character for world and for generation is made up of three tens. While Occidentals speak of a generation as being thirty-three years in duration, this linguistic fossil of past millenniums asserts that in three brief decades the Chinese race comes to birth, lives its cheerless life, and crumbles into dust. Is not this a picture of the non-Christian world also? Christians may not dally when such momentous interests are at stake—when a thousand million souls, each of them valued at more than a world by our Lord, are hanging in the balance. The Church of God may sleep on for thirty years more; but when it awakes the thousand million will have passed beyond her power to bless them. If the non-Christian nations are not evangelized in our generation, then the Church can never perform her duty to the two-thirds of the human race to which she has been commanded to minister.

That believers the world around will be shown their duty is becoming more and more evident. Present accomplishment is a glorious pledge of larger achievements in the future. St. Sophia, in Constantinople, furnishes, perhaps, the best illustration of what the Christian may surely expect. "When Constantine, 1,500 years ago, was marking out lines of fortification for his new capital," writes Dr. Dwight, "some of his courtiers, surprised at the greatness of the space, asked, 'How far are you going to carry your lines?' 'Until He stops who goes before me,' was the answer of the Emperor. He deemed the city to belong to Jesus Christ, a token of the triumph of Jesus Christ over the heathen world." And to objectify this thought, Justinian, in reconstructing the Cathedral of St. Sophia, brought to its precincts the finest marbles and most majestic columns from the temples of Jupiter and Venus, of Diana and Baal and Astarte, of Isis and Osiris, from all the neighbouring lands. The traveller who visits this majestic fane, now a Mohammedan mosque, may see in the centre of the half-dome of the apse what to the careless eye is only a modern arabesque painted on a ground of gold. "A careful scrutiny," says Dr. Dwight, "will discover underneath the arabesque of the Moslems, and forming a richer and more brilliant portion of the shining groundwork, the outlines of a figure of heroic size, with flowing robes, with arms outstretched, and with a halo crowning the head. The figure is a mosaic worked into the substance of the wall as a leading feature in the ancient decoration of the church. The Mohammedan conquerors, instead of destroying the figure, merely hid it from the eyes of their own people by overlaying it with gold. That figure, which could not be hid by the gold-leaf which veils it, is the figure of Jesus Christ."

This prophecy in marble and mosaic and gold is to-day being fulfilled. Though heathen altars still remain, many redeemed shrines of the Holy Ghost in every clime are far more precious trophies of our Lord's world-wide campaign than despoiled temples of the old Roman world. The veiled Christ, whom the clearest and most spiritual intellects of heathen, Mohammedan and Pagan lands have seen as in a glass darkly, has revealed Himself in all His heroic dimensions and heavenly loveliness to elect souls in every nation. The day of His enthronement as Lord of All awaits the will of His blood-bought Church. That the day will eventually come, is as sure as His unfailing Word.

He shall have dominion also from sea to sea,
And from the river unto the ends of the earth.
They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before Him;
And His enemies shall lick the dust.

The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall bring presents;
The kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts.
Yea, all kings shall fall down before Him;
All nations shall serve Him.

Directory of the Devout Life.

The Rule of The Eye.

(Matt. v. 28.)

WE have already seen that if a man permits his heart to be filled with anger that perpetually boils over or explodes in hard and contemptuous expressions, he is excluded from the Kingdom of Heaven, and cast away as useless—the fire of Gehenna being a well-known expression for the rubbish-heap. We are now led a step further, and taught that impurity may have the same terrible effect, unless its earliest motions be sternly repressed. Indeed, Christ teaches that what is as natural as a right hand or eye, may, unless rigorously ruled, become the cause of the whole body being cast into Gehenna.

The outward and inward, the expression by the body and the passionate desire of the lower region of the soul (which we might call the animal soul), act and react on each other. The former influences the latter as the pouring of oil arouses a smothered flame. On the other hand, through the combination of desire and imagination, contriving together in the dark caverns of the soul, the body may become the instrument of deeds that make the pure stars blush.

The legislators of the old time laid it down that no member of the commonwealth should commit adultery, and enacted terrible penalties if their prohibition were trampled under foot (Deut. xxii. 24); but the Divine Man, who reads the heart of man, goes back behind the deed to its premonitory stages, legislates about the look that may inflame passion, and condemns the soul that does not instantly turn the eye from that which allures it, to the All-Holy, asking to be cleansed, not with tears only, but with blood, and pleading that the eye henceforth may be filmed with pity, melted into tenderness, and set on fire with the light of His eyes, which are "like a flame of fire."

The importance of the Regimen of the Eye is acknowledged in many places of Scripture. "When the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was a delight to the eyes." . . . "Lot saw the plain of Sodom." It was to David's straying glances that his great sin was due (2 Sam. xi. 2). The Psalmist asks that his eyes may be turned away from beholding vanity. Job made a covenant with his eyes, and the Wise Man tells us not to look upon the wine when it is red, and giveth its colour in the cup. Each passage enforces our Lord's words.

The first step in the religious life is to detect right and wrong, not in the act, but in the thought and intention. If sin is arrested there, it is arrested in its earliest stage. When the inward senses are exercised and trained to discern good and evil, and when the soul not only discerns, but resists, there is no fear of the life being mastered by the tempter. The snake is killed in the egg, the microbe is destroyed before it can breed, the enemy is defeated before he can become ensconced within the city walls.

THE INNER SENSES OF THE SOUL.

It is a remarkable fact to how small an extent many professing Christians practise this discernment between things that differ. They will be quite willing to admit that the soul has senses, duplicated with those of the body; that it has eyes with which it may see God; ears by which it may hear the inner voice; the sense of touch, and even of smell, by which to distinguish between the wholesome and the corrupt, between the air of Paradise and the breath of the pit. But they have never learned to exercise them, to note and act upon their earliest suggestion (Heb. v. 14). This is the cause of infinite failure, and keeps such Christians in the stage of babyhood. They never become full grown, nor partake of the solid food of the Word. (Cf. 1 Cor. iii. 1, 2.)

A curious illustration of this happened to me once. A Christian lady was very anxious that I should read a certain novel which had just come out and was attracting wide interest. She assured me that I should find much that I would approve of and enjoy. Acting on her advice, I took the book to beguile some leisure hours on the Atlantic, and sat down one afternoon on my deck chair to peruse it. When, however, I reached p. 50, I flung it over into the ocean, as I thought its contents would injure the fishes less than myself. If I had continued to read that story, I should have been playing with fire.

What made the difference between that Christian lady and myself? Was it not that my inner senses were more sensitive than hers, and able to discern the evil of the book, which she would have unwittingly permitted to poison and contaminate her entire nature? Some of us have quicker natural senses than others. The coastguardsman, accustomed to survey the ocean, will detect a tiny boat which would escape the notice of the average landsman; the experienced eye of the scout will build up a whole volume of useful information from the examination of a footstep, or even a handful of ash, which would be of no service to the ordinary traveller. Similar differences hold in the realm of the soul; and many receive poison into their systems almost before they are aware.

It is therefore of the utmost importance to exercise the soul in the discriminations of the inner sense, and to accustom it to act on its findings; and this was probably in the mind of our Lord when he spoke so earnestly about the rule of the eye, too accustomed to move carelessly over faces and forms, on the spectacle of human and natural life, as it passes in ceaseless panorama before us. It would not have been easy to speak to all the world about the senses of the soul. Men would not for the most part have understood Him. But if He could only teach them that there might be sin in a look, and that the unregulated look might lead to sin, it would be one step at least towards awakening the soul to watchfulness against the first yieldings to temptation. Let a man begin to guard his looks, he will end by keeping his heart beyond all else that he keeps, since out of it are the issues of life. And if he fail, as fail he will, let him commit the keeping of his soul in well-doing unto his faithful Creator (1 Pet. iv, 19).

We must learn, most of all, to conquer passionate desire. The appetites which God has implanted within us, for food, for sleep, for human love, and such like things, are not in themselves wrong, but they are very liable to get wrong in two directions. Either we may desire a right thing too passionately and for the mere pleasure it affords, rather than for the service it will enable us to do to others; or we may desire satisfaction from an object which, for good reasons, is placed outside the circumference of our life.

The presence of such an object may excite the passionate desire of our nature, and if it should, our Lord says we must not look on it. In this case, the old proverb, Out of sight, out of mind, is our only safeguard. What the eye does not see, the heart will be less likely to desire.

The Master goes further, and says, that if we are brought into almost constant contact with an object that tempts us, and if we cannot conquer its inevitable fascination upon our temperament, it would be better for us to pluck it out and cast it away, though it were precious as an eye and useful as a foot. Of course, the best policy would be to acquire such an elevation and strength of soul, that we should be superior to the temptation of any wrong or hurtful snare. When a child is well fed, it will not fight with dogs for the garbage of the streets. When we come from standing on the Transfiguration Mount, with the light of its recent glory on our faces, we shall find no attraction in the vanities of Vanity Fair. But failing that, and as the next best thing, it were wiser, like Joseph of old, to leave our garment and flee, refusing even to be in the same room with the temptress. At whatever cost, however, we must learn to master the desire of our senses, and not allow our feet to wander in the direction they solicit, unless it be one which God Himself has marked out for us. Even then we must tread in it with moderation, such as is imposed on the one side by the remembrance that every good and perfect gift is the Father's gift, and therefore to be used reverently; and on the other by the fear lest we should injure another, and forget that in every act we must consider the well-being of all around us, as paramount to our own enjoyment.

It must be, of course, always borne in mind that sin is not to be imputed to the body. It is not the eye that sins, but the heart that uses it for its sin. It is not the body that yields itself to the entrance of evil things, but the soul that turns the key, unlocks the door. The ultimate power is always vested in the spirit, which must always utter its I will or its I will not before an act can be done which has any moral quality in it, of which we must give an account, and which is either a step upward to heaven or downward to the pit.

If you sin, it is not your body that sins, but you through your body. If, therefore, you want to arrest acts of sin in the body, it is imperative that you should deal with the inward sense, and with the desires of the mind.

HOW DESIRE MAY BE PURIFIED.

How then can we purify the desires of the mind? (1) We must guard against the first tiny thought of evil. The microbes float in the air, and if at any time we are off our guard and allow them to alight, they will infallibly find a nest in which to breed. The Holy Spirit, if we entrust Him with the sacred task, will make us very sensitive, and will remind us to shelter under the Blood. You may shrink from my using that mystic word, but believe me, there is no other infallible talisman of victory. "They overcame by the Blood of the Lamb."

(2) We must avoid the occasions of temptation. It is useless to ask God not to lead us into temptation if we thrust ourselves thither. I had once to advise a young artist to give up painting figures because it was impossible for him to go through the training, which is held to be necessary, without being overmastered by temptations incident to that line of study. It was the right foot, but it always made him stumble, and it had to go. At another time I had no alternative but to advise a young girl to break away from an attachment dear to her as life, because she could not continue it without serious spiritual danger. It was the right eye, but it had to be plucked out. But are these losses without compensation? Nay, verily. It is impossible to give up such things for Christ without receiving a hundred fold in this present life. When Milton's eyes are closed on the scenes of earth, they are opened on the Throne of God and the Lamb. We are completed in Him.

(3) We must appropriate the opposite grace. It is good, but it is not enough to turn the eyes away from beholding vanity, nor to shut them as the ascetic might do from all that is right and natural and innocent. There is something better, supplied by the universal principle, which we are using throughout these chapters —Love.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, September 6. Psalm cxi.
The God of Man.

THIS Psalm begins with a vow to praise Jehovah, and praise is its keynote, which is specially responded to by the inner circle of godly souls included in the phrase, "the council of the upright." We must belong to that inner circle if we would sympathize with the songs of praise which are ever rising to God from devout hearts; and we must delight in and seek out God's works. Too many look with thoughtless hearts on the great panorama which is being spread out before them, and do not take delight in tracing God's handiwork in it all. Seek out and take pleasure in God's great works.

4-6. The Psalmist dilates on the graciousness and compassion of God. He feels that God's dealings with His people are the standing memorial of these tender qualities of His heart. That He provided food for them when they were so rebellious, and that He gave them the heritage of the nations, were conspicuous proofs of His love. But what shall we say, who are fed with heavenly bread, and have all things in Christ, our Lord!

7-10. God's works include His law with its precepts, His redemption, and His covenant—all of which remain unto this day, in richer and fuller manifestation than was present to the Psalmist's mind.

Note the recurring phrase "for ever" (3, 5, 8, 9, 10), and remember that if God's attributes stand for ever, so shall His Praise.

MONDAY, September 7. Psalm cxii.
The Man of God.

Here is the portrait of a godly man, and especially in the blessed results which accrue from the possession of godly traits.

In v. 1 we have the essential basis of a godly character. It is marked by reverence, "the fear of the Lord," and by conformity to His will—"that delighteth greatly in His commandments." Ask God to instil these into your heart by the Holy Spirit that you may perfectly love Him and worthily magnify His Holy Name.

Compare v. 3 with cxi. 3. In the case of God and of His child the same words are employed: "His righteousness endureth for ever." God's is the original fountain, and as we are one with Him for ever, so His life must for ever flow into ours, conforming us to His likeness. Therefore with us, in the deepest sense, will be "wealth and riches," corresponding for evermore with His "honour and majesty."

Compare v. 4 with cxi. 4. As God is "gracious and full of compassion," so is the man who is moulded according to His image. He is merciful even as his Father in heaven is merciful; and therefore, because his heart is ever flowing over with love, a light will ever arise in his own dark hours.

Compare v. 5 with cxi. 5. As God's life is one of constant benefactions to the children of men, though they often approve themselves unworthy of it, so the good man deals graciously and lends. He also gives meat and is mindful of his covenant.

Compare v. 8 with cxi. 8. If we build on the Rock of Ages, we shall partake of something of its steadfastness.

Compare v. 9 with cxi. 9. As God sends redemption to His people, so they, in like manner, disperse and give to the needy. Freely we receive, and we must freely give. What a noble picture of a man of God! Let us fill in the details in our poor lives, that the wicked may be compelled to acknowledge that there is an apparent beauty and a solid result in godliness.

TUESDAY, September 8. Psalm cxiii.
The Beginning of the Hallel.

The Hallel, which was sung at the three great feasts of Passover, Pentecost, and Tabernacles, begins with this Psalm, and continues to the end of cxviii. "In the domestic celebration of the Passover night," Delitzsch says, "the Hallel is divided into two parts; the one half, Psalms cxiii.-cxiv., being sung before the repast, before the emptying of the second festal cup; and the other half, Psalms cxv.-cxviii., after the repast, after the filling of the fourth cup, referred to in the words "having sung a hymn" of Matt. xxvi. 30, Mark xiv. 26.

1-3. A threefold call to praise. The Name of God, i.e., His character, must be celebrated from this time forth till time shall cease to be, and from the chambers of the east to the limitless ocean waters of the west. "That name to us is love." In Jehovah we discover the precious name of Jesus. Let all party names perish, let His live for ever. Let the names of the apostles of the Lamb fade out of the morning sky, but the sun of His radiance shall never stay its shining.

4-6. God's infinite exaltation is so vast and great that He has to stoop to behold even the heavens. We are reminded by these words that our Lord Jesus has ascended on high, far above all heavens, that He might fill all things. Who is like unto the Lord our God!

7-9. These words are partly quoted from Hannah's song (1 Sam. ii. 8). But Israel is the barren woman to whom God has given children. We may be conscious of failure and disconsolate; yet if we abide in God, and allow Him to abide in His unhindered fulness in us, He will cause us to be fruitful and multiply, and become the parents of a great nation.

WEDNESDAY, September 9. Psalm cxiv.
A Hymn of Restoration.

Restored recently from Babylon, the chosen people look back on the Exodus, and realize that God has repeated His olden wonders in the experience of recent days.

1, 2. Israel was born on the night of the Exodus, and with the specific object of becoming God's chosen home. The Egyptians are people of a "strange" language, but the language of Israel is musical with the praises of God.

3, 4. The marvels of the Exodus are described with poetic majesty and beauty. The miracles at the Red Sea and the Jordan, and the quaking of Sinai, are specially referred to, as though these natural objects had seen a sight that filled them with panic.

5, 6. The historian turns to question them as to the reason of their apparent panic. What did you see, mountains and streams? Mark the present tense, as though the miracle was being constantly repeated—aileth; fleest; turnest back.

7, 8. The vision that paralysed the stedfast mountains and the hoary sea was the presence of God. Before Him the solid rock becomes as fluid water, and the fluid water stands up like solid rock. Surely before such an One all the world should be in awe! But how much more before the mystery of the Cross! What ailed thee, O sun, that thou didst hide thy face? What sawest thou, O earth, that thou didst tremble through all thine ancient caves, and didst let the dead arise? Was it not in the presence of Thy Mighty Maker, dying as man's Redeemer?

THURSDAY, September 10. Psalm cxv.
An Exhortation to Trust.

This Psalm was evidently intended to be sung by various voices. Verses 1-11 are intended for the whole congregation, and were probably chanted in unison while the sacrifice was being offered; 9-11, a solo voice gives the first line of these verses, the whole audience chanting the refrain; 12-15, the priest utters the benediction; 16-18, the whole congregation, having received it, breaks into grateful Hallelujahs.

The Psalm probably dates from the early days of the return from Babylon, when the small groups of settlers were surrounded by the jeers and scoffs of their enemies, and replied with this scathing contrast between their idols and the majesty of Jehovah. It reminds us of Isaiah's description of an idol-factory (Isa. xliv. 9-20). They had the semblance of power, but could not use the organs through which it should reveal itself. Jehovah had no outward form, but did whatsoever He willed.

Let us heed the threefold invitation to faith in verses 9-11, and take God as our help in the battle, and our shield against the foe. He will bless those that fear Him. The small will be filled, but not overwhelmed, and the great will be filled without any strain on the resources of that Infinite Reservoir. All the universe is God's. The heavens are His home; the earth is granted to men by His deed of gift. Let us adore Him, and do so all the more because some day our tongues will be silenced, so far as affects this world, by death, though they will be for ever vocal in the praises of eternity.

FRIDAY, September 11. Psalm cxvi.
A Psalm of Love.

Throughout this Psalm we encounter the personal pronoun. In only two verses (5, 19), it does not occur. There is no fear of egotism when the heart of the singer is overflowing with Divine love.

1-4. The Psalmist's Peril. He compares himself to some wild creature which has been ensnared by the hunter, and is being bound by fatal cords from which it will never be free. How many of God's saints have felt the cutting deep of those cords, and the apparent hopelessness of their position! It has been with them as with Joseph when let down into his living grave. But there is no pit so deep that a cry from it cannot reach the ear of God.

5-9. The Psalmist's Deliverance. As the result of it the soul is bidden return to its quiet nest of peace, and the feet are put down with confidence to walk in the lands (see R.V. marg.) of living men and women rather than through the paths of the grave. These two are one. The soul may rest in the heart of Jesus as its nest, and the feet walk in light and life, because God has become our light and joy and salvation. Notice the prayer of verse 4 and the reply of verse 8; and that God does more than deliver—He wipes the tears from our faces and supports our trembling steps as a mother does those of her child.

10-14. The Psalmist's Gratitude. There was a time when we too were greatly afflicted, and as we saw men fail us we bitterly reproached them, but beneath all there was the faith that believed. And at last, when that faith has been vindicated, and the brimming cup of deliverance is in our hand, what can we do better than pour it out as a libation before the Lord?

15-19. The Psalmist's Vow. The life of God's saints is precious (Psa. lxxii. 14), and therefore He will not lightly consent to their death. His deliverances make us His glad slaves. The loosed bonds (3 and 16) bind us as living sacrifices to His altars.

SATURDAY, September 12. Psalm cxvii.
The Piccolo Psalm.

Once, when in a great orchestra every instrument was pouring out divine melody, the conductor's baton suddenly stopped everything, with the inquiry, "Where is the piccolo?" and it was discovered that the instrumentalist of the piccolo had stopped playing, because he thought that he would not be missed. But the delicate ear of the conductor, amid the torrent of sound, detected the omission. So this is the shortest Psalm, but it has a very notable place in the Psalter, in the immediate proximity of cxix. God needs all voices, little and great, the child's and the man's.

The Apostle Paul quotes it to prove that God's salvation was originally intended, not for Jews alone, but for all the race. The advantages granted to the chosen people, were multiplied to them, that they might shed them, as from a burning focus, over the world. The lighthouse tower shines not only for the delectation of the keeper and to give him light to read by!

Notice the combination of Mercy and Truth, as in so many other places. The mercy is great, i.e., it is mighty over us, abounding towards us, and conquering our rebellion; and what God has promised to be, He will be for ever. Eternity were a dreary outlook if the rainbow of the Covenant did not shine around the Eternal Throne!

Other Lands.

The Zionist Congress.

By Rev. DAVID BARON.

FOR the sixth time the Zionist Congress has met at Basle, and is attended by larger numbers than ever before. There are 130 more delegates than at the fifth Congress, while the galleries are crowded with visitors, and hundreds more were unable to obtain admission on the opening day. And these elected representatives of many hundreds of thousands of the Dispersion are literally from all parts of the earth, including exceptionally large contingents from America, Canada, Australia, South Africa, and sturdy specimens in Persian costumes, representing the 50,000 Jewish mountaineers in the Caucasus.

Although a decidedly "Jewish" movement, there is much in Zionism and in the Zionist Congress which is of great significance to Christians, and more especially to those who are watchmen on the walls of Zion, and give heed to the signs of the times. First, it is a striking manifestation of the awakening of the Jewish nation from a long sleep of many centuries. Here is a people which, for 2,000 years, has been supposed to be dead, and whom the nations have done their utmost to bury out of sight—who have even said of themselves, "Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost; we are clean cut off" (Ezek. xxxvii. 11, R.V.)—beginning to live and move, and to have a corporate being. What is this, as I said in my report of the third Congress, but the forming again of a living national body out of the "very dry" dead bones which for centuries were strewn over "the open valley" by Ezekiel's vision, preparatory to the time when the blessed Breath will come from the four winds, and breathe upon these slain that, spiritually as well as nationally, they may LIVE?

THE MEANING OF THE MOVEMENT.

Zionism is also a striking proof of the affection and yearning which still exist in the hearts of the mass of the Jews in all parts of the world for the ancient land of their fathers. When Dr. HERZL first wrote his "Judenstaat," which gave birth to this national movement, he expressed himself as indifferent as to where that Jewish state was established, but he soon found that there was only one land on which the hopes and sentiment of the bulk of the people were centred, and that the mention of only one particular region could provoke the enthusiastic response which has since forced itself upon the attention of even rulers and statesmen—that land, and that region which are expressed by the now famous word, "Zionism." This fact was again manifested in the course of Dr. Herzl's opening address at this sixth Congress. He related the so far fruitless interviews which he had had with the Sultan, who, it seems, had offered the Zionist leaders permission to establish a number of separate Jewish colonies in different parts of the Turkish Empire, which they refused, because it would not have carried out the national idea as formulated in the "Basle Programme."

Then he went on to describe at some length the interview which he had had with members of the British Cabinet, and of negotiations which had gone on with the British Government in reference to the establishment of a semi-dependent Jewish State in the Sinaitic Peninsula, which, however, had finally fallen through because a joint commission, appointed by the British and Egyptian Governments, and the "Aktions Comité" reported that the region could not be sufficiently irrigated to allow of such large settlements being established as the Zionists proposed. Finally, amid the breathless attention of the Congress, he revealed the fact that when the negotiations in reference to the Sinaitic Peninsula had fallen through, the British Government had most generously offered the Zionists a large territory in East Africa, which would practically be constituted a self-governing Jewish colony under British suzerainty. This announcement of British goodwill and generosity to the homeless Jews was greeted with stormy applause by the Congress, and three cheers for England was called by Mr. Zangwill and responded to with great enthusiasm; and yet I could not but observe that this announcement left a very painful impression on the bulk of the delegates. And many are the murmurs of disappointment which I have heard since, that any offer should be entertained of a permanent settlement of Jews anywhere outside Palestine.

ISRAEL'S SIN AND SORROW.

There is much also that is pathetic and painful to the Christian in the deliberations at the Zionist Congress. A great part of the time is taken up in bewailing the long continued wretchedness and misery of the Jewish people among the nations. Yet there is not a word or a hint as to the cause of it all. They are eloquent in denouncing the wrongs and cruelties inflicted on them by Christian nations for so many centuries, but "Who gave Jacob for a spoil and Israel to the robbers? Did not Jehovah, He against whom we have sinned? For they would not walk in His ways, neither were they obedient unto His laws. Therefore He hath poured upon him the fury of His anger and the strength of battle, and it hath set him on fire round about, yet he knew it not; and it burned him, yet he laid it not to heart." Oh, it is a fact, to which the whole history of the Jews for these two thousand years bears witness, that it is Israel's awful sin against their Messiah, and their continued attitude of hostility to Him, which is the primary cause of all their sufferings, and the apostate nations were and are only the scourge in the hand of their God, whose purpose in these very sufferings is to lead His national prodigal back to Himself.

Then, too, it is to worldly means and material resources that they now look for their national restoration; and while listening to Dr. HERZL'S opening address, and to the most able and eloquent "Political Survey" in relation to the condition of the Jews and the Zionist movement, delivered on the second day of the Congress by Dr. MAX NORDAU, I could not but think of the pathetic lament of the prophet: "Ephraim also is like a silly dove; they call to Egypt, they go to Assyria . . . and they have not cried unto Me with their hearts."

At first it was altogether the Sultan, in whom help was to be found; now it is in the goodwill of England, the well-known sympathy for the movement manifested by the German Emperor, or to the doubtful promises of Russia, that they are to look. But in vain doth my people hope for salvation from "the hills and from the multitude of mountains; truly in Jehovah our God is the salvation of Israel;" and though God may use the nations to accomplish His purposes in their restoration, even as He used them in the carrying out of His will in their dispersion, it is as sure as God's own Word, that without God and without repentance they will never be restored in blessing. When Israel at last turns to God for help and deliverance, it will not be long before they discover that the key to Palestine is in the hands of Jesus, their crucified and long rejected Messiah.

Basle, August 25.

Champagne près Grandson, Neuchatel.

TRAVELLERS in the neighbourhood of Neuchatel will have noticed the old church of Champagne, dating, probably, from the eleventh century. From time to time the structure has been repaired in part, but at length it threatens to fall into ruins. Complete restoration has become imperative. The needful outlay will run to about £400, and the pastor, M. François Morel, finds it very difficult to raise the amount. A correspondent informs us that he is a conscientious and devoted man, well deserving of encouragement in his work. Having exhausted every endeavour in raising the needful funds, Mr. Morel throws the pressing need of his poor parish upon the sympathy of Christian friends everywhere, remarking in a letter to us that "he has heard of the wonderful charity shown by English folk" along the lines of church building and restoration."

The Moorish Room, Tangier.

ONE of the most interesting places I saw on my last visit to Morocco was the Moorish Room, where some eighty or ninety poor Moors are housed and sheltered every night, and to whom the Scriptures are read and the Gospel preached. This work owes its origin to the energy of the late Miss Charlotte Hanbury, who found much to interest her in the state of the country and in the sufferings of the people owing to the oppression that prevailed.

She took annual journeys into the interior of the country, despite the hardships incurred by reason of lack of roads or wheeled vehicles, and dangers from warlike tribes, and was the means of taking relief and comfort to the many prisons which she visited.

Seeing the exposure which the poor country people had to endure when they came into Tangier—hundreds of them having to sleep in the market-place—in 1889 she started a tent where they were allowed to stay till the morning; and as she saw how much the natives appreciated it, she opened a room, which last year became wholly inadequate to accommodate those who applied, and it was enlarged to double the size. At present some 70,000 attend every year. When it is remembered that the Scriptures are always read, and the Gospel preached nightly, it will be seen how valuable this quiet and unostentatious work must be.

Just before Miss Hanbury died, she said: "It is very important to maintain a kind, warm spirit to the Moors who come, and to entertain a spirit of respect for them. A welcome goes to all their hearts when they know it is true and real." Mr. Henry Gurney, who regularly visits Tangier, and is greatly interested in this valuable work, said: "I believe it has had a considerable influence on a number of the natives of fanatical Morocco, and it is the only time that some ever hear the Gospel."

These poor Moors come from all parts of the country, even as far as Timbuctoo; and on one occasion when I was speaking to them myself the differing shades of colour of the men's faces told of the different tribes they represented.

Mr. Elson, who is in charge of the work, is a most suitable and loving worker. He has been greatly encouraged; and, despite the recent troublous times, wrote a month or so ago: "The country is in an unsettled condition, the roads being unsafe; but it does not make any difference to our work at the Room; it is full every night, and though there are so many different tribes represented, harmony and peace prevail."

Abdslam, the man in charge of the Room at night, is more than interested in the Gospel. One night, in Mr. Elson's unavoidable absence, he read a portion of the Bible himself to the inmates. Twice a week tea and bread is provided free to all who come, and occasionally a sheep is killed and a feast prepared.

More recent news to hand tells of an improvement in the country; the Sultan's authority is becoming more settled, the tribes are surrendering to him, and there are hopes that things will tend to the furtherance of the Gospel.

I am specially glad to report that prisoners are now supposed to have, at least, one small loaf of bread per day provided by the Government. I have just had given me the Moorish curiosities, &c., which Miss Hanbury had collected during her many travels in Morocco. In some cases she had succeeded in getting the leg-irons knocked off the legs of sick prisoners whilst they were on the march in the interior, and not the least pathetic are these fetters and padlocks, &c., which she brought home with her. These irons and chains are rivetted on the prisoners, and even the men in prison are thus manacled. I hope to use these many curios whilst lecturing this winter on, "The Prisons of the World," the substance of which (and more beside) is given in my book—THE PRISONS OF THE WORLD. (1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

I should be glad to hear from any friends who would arrange for illustrated lectures on above, with many costumes. CHAS. COOK.

Free Churches of Germany.

RECENT numbers of The Christian contained interesting accounts of "Awakening in Germany" by our highly-esteemed Count Bernstorff. He referred, as clearly stated, exclusively to movements within the National Churches. In order to give a complete view of the awakening, this should perhaps be supplemented by a brief account of blessed revival work, of deep and wide extent, by workers belonging to the Free Churches of Germany.

Much good work is done outside the National Church. Oncken, Lehmann, Jacobi, and Nippoldt, who some sixty years ago set themselves to carry forward the work of the Reformation even beyond Luther, stood up for liberty of conscience, for independence of the Church of God from State support and control, and for carrying out the mind of God along simple Scriptural lines, were at first ignored, then despised, some even imprisoned. By faith they held on, however, and what is the result now? Looking at the statements of the Baptists' last annual Conference, I find there are now in Germany 173 churches, with 761 out-stations, superintended by 421 Baptist ministers, and a membership of over 32,000. There are 434 Sunday-schools, with about 2,000 teachers and about 20,000 scholars. Though not belonging to their community, I have had for nearly twenty-three years many opportunities of preaching in their pulpits, of watching their church-life, and I have found their members without exception clear as to saving faith in the atoning sacrifice of our Divine Lord, not tainted either with Rationalistic or Ritualistic tendencies. Quiet revivals have been going on in many churches.

In a similar way, about fifty years ago, our Methodist brethren, supported to a large extent from America, and attached to the Methodist Episcopal Church, began work, at first in Southern, afterwards in Northern Germany; and in spite of all prejudice, not so much as to their teaching as to their aggressiveness, they have spread, and number now, in Germany alone, some 20,300 members, in about 800 churches and stations, with some 150 well-trained ministers; they have 460 Sunday-schools, and 21,000 scholars. Besides these, there are the churches and chapels of the so-called Evangelische Gemeinschaft, a sister community to the Methodist, with about the same membership, number of ministers, and Sunday-school attendance.

In addition to these three larger bodies, there are many independent Free Churches and quite a number of smaller missions to be found in almost every large town of Germany, carried on by Christian workers who, for conscientious reasons, do not see their way to identify themselves with these larger bodies, but who, none the less, are sound in faith, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. There also the work of revival is going on steadily.

In many cases these Free Church workers have stirred up the pastors of the National Churches to look after their flocks, to preach Evangelical truth, not above the heads of the people, but from heart to heart, and also to establish Sunday-schools and Bible-classes.

There is still much fear lest people should become "a prey of the sects or Dissenters," and we know from experience how many of the so-called "Christliche Gemeinschaften" in connection with the State Church keep shy of their brethren among the Free Churches. But God is answering prayer on behalf of a more general awakening throughout Germany. The Free Churches themselves are drawing nearer to each other. Already for some fifteen years a "Free Church Sunday School Union" has been at work with most encouraging results.

Conferences like those of Blankenburg, Düsseldorf, Wernigerode, and others, bring workers both of the Established and the Free Churches into touch with one another; and visits of honoured servants of God, mostly Free Churchmen, like Mr. Meyer and others, have been used of God to strengthen their bond of union in the service of the Lord. The spirit of "true Evangelical Alliance" will also in Germany make more headway if believers, whilst recognising traditional organizations, carry into practice the unity of the Spirit, in the bond of peace. The higher the tide of spiritual life is rising, both in the Evangelical party of the State Church and among the Free Churches, and the more the mists of prejudice and pride are being swept away, the better we shall know, love, and serve one another.

Julius Rohrbach.

Charlottenburg, Berlin.

In Austrian Silesia.

ONE day at the Keswick Convention a face on the platform, unknown and yet strangely familiar, revived in the writer a vision of early childhood—a beautiful summer day, a fine road lined for miles by tall, straight poplars, and at one of its sudden turnings the sight of a town in the distance clinging to the brow of a hill, and above it a church, striking and prominent, as if claiming the "city on a hill" for its entire possession.

The town is Teschen, in Austrian Silesia, and the church the only Protestant one for miles around. There was a time when nearly the whole of the Austrian Empire professed freedom from Romanism, and at that time Teschen was entirely Protestant. This was before the Emperor Ferdinand II., a pupil of the Jesuits, had gone to the shrine of the Virgin of Mariazell to make a solemn vow, never to rest until the Protestants were extirpated. The thirty years' war, with all its horrors, was the outcome of that vow. After peace was restored among the nations, religious persecutions continued within the Empire until the whole population had become reduced to the most abject of slaveries.

In the course of twenty years a marvel was performed, and Teschen turned into a Roman Catholic town. Of the three remaining Protestants two were women, who soon died in consequence of ill-treatment, and the third, a German physician, was ordered to leave the place. However, at the request of the inhabitants, who feared to lose their only medical adviser, the authorities relented and permitted him to stay. But he was strictly forbidden to read the Bible, and on Sundays soldiers were posted at the door of his house to prevent people from entering it. This is simply one example of what used to take place.

About 200 years ago, when the Swedish King, Charles XII., passed through Austria at the head of his victorious army, a poor Silesian peasant summoned up courage, and, throwing himself down before the King, implored him to intercede with the Austrian Emperor on behalf of his persecuted Protestant subjects. As the result of this act, permission was granted by the Government to build a large church for the need of the whole province. Other churches have sprung up since, but Teschen has remained the centre to this day.

How the Truth is Spread.

Dr. Pindor, who attended the Keswick Convention and who spoke at the Continental Mission meeting, and also at a gathering in connection with the Women's Protestant Union, addresses Sunday by Sunday 5,000 people and more, preaching to them in German and in Polish. One of the departments of his many-sided work is the translating of English Christian literature into Polish. In this way some of our best tracts and booklets have found their way into Polish families, some of whom have to walk many miles in order to attend a place of worship. This work has a wide scope of usefulness before it, but is hampered by the lack of necessary funds.

The present Protestants of Austria form about an eighteenth part of the population. In recent years the "Los von Rome Movement" has strengthened their ranks somewhat, without decreasing their difficulties in pursuing an aggressive Evangelistic work.

The forefathers of the present Protestant generation had to sacrifice everything—wealth, fame, reputation, in order to save their faith and their lives. They lived hidden in the caves of the mountains, and the thicket of the forests, waiting for the storm to pass. When they returned into the world they were, from the worldly point of view, ruined men and women, their positions taken, their goods confiscated. So it happens that to the present day there is neither aristocracy nor wealth in the Protestant communities. They are formed of hard-working people, small farmers, tradesmen, &c., who try their best to earn their livelihood, and to maintain their own churches and schools. In some districts the poverty is such that even ministers of the Gospel suffer want. The other day an advertisement appeared in the Silesian papers, asking for secondhand clothing for a Protestant pastor.

Friends wishing to know more about the work in Silesia may correspond with Dr. Pindor. He was one of the foreign preachers invited by D. L. Moody to the Chicago Exhibition. His experiences, while trying to secure an audience among the thousands of Poles who are settled there, are as interesting as they are amusing. First he applied to the editor of a Romanist paper who, as may have been expected, refused to have anything to do with a heretic. The Freethinker, more kindly disposed, announced the Protestant countryman to speak at a Copernicus celebration, whereupon the Romish journal warned his people from attending the meeting. A cross-fire between the two journals advertised Dr. Pindor so well, that he received, besides a hearty welcome, plenty of opportunity to preach the Word. His sojourn at Chicago resulted in the planting of a church there.

The Bordighera Home.

IF the cry of the children is to be heard in our cities, it is to be heard as touchingly on the borders of fair Italy and France.

The Home founded by Mrs. Boyce, of Bordighera, thirty-three years ago, has been a harbour of refuge for 433 neglected children, some of whom would most probably never have had a chance to learn anything of Christianity and the Word of God. Mr. A. B. Tron, the director, devotes his life, as does also his wife, to the training of the children, of whom there are now fifty-five (thirty-nine girls and sixteen boys), the full number they can accommodate.

The girls are taught laundry and needlework, also cooking and every branch of domestic work, and are put in the way of becoming good servants, while the boys are taught various trades. Religious and secular instruction is given twice-a-day; for examination in secular topics they are sent to the municipal schools, and most of them have passed with honours. Two of the municipal school-mistresses came to the Home to examine the children's needlework; they were pleased and satisfied, and gave the children good marks.

There are a good number of day-scholars, but the schoolrooms being small, the number cannot be increased, which is much to be regretted. The old pupils, are scattered in many countries working for their livelihood. Some have become members of Evangelical churches, and some few God has called to Himself. During the past year there have been many applications for admission. A poor mother at Ventimiglia writes:—"I have been a widow five months, and am left with two boys and two girls. Even when I can get work, I am unable to give my children proper food and instruction."

A sad appeal comes from Cannes:—"The father died after months of suffering and misery. The mother soon followed, leaving four children, the youngest only four years old, without food, clothing, or lodging, and they will die of cold and hunger if someone does not help them." To these, as well as to many other sad appeals, would Mr. Tron gladly keep an "ever-open door"; but this is not possible, as there are neither beds for them nor funds to enlarge the Home; as it is, current expenses are only barely met. Mr. Tron lives at Villa Violetta, Bordighera, and is always pleased to show the Home to visitors.

MESSRS.

TORREY and ALEXANDER.

AFTER a brief visit to their native shores, these evangelists have now returned to Great Britain to fulfil the long list of engagements made for the ensuing months.

A few preliminary meetings at Birkenhead have been arranged for the current week, and on Sunday next the evangelists enter upon an important mission at Liverpool, for which great preparation has been made during their absence in America. The Gymnasium and the Philharmonic Hall, which together will accommodate some thousands of persons, have been secured for the gatherings.

Every endeavour has been made to ensure full audiences, and much prayer has been offered that the spiritual results may be such as no counting of heads can tabulate. This is what the evangelists desire above all, and their hands will be strengthened by the fellowship and hearty co-operation of every section of Evangelical Christians in the city.

Liverpool can fairly lay claim to be one of the most active and live centres of Gospel work in the country; but it also possesses an immense proportion of the careless and indifferent, and not the least difficult feature is the large Roman Catholic population, to many of whom religion is but an empty name, and who go to swell the mass of those who know nothing of the living Saviour. To these and all will come the Message of Salvation, delivered in speech and song; and the marked acceptance of the evangelists' message in other crowded centres, in America, Australasia, Scotland, and Ireland, augurs well for this fresh advance into the territory of the enemy of souls.

DR. TORREY'S PREACHING.

The outstanding feature of Dr. Torrey's ministry, both as pastor and evangelist, has been his hold upon men; 'cute and hard-headed thinkers, who are imperfectly reached by many evangelistic movements, listen to his words. The note of certainty that pervades his preaching comes as a breeze from heaven to dispel the clouds and mists of modern thought. It is clear that even educated people, regular attendants at our places of worship, are weary of the nebulous theories too often promulgated from many pulpits; while, outside the churches altogether, are crowds of men who have either ceased to take any interest in religion, or are holding aloof until its professors have settled among themselves what really is worthy of acceptance.

To Dr. Torrey the Bible, upon which he exclusively bases his appeal, is a sure weapon, the sword of the Spirit, not to be handled "deceitfully," but to be grasped with a bold and certain hand. Thus, the Word of God is honoured in the using, and in all parts of the world that he has visited, "the slain of the Lord have been many." Great things are therefore prayed for, and surely expected during the coming months, not only in Liverpool, but also in every town in which he anticipates a welcome.

The power of song, whether choral or individual, has been proved to a remarkable degree during the last three decades, and Mr. Alexander's skill, both as choir-leader and soloist, is a valued factor in these missions. His aim is identical with that of the preacher; he relies not upon man but upon God; and no fortuitous combination of voices takes the place, in his sphere of service, of whole-hearted devotion to the paramount aim of reaching the heart through the ear.

AMERICAN INTEREST IN THE MISSION.

The interest manifested in America in the evangelists' work over here has been remarkable. At Chicago, Northfield, Winona, and wherever else Dr. Torrey has had opportunities of addressing meetings, the people have flocked to hear of what the Lord has been doing through these missions.

This was especially the case at Winona, which is familiarly known as the Northfield of the West. A vast concourse gathers here for conference during the summer, no fewer than 12,000 preachers, as well as the general Christian public, attending this year. It is easily conceivable, therefore, that wide and far-reaching issues may evolve from the recital of what God is doing, and that "the effectual fervent prayer" of His people, met in such numbers, may "avail much."

Supported thus, the evangelists feel that they can go forward fearlessly, strong in the grace which He supplieth. Dr. Torrey is accompanied on this occasion by his family, in addition to the helpers of his former visit. Mrs. Towner is also one of the party, and in October her husband, Professor Towner, musical director of the Chicago Bible Institute, is expected over for a month or six weeks. His efficiency in the musical department has been a marked feature of the Institute work for many years, and quite a number of his former pupils are now singing the Gospel in various parts of the world.

Our readers will be glad to know that Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander are in good health and spirits, and apparently well prepared physically for the arduous campaign on which they are entering.

Their forthcoming engagements are as follow:—Dundee, during October; Manchester, during November; Birmingham, from January 11 to February 14; Bristol, during April; Bradford, during May.

Oh, Live to God!

In the bright morn of life,
Oh, live to God!
When free from toil and strife,
Oh, live to God!
When light beams all around,
When gladsome songs abound,
When dew lies on the ground,
Oh, live to God!

Give Him the fire of youth,
Oh, live to God!
The eager love of truth,
Oh, live to God!
The zeal that burns and glows,
The daring faith that knows
No shrinking fear of foes,
Oh, live to God!

Serve Him in manhood's prime,
Oh, live to God!
With talent, toil, and time,
Oh, live to God!
Give Him thy manhood's crown,
Put rebel passions down,
Extol His just renown,
Oh, live to God!

When evening shadows spread,
Oh, live to God!
When droops thy weary head,
Oh, live to God!
When pleasures lose their zest,
When sorrows banish rest,
Still bow to His behest,
Oh, live to God!

Request for Museum Specimens in China. —Dr. E. H. Edwards, author of "Fire and Sword in Shansi," is anxious to receive specimens of natural history, models of machinery, &c., for a building he is having put up at Tai-yuan-fu, where he and Mrs. Edwards have returned to labour for Christ. Part of the new building will be a reception and lecture hall, and part a museum. So convinced are Dr. and Mrs. Edwards of the importance of this scheme, towards the enlightenment of some of the thousands of Chinese students attending the various colleges in the city, that they have deferred rebuilding for a year their former home, ruined by the Boxers. When it is remembered that ignorance was the chief cause of the terrible massacres of our fellow-countrymen and the native Christians in 1900, it is believed this request of Dr. Edwards has only to become known in order to receive a hearty response. Information regarding transit of contributions may be obtained from Miss J. H. Denholm Young, 10, Morningside Place, Edinburgh, N.B.

Seeing Things Rightly.

By Rev. DR. CUYLER.

THERE is a right way and a wrong way of looking at almost everything. Spiritual discernment is a very important grace; for many of our joys and many of our sorrows proceed from our method of looking at those things which concern our peace. Salvation depends upon a right view of Jesus Christ. The difference between the impenitent sinner and the same person after he is regenerated, is that he looks at Christ with a new eye, and has discovered him to be the very Saviour and guide that he needs.

But there is no direction in which we are apt to make more egregious mistakes than when we look to our Heavenly Father's providential dealings. Some Christians are betrayed into a heathenish habit of talking about "good luck" and "bad fortune," and using other expressions that convey the idea that human life is a mere game of chance. Blind unbelief may be expected to err, and to scan God's work as either a riddle or a muddle. A Christian who has had his eyes opened ought to know better than to make such mistakes. Yet how prone we are to regard many of God's dealings in a wrong light and to call them by wrong names. We speak of things as afflictions, which are really great blessings under a dark disguise. We often congratulate people on getting what turns out to be a dangerous snare or a lamentable loss. Quite as often we condole with them over occurrences which are about to yield to them blessings more precious than gold.

Be careful how you condole with a man who has lost his money and saved his character, and be equally careful how you congratulate a man who has made a million dollars at the expense of his religion. A severe sickness has often brought recovery to a sinner's soul, and suffering often works out for a Christian an exceeding weight of glory. Let us learn to see things rightly and call them by their right names. Then we shall not put funeral palls over rich blessings, or decorate temptations with garlands of roses. Let us all ask God to open our eyes, and give us spiritual discernment. Then we shall discover that this life is only a training-school for a higher and a better one; then we shall see a Father's smile behind the darkest cloud, and at the end of the pilgrimage of duty it will be one of the raptures of heaven to behold the King in His beauty and know all things even as we have been known.

If we possessed clearer discernment, we should not so often torment ourselves with sinful anxieties about the future. Our loving Lord knew what was in man when he reiterated His remonstrances against borrowing trouble in advance, and when he said: "Be not, therefore, anxious for the morrow; sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Worry is not only a sin against God, it is a sin against our health and peace. It sometimes amounts to slow suicide. Honest work, however hard, seldom hurts us; it is worry that corrodes and kills. There is only one practical remedy for the sin of anxiety. Let us not climb the high wall until we get to it, or fight the battle until it opens, or shed tears over sorrows that may never come, or lose the joys of present blessings by the sinful fear that God will take them away from us. We need all our strength and all the grace that God can give us for to-day's burdens and to-day's battles. To-morrow belongs to our Heavenly Father. I would not know its secrets if I could. It is far better to know whom we trust, and that He is able to keep all that we commit to Him.

Why forecast the trials of life
With such sad and grave persistence,
And look and watch for a crowd of ills
That as yet have no existence?

Strength for to-day is all that we need,
For we never will see to-morrow;
When it comes the morrow will be to-day,
With its measures of joy or sorrow.

Medical Missionary Work.

THE celebration in March last of the "silver" birthday of the Medical Missionary Association called attention to an organization which has, since its formation, been doing a quiet but useful work for the strengthening of foreign missions in every part of the world.

The Association was founded by three medical men, Dr. George Saunders, C.B. (who had been privileged five years previously to set the Medical Prayer Union afloat), Dr. Wm. Fairlie Clarke (late Surgeon of Charing Cross Hospital), and Dr. James L. Maxwell, of Formosa, round whom other workers soon gathered.

The objects that the Association set before it were (1) to seek, in full sympathy and touch with the Medical Prayer Union, to raise the spiritual and missionary tone of medical students, and of the profession generally; (2) to help forward suitable young men into the foreign field as fully qualified medical missionaries; (3) to plant new medical missions; and (4) to diffuse medical missionary information by means of lectures and literature, and especially by the publication of a magazine, "Medical Missions at Home and Abroad."

Dr. Fairlie Clarke became editorial secretary of the new Association, but for seven years very little could be done, for want of a general secretary who could give his whole time to the work. In 1885, Dr. James L. Maxwell, on his final return from Formosa, took up service in this direction. A small Training Home for students was now opened in Petherton Road, N., which, proving a success, was removed five years' later to larger premises in Highbury Park.

GROWTH OF MEDICAL MISSIONS.

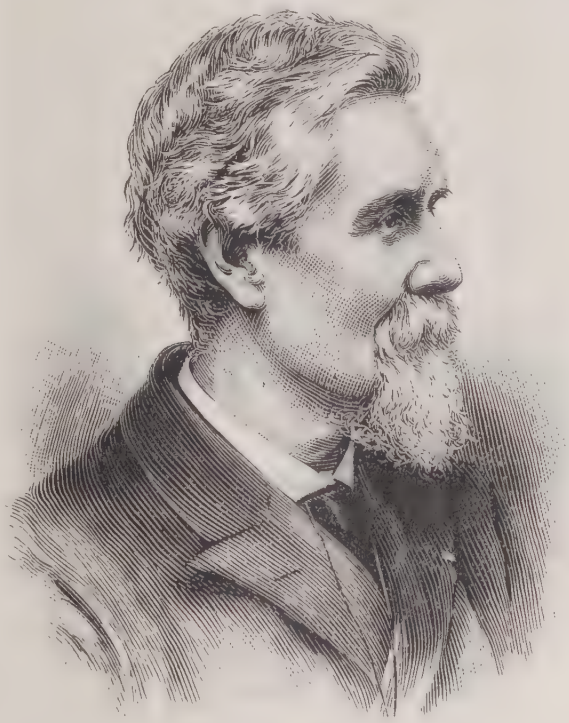
Many of those who have passed through the Home are to be found now in different parts of Africa and China, in Formosa, India, Assam, Mexico, Persia, and Java. Two of the Association's students are in the last-mentioned place. One of them has recently been made Ritter (or Knight) of the Order of Orange-Nassau, as a recognition of his medical mission services in Dutch India, in the results of which the young Queen of Holland is herself keenly interested.

During the last two decades, a Students' Foreign Missionary Union, initiated by one of the students and Dr. Howard Taylor, and united later with the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, has been doing excellent work in the hospitals of London. Missionary bands have been added in several cases to the other meetings already held in connection with the Medical Prayer Union; and the three medical missionaries who in 1878 represented our London hospitals abroad have multiplied to ninety-five. Of the nearly 37,000 English-trained medical practitioners at home and abroad, 328 were in January last labouring as missionaries on the foreign field. Of these 231 were men and ninety-seven women, the proportion of the latter in this field of service being steadily on the increase.

The students of the Training Home represent many Evangelical sections of the Church of Christ, and not a few nationalities. All pursue their studies at one or other of the great medical colleges of London. On Sunday their missionary training goes forward by means of a large number of spiritual activities in which they take part—mission services in and out of doors, ward services, Bible-classes for schoolboys and working-men, and Sunday-school work among the children of the richer and poorer classes.

Soon after the Training Home was opened, careful inquiry as to the missionary side of the students' education revealed the need of training schools, in the shape of medical missions under the Association's care. Since 1890 such a training school has existed in the Islington Medical Mission, Windsor Street, Essex Road — where much of the above-mentioned work has been carried forward. This Mission has proved, too, an incalculable advantage to the poor of the neighbourhood. Thousands of cases are dealt with year by year, the workers seeking always to arouse an interest in spiritual things, while ministering to the needs of the body. Roman Catholics, professed unbelievers, and the great mass of the indifferent all yield trophies of grace to the glory of God.

In an interview with a member of our staff last week, Dr. Maxwell explained that, though retaining charge of the editorial work of the Association, he now retires from the general secretaryship, the chief responsibility being taken up by Dr. Henry Soltau. Speaking out of a deep sense of gratitude for the way in which the Lord had opened up the path of usefulness in the past, he added that at present the executive feel themselves called upon to make a decided forward movement. He referred with deep satisfaction to the thorough manner in which medical work has been organized in connection with the Church Missionary Society, and said that while maintaining its strictly inter-denominational character, the Association would like to see its resources more largely used than they have been, by the Free Churches of England, for the training of medical workers for their fields. The Association has never been in debt; but much more might be done in the way of encouraging and helping medical students to prepare for missionary work. There is no pauperizing. The students always pay for their own maintenance, and, wherever possible, for their education as well, though in suitable cases the latter is not insisted on.



DR. MAXWELL.

From Photograph by G. P. Abraham, Keswick.

The Association is the only one in England which undertakes to do with students seeking a full qualification as medical practitioners, and who intend to devote their lives to missionary work. Such workers in foreign lands regularly undertake the most important operations in surgery, and with as large an amount of success as doctors experience at home. The news of such doings exercises a great influence among the heathen, and attracts the notice of the ruling classes. Chinese gentlemen have come again and again to medical missionaries, and asked earnestly whether private wards could not be established for the well-to-do. This is now being done, and it is hoped by this means to make the medical work of the English Presbyterian Missions self-supporting.

Dr. Maxwell, who is an enthusiast in the cause of medical missions, recalled vividly the three years he spent as the only missionary on the island of Formosa, and declared emphatically that he would have been greatly hindered in his work had he not been a medical man. Now he rejoices with the present workers in the fact that the Church of Christ on the island numbers between four and five thousand native believers.

MALARIA RENDERED HARMLESS.

Referring to malaria as a subject which frequently occupies the attention of missionary committees, it was interesting to hear from a medical missionary of ripe experience an assurance that if the precautions now available be taken advantage of, there is no reason why Europeans resident in other lands should suffer from this scourge at all. As practical evidence of this he mentioned that his two sons —Dr. J. Preston Maxwell (Changpoo, Amoy) and Dr. J. Laidlaw Maxwell (Formosa)—are the first missionaries in their respective fields who have entirely escaped suffering in this way. The regular use of quinine when on the passage from this country, should be followed by the use of mosquito-protected houses. The cost of fitting houses with the necessary netting would be comparatively trifling, and the gain in the health of missionaries very great.

The Children's Medical Missionary Society, which was affiliated with the Association in 1885, has, under the wise guidance of Miss A. R. Butler, become a most useful auxiliary to the Association. Missionaries are now in the field who first heard the Lord's call in connection with this Society, and the sum of £4,700 raised by the members has not only maintained branches of work otherwise unprovided for, but the giving of it has awakened interest which bore rich fruit in later life.

Much general information regarding the work may be secured from the organ of the Association, Medical Missions at Home and Abroad (1s. 6d. yearly, post free. Shaw); and detailed particulars from Dr. Soltau, 49, Highbury Park, N.; or Dr. Maxwell, 31, Hammelton Road, Bromley, Kent.

Mrs. Shipton's Works.—The writings of this departed saint still find many appreciative readers. To enable friends of the author to circulate these books more freely among the many who would be benefited by them, Messrs. Morgan and Scott are making up parcels at 2s. 6d., 5s., and 10s., post free, these amounts being in each case half the published price. Particulars may be had of the publishers.

Zwingli and the Swiss Reformation.

By H. GRATTAN GUINNESS, D.D.

THERE are two Switzerlands; Switzerland of the high mountains, and Switzerland of the lower hills, the plains, the lakes, the railroads, and the denser population. Anyone can see this who examines a map of the country, representing, by appropriate shading, the extreme differences in altitude of its various parts. A line drawn from the east end of the Lake of Geneva to the east end of the Lake of Constance, fairly indicates the separation of these two Switzerlands of higher and lowel levels.

It is interesting to observe that the two great lakes at the termination of this line, the Lake of Geneva and the Lake of Constance, are the reservoirs from which flow the Rhone in the south, and the Rhine in the north. On directing attention to Switzerland on the lower level, lying between these two great lakes it will be seen that Geneva, Berne, and Zürich are about equi-distant; Berne lying in the centre, Geneva to the south, and Zürich to the north. The importance of Geneva is well known, and also its relation to the Reformation movement. Berne is the centre of government in Switzerland; while Zürich is the most populous city in the Swiss Confederation, and foremost as a centre of education and commerce.

From the windows of the hotel in Zürich in which we are staying we can see the twin towers of the Grossmünster, the old cathedral in which Zwingli first preached the Reformation in the early years of the sixteenth century. Born twenty-three years before Calvin, and dying thirty-three years before that distinguished man, Zwingli was the pioneer of the Reformation in Switzerland. In the town library, which contains 130,000 volumes and 4,500 manuscripts, we saw Zwingli's Bible, with Hebrew annotations in his own handwriting; and in the extensive Swiss National Museum, exhibited in a separate case, were the shattered helmet, the battle-axe, and the sword, which formed part of Zwingli's armour when he fell on the field of Cappel in 1531. The catalogue of the town library contains a long list of Zwingli's works; and the Protestantism of Zürich, where there are no fewer than fifteen Protestant churches, remains a memorial of that eminent reformer.

During twelve years Zwingli was a popular preacher in the Grossmünster. The plainness, solidity, and loftiness of its structure are very impressive; its high pulpit and still higher galleries seem to harmonize with the lofty themes on which the preacher dwelt; and the whole building, with the plainness and strength of style which characterized his discourses.

Zwingli's armour, exhibited in the National Museum, is sadly suggestive of the great error of his life, his attempt to combine in his own person the soldier of war and the minister of peace; but the judgment which is passed upon that action should be modified by the consideration of the republican character of Switzerland, so different from that of Germany and England of the same period. Of Zwingli's ability, earnestness, and whole-hearted devotion to the cause of the Reformation, there can be no doubt; and his theological views were in some respects even more Scriptural than those of the reformer, Luther. Zwingli laid the broad foundations of the Reformation in Switzerland, on which Farel and Calvin subsequently built; a work which has stood the test of centuries, and the strain and stress of wars and revolutions.

Fragrant still is the memory of this great and noble man, who united the character of the Christian and the patriot with that ardent love of liberty which has been so prominent a feature in the Swiss. While sitting in the old cathedral, listening to the music of the organ, the following verses were suggested by the historical associations of the place:—

Amid these ancient walls, these arches high,
Thy voice was lifted, Zwingli; from Rome's face
Here didst thou tear the mask of mystery,
And here proclaim the Gospel of God's grace.

Roll ye deep thunders of the organ, roll,
Your billows, like the ocean's awful waves;
Ye seem the echo of his mighty soul,
And of His witness to the power that saves.

Sink, ye loud thunders, to a softer strain,
For here arose the sighing of his prayer;
Breathe of the soul's distress, the bosom's pain,
Fill with your tenderest notes the trembling air.

But hark, those peals! with what conviction strong
That dauntless witness to eternal truth
Wars against falsehood, superstition, wrong,
Flushed with the ardours of perpetual youth!

Methinks amid these walls thy voice sublime,
Resounding as the Alpine torrents roar,
Heralds the advent of the promised time
When Babylon shall curse the world no more.

Yes, it shall come! and harper's music sweet,
And mighty thunders shall proclaim the hour,
And every vale and hill the song repeat,
Jehovah reigneth in His glorious power.

Points in a Fruitful Ministry.

NOT long since I had the privilege of visiting a church that had suffered the loss, through death, of a minister who had faithfully devoted himself to its service in a pastorate extending over a period of thirty-five years. The testimonies that were given to the results of that ministry were such as could not fail to make deep impression on the minds of men who, like myself, are anxiously concerned as to the present outlook of the ministry, and are wondering how, as ministers of God, we may best adapt ourselves to the need of this restless and critical age.

Here, at any rate, there was no sign of the waning power of the pulpit. Concerning this man's ministry, nothing apparently could be said about failure to inspire respect. In the church his name seemed to be held in hallowed memory by young and old: outside, the feeling of the township was expressed by one whom I may describe as "the man in the street," when he said, that the respect felt by all classes was such that on the day of the funeral every public-house in the town had its blinds drawn as an expression of sorrow for his loss.

When I came to inquire the secret of his successful ministry, for such it surely was, I found that both in relation to his message and his method of work he was a man who would hardly be considered up-to-date in many of our churches. His conscience had compelled him not only passively, but actively, to resist the teachings of some who proclaim themselves the advanced thinkers of the age and the preachers of a new evangel. It was the old Evangel that he had proclaimed for thirty-five years. His people had not grown tired of it, nor had they grown tired of him. They believed in him and they loved him, because they knew him to be genuine in his faith, happy in his knowledge of the truth, and intensely eager to communicate that happiness to others.

Another point I want to emphasize about this man's ministry is his refusal to adopt so-called up-to-date ideas and methods of church work, which in some quarters are considered so essential to success. In a report recently issued of an interview with a Free Church minister, I see it is said that our English churches as compared with American are quite up-to-date in some things, but that America has much to teach them in regard to the up-to-dateness of church organization, and the matter of church furniture is given as an illustration. I do not know that up-to-dateness is, after all, the most laudable ambition for the ministry or for a church. The brother of whose ministry I am writing believed in working on what are termed by some old-fashioned lines. For example, the week-evening service and prayer meeting were to him sacred engagements in connection with the work of the church. He would allow nothing to interfere with these. If young people desired an organization of their own, and a night set apart for it, he clearly laid it down that, as members of the church, their first duty was to support the week-evening service and the old-established church and missionary prayer-meeting.

The third point I would name is his entire and intense devotion to his church and its highest interests. In his efforts to minister to the spiritual needs of all people who sought his help as minister of that church, he would never spare himself. In some respects he did not do as much as others for the denomination to which he belonged. He held that the minister's first duty was, not the service of the denomination, but the service of the individual church over which he was set, and that the best way to strengthen the denomination was to make that particular church strong. Some may not agree with him, but I do.

In these days it is imperative that we ministers work with the trowel, and that every man seek to repair the breach in the wall that is at his own door. If I were to attempt to throw myself into the work of the ever-multiplying organizations that have advertised themselves in circulars sent to me during the last three months, I should have to resign my pastorate. My advice in relation to the majority of these is "burn them."

For myself and for my brethren in the ministry I would suggest that in resuming our ministry after these days of rest we should go to it in the determination that we will know nothing but Christ and Him crucified. The majority of us no doubt profess to preach Christ; but do we? During these holidays I have been longing to know more of Him, not as a theme for speculation, but as a saving power in my life and in the life of others; but so far I have hardly heard a reference to Him in the pulpits of the churches I have attended.

Ragged School Conference.

A large gathering of voluntary ragged-school workers and friends met at Heronfield, Potter's Bar, on Saturday, August 22, by kind invitation of Mr. and Mrs. T. S. Downing Wallace. There was a two-fold purpose in view—to enjoy the country air and quiet, and to confer on the latest effort of the Ragged School Union, the Drift Mission.

The work that is called the Drift Mission was begun last winter, and not a day too soon, for it was abundantly evident that there were swarms of little folk in court and street and slum that so far as religious instruction was concerned, were altogether unattached. They were not owned by any mission-hall or Sunday-school.

Last winter a goodly number were brought into line, and it is reassuring to learn that the work is to be resumed in the coming season with increased vigour. The Council of the Ragged School Union do not mean to forget that their schools were opened for children such as these referred to, and that much work lies at their door undone so long as such children exist. All fishers of men need heavenly wisdom for their work, but what grace is needed in those who would attract these children who as yet do not know the purpose or meaning of nurture and admonition!

All this was made abundantly clear in the address that was given by Mr. W. A. Bowie, the convener of the Drift Mission Committee. He said that if a census of these uncared for little ones were made, the figures would run into tens of thousands. The only limits at present in sight were the limits of the purse strings; but day by day promises of help were coming in.

A very happy glimpse of the kindly work amongst the little cripple children in Bethnal Green was afforded by Miss Dallaway. The weekly meeting in the parlour was a well-spring of pleasure and profit to them. Some came pick-a-back on father's shoulders, some in their mother's arms. Some with crutch or staff, and some little invalids were brought in spinal carriages. Miss Dallaway's "wants" for the children were many, but perhaps she asked more than all for sister-women to come and take some share in this blessed work for cripple children.

The other speakers were:—Mr. John Kirk (secretary of the R.S.U.), Mr. Wallace, Mr. Blewer, and Rev. Mr. Pollock.

A Visit to Bulford Camp.

"NEVER been to the Bulford Camp before? What a lack in education!" was Miss Perks' playful remark, as we drove through the large open-air school in Salisbury Plain where the cruel art of war is being taught. Since the Second Army Corps came here six years ago, she and her sister have been going backward and forward, dividing their time between Winchester and the Camp. Holidays? The change of scene, if not of work, was their holiday. Others seem to think the same. We saw Mr. Hull, a former soldier and now city missionary, winding in and out between the tents selling The Bugle-Call, and later in the day another evangelist, Mr. Andrews, both thinking the fresh air in Salisbury Plain and the work among the soldiers to be a sufficient change for them.

Never shall we forget the incident connected with the first sight of Bulford Camp from a distance some years ago. A drunken soldier was driving a cart on the main road. He fell out, dragged along by the horse, and was in danger of being killed. Some Christian friends in our company went to his rescue and carried him to the barracks. We thought of that fine-looking young fellow made lower than a brute by the effect of intoxication as we entered the new Soldiers' Home on Salisbury Plain, which owes its existence to the indefatigable efforts of the Misses Perks, and the generosity of friends whom their work of many years had secured them. Here no such temptation as intoxicating drink is offered; no theatricals are given, and no attractions exercised beyond those of the good and comfortable Home.

The one-storey buildings which form it are of galvanized iron, and harmonize with the other erections in the camp. A pleasant verandah runs along the spacious refreshment-bar which faces the main road and is well patronized by the soldiers, especially in the evenings. They appreciate cleanliness and courtesy, and the fact of getting the full value for their money. "I have never got a bad egg here yet," remarked a soldier to us in passing. "And he has little chance of getting one," said Miss Perks, "for we cater only for fresh English eggs, and altogether for first-class food. We owe the best care to the defenders of our country who many times hazard their lives for our sakes."

Running parallel with, but detached from the bar with reading and recreation rooms on either side of it, are Miss Perks' private apartments and guest rooms. Behind the bar are the kitchen offices and the Gospel Hall, used on Sundays by the Presbyterian minister, and a set of small bedrooms for letting to visitors to the camp. The day we were there all these were occupied, and proved insufficient for the demand.

In view of the growing need of accommodation, especially during manœuvring times, the commanding General, Sir Evelyn Wood, who seems to be much pleased with the Home, granted them an additional site on which they hope to build as soon as the needed £1,000 will be forthcoming. There is a more pressing immediate need of £500 in order to pay up for the furnishing of the Home.

After bearing in mind all the advantages of such a home with its refining atmosphere, its many comforts (among which are a dozen bath-rooms — another dozen being required) with its facilities for writing, the cheap, healthy food that can be obtained in it, we have only dwelt on secondary matters, for there is a spiritual side to the work which is the paramount one, and to which all the other departments are made subservient.

The sole aim of the Misses Perks' mission is to win every soldier for Christ, consequently the preaching of the Gospel always holds the first place in their minds. True to the custom that prevailed "under canvas," meetings are held daily at the institute.

On entering the well-lit and well-ventilated cheerful hall our attention was drawn to the organ, a gift from soldiers in the South African war. The cheque of £52 10s. was remitted by Mr. and Mrs. Osborne Howe, with the message: "From our soldiers and camp workers in South Africa, in memory of the help and kindness and fellowship in work for God during these years." Many of the subscribers to the cheque have now gone to the glory land to sing the "new song."

We had a cheerful meeting, closing with bright testimonies to the Lord's keeping power. Some looked back upon years, some upon months, others upon weeks or days, of a new life in Christ, but all had found Him sufficient to keep them in the narrow way. A young gunner, looking not more than eighteen, who on the previous night (Sunday) had given his heart to God, was asked whether he had anything to say. His face crimson, his lips trembling, he hesitated but a moment, then rose to his feet, and with a voice quivering with emotion said that he had pledged himself to Christ, and intended to be true to Him. Another young man had been following Him for six months. It meant persecution at times, often jeers and mockeries, but it was worth while to suffer a little for Him who had done so much for us. Yes, it requires a man, a true man, to be a Christian. Many who have been facing death more than once in their lives, and who would look at any moment into the mouth of a loaded cannon without flinching, shrink from stepping over the line. Nothing helps a man more in his onward career than a clear, open confession at the very start of it.

Are we right in presuming that a work like this, unsectarian and spiritual in character, must have many friends wishing to see it prosper? Help can be rendered in many ways besides sending cheques. Drawing-room and other meetings might be arranged, or The Bugle Call (1s. 6d. a year, post free), a bright monthly, edited by Mr. Charles Edwards, the able superintendent of the Mission, and containing the latest news of the work, might be more freely circulated. Clean, suitable Gospel literature is also constantly needed for troopships and abroad, and would be welcome at the Home. Anyone interested in the place would be repaid for the trouble of a visit to Bulford Camp and Miss Perks' Soldiers' Home.

London Wesleyan Mission.

THE annual report of the London Wesleyan Mission calls attention to the fact that according to the figures of the Daily News census over 20,000 people are gathered on the Lord's Day in the various buildings connected with the Mission. The branches now number nine, with forty buildings in use; and the work is directed by twenty-two ministers, twenty-five lay agents, and seventy sisters. The members united in Church fellowship number nearly 10,000.

The following extract illustrates one of the phases of the work:—

EAST END CLASS MEETINGS.

The Society classes are our strength. Many come who cannot get, much as they would like, to the Sunday services. On a recent day three half-drunken women came, and their presence led the teetotal women to bear straight, strong testimony of what "signing the pledge" had done for them. It was a red-hot meeting, and resulted in many joining who had just stood on the edge of the other side. In response to an invitation given during one day of visitation, a poor woman came to our Sunday night service. She had been a great sinner, but she was brought into close contact with a loving Saviour, who forgave her freely, and filled her soul with peace and joy. She went home with the new experience, determined to live a new life, but was met by her husband, who persecuted her almost beyond endurance. She refused to fetch him drink, and this made him very angry; but she kept calm and quiet. He has prevented her coming to God's house by locking her in, but God's grace has been sufficient. Next to her Saviour, the class is her refuge; and there she has told us, if it were not for the grace given, she should kill her husband, for before she became a Christian she had a violent temper; but He who has saved her gives her patience to bear, and faith to believe she will be saved.

A wee boy went home from one of the meetings, and told his mother what he had heard; and that woman had no rest until she gave up her half-pint and came to the Saviour. She joined a class, and became a changed woman. After a while she was taken ill and was visited. As is usual, prayer was offered, and in that sick-room there was a sister of the invalid. During the prayer God's Spirit took hold of that girl, and soon she commenced the Christian life. Then the sisters began to pray for their mother, who was very far from God. Prayer was answered, and to-day all are members with us through the word spoken by the little child. Our class meetings seem to be more than ever a real help to our poor folk, and they do believe in prayer. Said one: "I am so glad to be here! It is the happiest hour in the week, and I have had such a wonderful answer to prayer. I had no tea in the cupboard, and I did so want a cup; so I just knelt down and asked the Lord to send me some. I got up, and looking about I found some bits of rag, which I sold for a penny; and oh! I got such a nice cup of tea, and I did praise my Lord for it." Another came in almost breathlessly, saying: "Please, Miss, will you pray a little prayer for me. I have heard of some work, and thought if you would say a little prayer perhaps I shall get it. My husband is on the drink, and we are very low down."

"A Novelist on the Bible."

DEAR SIR,—May I suggest that in the paragraph as above in your issue of this date, there is an element of danger?

The writer in question is, without doubt, a popular novelist and a very skilful writer; but I would ask whether a tribute to the Bible from this author is to be received without qualification?

When I call to mind the Bible story of Hagar, with its simple and profound teaching, and its absolute purity, and then consider the modern tale which has been presented under a semi-Biblical title, I am led to deplore the fact that a writer having so much influence with the public, should show in this so little true reverence for the Scriptures. In "A Son of Hagar," I find the initial plea is afterwards submerged in a record of passion, crime, and shame such as few persons other than hardened readers of horrors would desire at all to contemplate. Besides which I find that Hugh Ritson, one of the most shocking characters I have ever looked upon even in fiction, being "a man of great will and power of mind," is able to resist the impetus of his own wrong-doing and to "save his soul alive." So it seems that a man may live like a devil, destroying and plotting against the innocent, then he may turn round and "save his soul alive"! And when he faces towards the final judgment with partial restitution, with extenuations, but without repentance, it seems that we are expected to admire his power of mind. And so that repentance and self-abhorrence, which I had thought was the token of a Divine working in the human soul, is an inferior thing? No. I rather choose to protest against the whole fabrication both in matter and manner, and especially against the taking of a semi-Biblical title for a tale so widely at variance with Bible teaching. Therefore I respectfully submit that the tribute from the distinguished writer in question can only be received with decided qualification.—Yours sincerely, J. W. R.

[We entirely agree with our correspondent, that the Bible stands in no need of patronage, and assuredly not at the hands of authors who qualify its principles or set at naught its distinctive sanctions. In calling attention to Mr. Hall Caine's remarks, we had no intention of committing him to more than he said, nor of committing ourselves to his views and teachings.—Ed.]

The Patient Mind.*

LEARN in patience to abide,
Learn it at the Cross;
See endurance glorified,
Wonder not at loss.

Work, but work in patient love,
Waiting, watching long;
Rise the pain of life above,
Silence first, then song.

Suffer, but with patient joy;
Discipline of pain
Will all selfishness destroy,
His own glory gain.

Patient hope shall make thee pure,
Peace with pain shall blend;
Seeing the Unseen endure
Faithful to the end.

Rifts in the Cloud.—I.

By Rev. HENRY STURT.

THE MINISTRY OF SUFFERING.

Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." "No chastening for the present seemeth joyous, but grievous; nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness." "Because they have no changes, they fear not God." "Ephraim hath not gone into captivity; he hath not been emptied from vessel to vessel, therefore his scent remained in him and his tastes are not changed." "Every branch that beareth fruit He purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit." "Perfect through suffering."

THE above portions of Scripture are only samples of the rich teaching of God's Word on the great Ministry of Suffering. It is often called one of the mysteries of life. It is so only when we look at individual cases we do not understand, or view it with the blind eyes of unbelief or intellectual pride. Suffering is one of the benevolent arrangements of God for our present condition of imperfection and sin. It is a severe, but true, kindness that removes a diseased limb to save life. So it is a merciful act of God to send affliction to save the soul from death.

The ministry of suffering is twofold—personal and relative. Some suffer for the sake of others, that the works and glory of God may be manifested in them. The friends of Job erred in supposing he was a great sinner because he was a great sufferer. Christ also rebuked the same idea when He said, "suppose ye that these men were sinners above all others because they suffered such things?" The afflictions of Job have been a ministry of helpful instruction to all ages.

What rare lessons of wisdom we learn in the sick room, of the weakness of man, the vanity of the world, and the grace of God. What tenderness of love and sympathy, and what unselfish services are called forth by the sufferings of loved ones upon whom we wait. What an enlarged knowledge of Christ, and what glimpses of heaven we gain through the clear vision of those who see the Lord in the day of affliction.

> The chamber where the good man meets his fate,
> Is privileged beyond the common walks of life,
> Close on the gates of heaven.

But there is also a great ministry of suffering in those who have to bear the pain themselves. The fruitful branch is purged, to make it more fruitful still. Sanctified affliction yields the peaceable fruit of righteousness, in our hearts and lives. The rock must be smitten, that the life-giving stream may flow out. The plough must be driven through the heart, to prepare it for the precious seed of divine truth, and the harvest of heavenly love. The channels of the soul must be cut deeper, that they may be filled with the life of God. The flower must be crushed to make it yield its sweetest fragrance, even as the broken alabaster box filled the house with the odour of the precious ointment. What a precious influence of heaven surrounds a believer who without a murmur, and in holy gentleness, bears the afflictions of God! The necessity of the soul may also be the rich occasion for the manifestation of the grace and glory of God. The unsearchable riches of consolation in Christ, and the treasures of strength and joy in Him, are laid open before us by the ministry of suffering, and the sacred fires of faith and love burn with an intensity never known before.

Perfect through suffering was the law for the Master, and it is enough for the disciple to be as his Lord. Not that there was wrong to be corrected, or error to be removed in Christ. But there was development to be accomplished, strength to be attained, and a great ministry to be fulfilled to make Him a perfect example for all ages, and a Saviour for all mankind; and this perfection was attained through suffering. The rich salvation of our Lord flows to us on the tide of His suffering love.

We cannot claim to be thus free from error and sin, and if God should employ the ministry of pain to remove the evil within us, we should submit ourselves patiently to His hand. The growth of the soul also may need the same discipline. God disturbs our lives by trials to accomplish His Divine object to bring us nearer to the stature of Christ. The refiner's fire purifies the gold. The rough blows of the sculptor make the image perfect. Emptying from vessel to vessel brings forth the best wine at last. So God perfects His work in us by the hand of affliction and pain. Some of the sweetest strains of thanksgiving and praise have risen from the couch of suffering, and some of the richest experiences of the saints have been wrung from the soul as God has led them along the pathway of sorrow to the land where sorrow is unknown. The absolute submission of the soul to God, out of which flows the peace that passeth all understanding, is seldom or never reached except through the ministry of suffering.

> We thank Thee, Lord, that all our joy
> Is touched with pain,
> That shadows fall on brightest hours,
> That thorns remain,
> That so earth's bliss may be our guide,
> And not our chain.
> For Thou who knowest, Lord, how soon
> Our weak heart clings,
> Hast given us joys, tender and true,
> Yet all with wings;
> So that we see, gleaming on high,
> Diviner things.

The Blankenberg Convention.

THE annual meetings of this Convention, instituted some nineteen years ago by the late Fräulein von Weling, were held last week, and attended by about 800 Christians from a wide area. From the Russian Baltic provinces, Southern Russia, Poland, Hungary, Holland, Switzerland, Asia Minor, representatives came to enjoy the blessed privileges of Christian fellowship.

Among the speakers were Dr. Baedeker, Pastors Stockmayer, Jellinghaus, and Mascher, Revs. E. W. Moore and F. B. Meyer (the Keswick representatives). The subject was Heb. i.-iv., specially chosen to afford a basis for the Vindication of the Authority and Integrity of the Word of God, not only against the critics, but against the views of Dr. Lepsius.

PLANS FOR THE FUTURE.

Dr. Lepsius is one of the most distinguished scholars and theologians in Germany, who accepts the supernatural elements in our Lord's Life, Death, and Resurrection, and whose views of the Cross of Jesus are remarkably deep and Evangelical. He is the one opponent on the Evangelical side, of whom Harnack has said that his arguments demand consideration. In his construction of lines of defence, Dr. Lepsius advanced an hypothesis about Cain and Abel, which deeply aroused the most conservative Evangelical school; and in spite of their remonstrances, has not seen his way to withdraw it. For this reason Pastor Stockmayer and others, in the opening meetings of the Convention, dissociated themselves from him by name. This policy aroused a considerable amount of discussion in the Conference. Many earnest people, fearing that Dr. Lepsius would be driven further from the Evangelical standpoint, questioned whether the Conference should be made use of for the introduction of argument and discussion on debateable points of this nature.

It was, therefore, finally agreed that in future the Conference should be devoted to the consideration of questions of the spiritual life, on the lines of the Keswick Convention, it being admitted that this was the idea that led to its original institution, and has been still further accentuated by the annual delegation of Keswick representatives. It was also felt that this was the more possible, as the orthodoxy of the Convention was safeguarded by the foundation principles of the Evangelical Alliance, on which the Allianz Haus at Blankenberg is based.

A Vacant Sphere.

THROUGH the kindness of a friend, The Christian follows me about in my wanderings. It is much valued, and I would not like to be without it. I thought that through your columns I might bring to the notice of your readers an interesting sphere of service. I am here on Thursday Island conducting a special mission. I have just come from the towns on the Gulf of Carpentaria, where I conducted the first series of services ever held by an evangelist. In the south of the Gulf, not far from the mainland, is a cluster of islands called the Wellesley group. There are blacks on all the islands, but no missionary has ever visited them.

A party of whites crossed the largest island, Mornington, for the first time this month. I travelled up the Gulf with a gentleman who formed one of the party. He thinks these island blacks are about as low in the scale of civilization as it is possible for men to be. They have not intelligence enough to build huts of any kind, and they wear no clothing. The glamour of romance throws its halo round the conception of work amongst these dark heathen, but it would be hard work to teach these poor things the Gospel of our Lord Jesus. The islands are within a few hours of civilization, and only seven weeks from the home-land. The missionary would have a unique influence. The natives are cut off by the sea from the baneful contact with white men. The present government is very sympathetic towards good work, and would give every facility.

I hope to return early next year to the Gulf. I will be glad to supply any further particulars desired. Letters addressed to Y.M.C.A., Brisbane, Queensland, will reach me. Some married Christian of means may hear in this letter a call to a noble task. Hugh Paton.

Automobile Evangelization.

TO evangelize France ought to be the bounden duty of every French Christian in the land. The privileges attached to Christianity should not be the exclusive possession of a few elect of birth and education. They are the common treasure, and the bread of life must be shared with spiritual paupers.

And yet, at the opening of the twentieth century, the joyful news of Christ's salvation is unknown to millions of our fellow citizens! How shall we announce it to them? So far the efforts have merely been local. We would try another method, that of itinerant evangelization, making use of the resources offered by modern science and industry. The strategic points already occupied by pastors being kept up, would serve as landmarks and bases of operations to further Christian endeavour. By automobile means the efficiency of the missionary may be trebled.

We propose to visit the towns and villages within a radius of thirty miles from Paris, to sell Bibles and tracts on market-places and in private houses, so as to spread the Word of God, to hold meetings (which, by the way, we have been asked to do), and, finally, to work to the revival of the popular conscience and the conversion of souls to Christ our Saviour and King. Then we will return to the places previously visited, where an encouraging first welcome would guarantee a second, and form groups which we would evangelize periodically.

From a financial point of view the plan is easy of execution. The sale of Bibles and religious books would about cover the expenses for the keeping of the motor-car. We can procure a very good second-hand machine for £80, and with £120 or £160 a year we can accomplish considerable work which, by the grace of God, may prove interesting and fruitful. A sum of £40 has already been subscribed for the work among French Christians interested. O. Foulquier,

Pastor of the Evangelical Church,

Comrades.

HYMN—Sacred Songs and Solos, No. 117.

"TWO are better than one!" said the writer of Ecclesiastes (iv. 9) a long time ago. "But," says the schoolboy of to-day, "it depends what you are talking about. If you mean apples, you are quite right; but if you mean a flogging or anything else that is unpleasant, I don't agree with you at all!"

Solomon, however, had in his mind something very different from either of these when he penned that short sentence. He understood better than either you or I do the difficulties and temptations of life, and knew the value of good companionships. Therefore, he adds, "If they fall, the one will lift up his fellow; but woe to him that is alone when he falleth, for he hath not another to help him up."

We all like other people to be kind enough to ease our burdens and help us in times of difficulty; but to ensure this we must be equally willing to render similar services to them. "A man that hath friends must show himself friendly" (Prov. xviii. 24), and one of the important lessons of life is care for others as well as ourselves. What a difference it makes in a family whether its members study each other's wants and feelings, or not! The time is sure to come when even the most selfish boy or girl will seek the help of others; whether they will get it or not may depend very largely on how they themselves treat those around them.

I once knew two little fellows, aged six and four. The younger had a pet starling, which, in a spirit of inquiry worthy of a better cause, found its way into a bath full of water, where, after a hopeless endeavour to reverse the laws of nature, it turned up its toes and died. Its baby owner thought it was learning to swim, but when he learned the tragic fact that it was really dead, he was beside himself with grief, which was not assuaged until a chubby arm stole round him, and a soothing voice exclaimed: "Never mind, dear; I'll give you half of my cat!" Many years ago the little comforter entered the city where all tears are wiped away by a tenderer hand; but the impress of his comradeship will ever remain—a hallowed memory of "the touch of a vanished hand," and "the sound of a voice that is still."

Every boy and girl should, if possible, have a comrade, or "chum." It is much more healthy for the mind than mooning about alone and avoiding the company of others. But of course everything depends upon what sort of person that chum is. A bad companion is much worse than none. Never have a friend who says and does things you would not like your parents to hear and see. Once when I was in America I visited a young man in prison who had got mixed up with bad companions, and had shot one of them in a drunken brawl; "but," he said," if I ever get out of this place, I'm determined I'll never go out at night again without my wife!" It was a curious remark to make, but it had a good deal of wisdom in it, for it meant that he would not have any companions that he would not like his wife to know.

The only safe way of choosing a companion or friend is to begin by taking Jesus as your first Friend, and then asking Him to help you to make a wise choice of others. "Two are better than one," when He and you walk through life together. Then, when you come to difficult places, He will "help you up," and keep you from falling into sin.

But for friends or companions to get on well together they must have similar ideas. The prophet Amos (iii. 3) asked, "Can two walk together, except they be agreed?" If Jesus is to be your companion there must be no disagreement between you and Him; you must ask Him to make you love what He loves, and dislike what He dislikes. Walking with Him as your Friend and Companion means going where He would go, and not going where He would not go; doing what He would do, and not doing what He would not do; stopping where He would stop, to speak a word of love and comfort to those who are in need. As He helps you, so you must try and help others, for His sake, for theirs, and for your own.

UNCLE TOM.

The Land of Anyhow.

BEYOND the Isle of WHAT'S-THE-USE,
Where SLIPSHOD Point is now,
There used to be, when I was young,
The land of ANYHOW.

DON'T CARE was king of all this realm,
A cruel king was he;
For those who served him with good heart
He treated shamefully.

When boys and girls their tasks would slight,
And cloud poor mother's brow,
He'd say, "Don't care, it's good enough,
Just do it anyhow."

But when in after life they longed
To make proud fortune bow,
He let them find that fate ne'er smiles
On work done "anyhow."

For he who would the harvest reap,
Must learn to use the plough;
And pitch his tent a long way from
The land of ANYHOW.

Power of Habit.—A California stage driver had held the lines for many years, and when he began to grow old his hands were crooked into hooks, and his fingers were stiffened in that shape so that they could not be straightened out. There is a similar process that goes on in men's souls when they continue to do the same things over and over. If you are trained, and train yourself, from childhood, to be gentle and patient, to control your temper, to resist wrong, your life will grow into beauty, and the peacefulness of your heart will at length shine upon your very face. On the other hand, if you give way from childhood to all ugly tempers, resentful feelings, all bitterness and anger, your life will grow into unloveliness and unrest.—J. R. Miller.

Indian Hymns.—A very interesting feature in the history of Protestant missions in India is that of the development of hymnody. The American Baptist Mission commenced operations in the great dependency, with Dr. Judson as pioneer, in 1848, but for years there was no singing. The doctor and other missionaries composed some hymns in the Burmese, but only very slowly did the service of song become at all popular. To-day the Society has a book with 294 hymns in Burmese, and others in various dialects with a number of familiar Moody and Sankey "Songs and Solos," of which the native teachers have translated many. The native music being usually of a plaintive character is scarcely suited to hymns of a joyous tone, but as the children are being taught in the mission schools, a great improvement is apparent, and appropriate music has been found for such old favourites as "Rock of Ages," "Just as I Am," "Art Thou Weary," and others, whilst the little ones delight in "There's a Friend for Little Children," "There is a Happy Land," and others which so many British Sunday-school children also sing week by week.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

Sunday, September 6, 1903.

Shoulder to Shoulder for God.
(John xvii. 20-23; 1 Cor. i. 10-13.)

THERE probably will always be sects; i.e., different minds will lay the emphasis differently. There will be some who prefer the argumentative manner of Paul, because it specially appeals to their logical faculty; and with them the view of the union of the race, originally in the first Adam, but finally in the Second, seems to answer all difficulties and shed a unique light on the dark problems of Creation and Destiny.

Others will prefer Apollos. They enjoy eloquence, the explanation of the ancient Levitical types, the fervour of genius. To others Peter's way of stating the truth will be chiefly fascinating, because he is preeminently the expounder of the sufferings of Christ, and dwells so tenderly on the compensations and comforts which God will mete out to His suffering ones. Others again will always get back to Christ. They are somewhat impatient of these interpreters of Christ, and long for Christ, only Christ. Of this and the other they say this is Pauline, and that Petrine, give us Christ. The Methodist likes the deeply spiritual exercises of the prayer, the band, and the class-meetings; whilst the Presbyterian enjoys the chaste and argued presentation of truth in the intellectual and abstract. We might indefinitely illustrate this point.

But in the midst of these apparent diversities there may be a most real and blessed unity. Schism, i.e., division, only comes in when one boasts his "doxy" against all the rest, as though none could be right who failed to pronounce Shibboleth with his accent. When angry feeling and recrimination come in, when one Christian anathematizes others; when a Christian body pretends to an exclusive faithfulness to God which leaves all others in the cold; though it should make the unity of the body of Christ its chief tenet, it proves itself to be schismatic. Schism is the proud boastfulness of the spirit which, by un-Christianizing others, un-Christianizes itself first of all.

But amid apparent diversity in doctrine, in administration, in views of truth, there may be a very real unity. Just as a house is one, though its materials are infinitely different; as the army is one, though its regiments have different uniforms and accoutrements; as the body is one, though the members are unlike in their appearance and function; as the Blessed Trinity is one, and yet there are the three Divine Persons—so the unity that our Lord prayed for was modelled upon that glorious pattern, "that they may be one as We are one."

To have uniformity would involve death. When all bricks are modelled on the same pattern, when all boots are turned out after one fashion, you know that in a collection of the one or the other you have that uniformity which is the sign of dead materials, which man has passed through his machinery. But take a plant, a child's growing body, a city full of people, and in their multiformity you are convinced of the irresistibleness of an abounding life that manifests itself as it will.

This is the glory of the Church of Christ which the Bridegroom has given the bride; and wherever this is manifested, the world begins to believe that the Redeemer has been sent forth from the Father. In other words, love is the one argument that convinces men. Force will not do it, argument will not do it, eloquence and learning will not do it; love is the one quality in which the world can detect only a heavenly origin.

Let all our Endeavourers hold these views. Let them refuse to be alienated from any who disagree with them in outward matters, and insist on recognising as fellow-members all who hold the Head. Let all such stand shoulder to shoulder, magnifying the points in which they agree, and minimising those in which they differ, and the effect will be like sunlight on the dew.

C.E. NOTE.

British Endeavourers are cheered by the following items of interest about Australian Endeavourers:—The choir of three hundred children at a Union Rally each brought one penny, which was afterwards sent to needy families. A small country society recently raised the sum of £17 for Home Missions, which is just typical of doings of other societies.

Troops at Lydd.—Mr. F. E. Wootton writes that, under the supervision of Miss Jerams, the work of the Lydd Soldiers' Home continues to prosper, and shows signs of further development. "Last week nearly a hundred soldiers used the home. It is conducted on quite unsectarian lines, men of all denominations being equally welcome." Communications may be sent to Mr. Wootton, 43, Earl Street, Maidstone; or to Miss Jerams, at the Home.

Golden Text—Psa. cxxxiii. 1.

TWO days after David's conquest of the Amalekites and return to Ziklag, news came to him of the death of Saul and his three sons, with the defeat of the armies of Israel on Mount Gilboa. He mourned for king and friend. "The song of the bow" (v. 18). The country was disorganized, Israel in the hands of the Philistines, David a vassal of King Achish, only Judah favourably disposed towards him. If ever he needed Divine guidance it was then. He begun aright (ii. 1); had found like help before (1 Sam. xxii. 9, 10; xxiii. 9-12; xxx. 1, 8).

David's Training.

He was born to the heritage of a genial, generous disposition from his great grandfather Boaz; a godly devotion from Ruth. His early days were spent in the homely industry of his father's homestead. He was schooled on the hills of Bethlehem; caught language and melody from the voices of nature, the thunderclap or the bird's song, the lion's roar or the bleat of the lost sheep, rocks and caves, forests, fields and flowers. "No speech nor language, without these, their voice is heard" (Psa. xix. 1-6). In the court of Saul he learned the business of state affairs, the value of true friendship, the bitterness of enmity. He learned also self-control. In the caves he learned by experience the hardships and trials of the people over whom he would one day reign. He learned the art of war. At last God called him to the throne of Israel. If your early life is hardship, suffering, trial, or temptation, let the Lord mould you by them into "vessels of honour" for His use. Is He training you to be a king? (Rev. v. 10), "Yield yourselves unto God" (Rom. vi. 13).

David made King.

By Divine command and Judah's acceptance. Looked first to God for His guidance. Shared no ill feeling towards Saul; regarded him as "the Lord's anointed," as he would now have the people regard himself; commended the action of the men of Jabesh-Gilead; proved that though Abner and Ish-bosheth were opposed to him, Jehovah was with him according to His promise (Rom. viii, 31).

Points to Remember.

(1) David had to wait eighte n years between the time of his private anointing by Samuel (1 Sam. xv. 3) and public reception as king by all Israel (2 Sam. v. 3). He believed God, and bided His time. "He that believeth shall not make haste" (Isa. xxviii. 16). If we "keep step with Jesus" in early life we shall find it easy to "walk with God" in old age (Gen. v. 22). Then "they shall walk with Me in white" (Rev. iii. 4).

(2) Judah anointed David as their king early and voluntarily (Matt. xxi. 15, 16). The Hosannas of the children gave the Lord joy then, and so they do now.

(3) David did not ask for guidance and then go his own way, nor for one step only and take the next himself. "Each step of life's untrodden path Thy love shall guide." Saul leaned on his "own understanding" and so made a false step (1 Sam. xiii. 13, 14).

(4) We have no Urim and Thummim, but we have the Word of God and His Living Spirit, and if we ask we shall receive (Ps. cxix. 130; Acts viii. 29).

(5) When David had to take up the responsibilities of his kingship he knew where to look for wisdom, because he had proved (Prov. viii. 17. "Wisdom," v. 1).

(6) David lived among and as one of his people, learned to fight their foes, to understand their characters and circumstances, to sympathize in their sorrows (Phil. ii. 7, 8; Heb. iv. 15).

(7) Young Christians sometimes drift into the enemy's camp. God made "a way of escape" for David when he asked Him. "Thou art my King, O God; command deliverances" for me (Psa. xliv. 4).

(8) Whom are you serving, King Jesus or the prince of darkness? (Eph. ii. 2.) Whose spirit is working in you, a rebel or a soldier? Rebels must "ground their arms at Jesus' feet" (Matt. xxv. 41). Soldiers must be obedient, loyal, brave, and true. "The crowning day is coming by and by."

inquiring of the lord.

One winter, some years ago, Dr. Barnardo was more than usually in need of blankets for the cots of the children, but had not the money to buy them. He prayed about the matter, and followed up his prayer with a visit to a warehouse, where he selected blankets to the value of a hundred pounds. Fearing to incur debt, the doctor did not actually buy the goods, but went home and again fervently laid the needs of the little ones before God. The following day a cheque was received from a well-wisher "to provide additional warmth during the inclement weather." Dr. Barnardo inquired of the Lord, as did David. God honoured the inquiry in each instance, and when the King in our lesson asked if he should go up into any of the cities of Judah, the Lord said, Go up (v. 1). God as truly hears and answers prayer to-day.

Our own King Alfred had an experience not unlike that of King David. When hunted by the Danes he was in service, for a time, as a shepherd. On coming to the throne he found the people in a comparatively lawless condition. Being a Christian, King Alfred framed a code of laws, very simple, but sufficient, founded upon the Scriptures of the Old and the New Testament. He prefaced his code by the Ten Commandments, and added the words of the Lord, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." "By this one commandment," continued the King, "a man shall know whether he does right." As with Alfred, so with David. He augurated a new régime, and having inquired of the Lord, he followed His word, and took his men and dwelt in the cities of Hebron (v. 3). Let the commandments of the Lord be our guide and we shall control the kingdoms within us as truly as any earthly king controls his domains.

It has been observed that in the workings of nature, opposition is often needed to ensure real success. For instance, the Emperor moth, in emerging from its chrysalis, escapes from the cocoon through an opening which seems altogether disproportionate. Before now, an onlooker has thought to assist nature by enlarging the exit, so that the moth might emerge with less difficulty. When the insect has at last escaped from its prison, it has been found to be deformed, and quite unfitted for its winged life of the future. The very opposition the moth encounters is for its good, and its wings are shaped and strengthened by the seeming difficulty of its exit. King David found opposition in Ish-bosheth, the son of Saul. Abner, the son of Ner, made him King in Gilead (8 and 9). God, however, was on the side of David.

awaiting his appearance.

For many years after the ancient Britons were conquered and driven out of the land, they believed King Arthur was not really dead. The opinion was held that he was sleeping in the Isle of Avalon, and their hope was maintained by the anticipation of the day when he would awake and set them free, and though it was but a fable buoying up the Britons, the effect was magical. They looked for the day when the kingdom of King Arthur should be reinstated, and they would be again victorious. The lesson to-day is a figure of another day of crowning, when the Lord shall return. King David brought joy to Judah, and eventually to Israel; King Jesus shall bring peace on the earth when He shall return in His glory. Are we looking to the glad day when our King shall return?

"The Beautiful."

"The Beautiful"—'tis all around,
If thou canst but discern;
Some "thing of beauty" may be found
At every glance and turn.
'Tis not alone in glowing skies,
And twilight meadows fair;
Where least expected it may rise,
For it is everywhere.

In stony places of the earth,
True beauty may be seen;
In darksome corners it hath birth
In blades of tender green.
And 'mid the world's rough din and strife
True beauty may be heard;
In sweet surprise it bursts to life,
Like note of freed wild bird.

Go, kindly take some hardened hand
In tender, graceful clasp,
And thou wilt scarcely understand
The quick, responsive grasp.
Some little prayer of childhood years,
Some word of beauty speak;
And thou may'st see the sudden tears
Roll down the rugged cheek.

There's not a soul so seared by sin,
Not one so hardened grown,
But yet "the Beautiful" within
Will leap forth to its own.
"The Beautiful," beneath, above,
Around, think, live, confess;
'Tis rightly said, "Love calls forth love,"
And beauty does no less.

Then may we skilfully dispel
The darkness we may find;
And multiply "the Beautiful"
By calling forth its kind.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

BLACKPOOL.

REV. DR. HENRY, after a few weeks' visit to America, reached Liverpool on Saturday last. On Sabbath he conducted three meetings in connection with the Y.M.C.A. Gospel services held in the Hippodrome, Blackpool, where visitors were gathered from all parts of the kingdom—with far-reaching results. To many it was a disappointment that the visit could not be extended beyond the day; but it is hoped that a future mission may be arranged.

Consciences were touched and hearts deeply searched in a manner impossible to describe. Dr. Henry is truly "aflame with the tremendous import of his theme, and his eloquence charms and compels action." As a Gospel preacher and temperance speaker he seems to stand alone and unequalled for force and power. So deep was the feeling at the close of the services that scores were impelled to come boldly forward before the large congregation and sign the pledge—the one adopted by the late Miss Frances Ridley Havergal in 1879. Had we used the usual pledge form, and Dr. Henry's method of passing it from seat to seat been available, no doubt we should have had a far larger number.

Mr. T. Armon Jones, the able singing colleague of Dr. Henry, who seems also specially raised up of God for this campaign, renders yeoman service in the singing of the Gospel solos, and we cannot but feel of each of them—"thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this."

Christians have had new life and energy imparted to them, and vows have been solemnly made for more valiant and devoted service in the future. Lemuel Jones.

KING'S LYNN.

As we go to press (Tuesday evening), a mission has been opened at King's Lynn, where thorough preparation had been made. The meetings had been announced by house-to-house visitation. To take full advantage of the opportunity to strengthen the Band of Hope cause, a plan was drawn up for the members to march in sections and occupy places reserved for them in the hall.

Missions to Seamen.—On the Antarctic relief ship, Terra Nova, putting into Portland a few days ago, she was boarded by the Missions to Seamen chaplain, who in the course of conversation with the crew, found them to be without the necessary books for holding Divine service during their long voyage. They very gratefully accepted a "service box," which the chaplain was able to supply. Some general literature was also welcomed by the crew; and the old whaler left Portland, in tow of the cruiser Minerva, to relieve the Discovery. It is hoped that the Bibles and prayer-books which the "service box" contains may be a source of much blessing to the men on their way to the ice, which they hope to reach at the end of December.

Soldiers at Newcastle.—That the Soldiers' Home, Spital Tongues, Newcastle-on-Tyne, supplies a pressing need is proved by the number of men who make use of its advantages. On the authority of the report for 1902 no fewer than 2,000 slept in the Home, being exclusively soldiers, their families, or friends. In addition to the continual round of real home life, social and Christian work is carried on daily. On Sunday there is a school service for the garrison children and evangelistic services for the soldiers, their wives, and friends. Other meetings occupy the week evenings, such as a mothers' gathering, Band of Hope, Bible classes, and temperance meetings. During last session 130 soldiers signed the pledge, and several have given themselves to Christ. The officers of the garrison who have visited the building have testified to the way the highest interests of the soldiers are ministered to. When the new wing is added, the Home will compare favourably with any of its kind in the United Kingdom.

Obituary.

REV. CANON IRVINE.

DEEP and sincere regret is felt by all classes in Belfast at the death of Rev. Canon Irvine, D.D., who has died suddenly at Port St. Mary, Isle of Man, where he had been spending a holiday. The canon had been rector of St. Stephen's Church, Belfast, for thirty years, and had gathered together in one of the poorest districts of the city a congregation of a thousand persons. He was an earnest worker, and a most devoted minister and pastor. His funeral, which was attended by many of the very poor, was one of the largest ever seen in Belfast, and was in itself a remarkable testimony to the affectionate esteem in which he was held.

MR. RICHARD MOON BROCKLEBANK.

We regret to announce the decease, in his sixty-first year, of this Christian gentleman, that took place on the 27th inst. at his residence, The Firs, Great Malvern. His deep interest in the Lord's work both at home and abroad is well known, and many will miss the genial welcome given to those who solicited, and not in vain, his help, whether in England, or at his winter residence in Cannes, France. During his brief illness faith in his Saviour shone brightly, and though deeply attached to his wife, and enjoying fully his lovely earthly surroundings, yet the prospect of seeing and being with his Saviour obliterated all regrets, once more fulfilling the words, "Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." He wished these words to be placed upon his tombstone for the encouragement of any young people who might see them: "By the grace of God, brought to Christ at the age of twenty-three, Eph. ii. 8; Jude 24."

MRS. TIMOTHY RICHARD.

The missionary circle has lost one of its much-loved members by the home-call to Mrs. Timothy Richard. As a Sunday-school teacher, and as a governess in George Square Merchant Company's College, Mary Martin was distinguished for her fine influence on those under her charge. Soon after going out to China as a missionary she became the wife of Dr. Timothy Richard. The first years of married life were spent at Tai-yuan-fu, Shansi, when that province was devastated by the awful famine of 1877-8. At Tientsin she trained Bible-women, some of whom afterwards became leaders in the Christian church, and took a leading part in getting the Christian women of China to present the Dowager-Empress with a New Testament on her sixtieth birthday in 1894, Mrs. Richard writing the letter which accompanied the gift. When in Pekin she taught English to sons of high mandarins, as well as to the son of the Japanese Minister and two Japanese Legation secretaries.

On Dr. Richard's removal to Shanghai, besides teaching English in the families of high mandarins, Mrs. Richard found time to give efficient help at the office of the Diffusion Society, translating, among other books, part of Jeremy Taylor's "Holy Living," and Lord Northbrook's "Sayings of Jesus."

We hope to give in an early issue some fuller account of the life and labours of Mrs. Richard.

A SPANISH REFORMER.

The Reformed Church of Spain has suffered the loss of one of its most learned presbyters, who for nearly thirty years has borne a consistent testimony to the faith he possessed. Like Bishop Cabrera, Señor Baquero was a member of the teaching order of the pious school; and when quite a young man found himself forced to abandon the Roman priesthood and devote himself to the work of bringing the knowledge of the truth to the hearts of his fellow-countrymen.

For more than fifteen years he has been minister of the church of the Ascension, Seville, where his expository sermons and quiet perseverance in well-doing won him many friends, who owe to him direction to the wisdom that maketh wise unto salvation. Five years ago his tactful action, during an outbreak of ultramontane bigotry, was largely instrumental in retaining for the reformers the right of keeping the door of a church open during Divine service—a right illegally withheld in Madrid. On that occasion the Government stood by the reformers, and removed from office the deputy governor of Seville, who acted tyrannically.

Señor Baquero's last illness—prolonged and painful—was borne with characteristic courage, and he resented all efforts on the part of friends to secure quiet by dismissing the children from the school. He died on August 26 as he lived, trusting in his Saviour, respected by all with whom he came in contact. It is cheering to know that Bishop Cabrera hopes next month to ordain in Madrid four deacons and one presbyter, who will fill gaps in the ranks of the faithful pastors who are prepared to go forward in the time of liberty which is dawning in Spain. T. J. P.

REV. JOHN HORNE.

A useful though quiet life was brought to a close by the call to higher service which reached Rev. John Horne on Monday of last week. Educated at Horton Baptist College, he entered the ministry in 1858, holding pastorates at Halifax, Evesham, and Cullompton. At all three places he much loved, and left many friends and well-wishers behind.

The evening of his days was spent at Wood Green, in North London, where he much enjoyed the fellowship at Westbury Avenue Baptist Church (Rev. F. Horace Newton). Struggling causes within a considerable radius found in him a warm friend. He preached a full and free salvation with the note of personal conviction; and was also much used to the edification of believers, by whom some of his utterances will be long cherished. A class which he conducted for the training of Christian workers was highly appreciated, and his place as president will be hard to fill.

Mr. Horne was described by one friend as somewhat reserved, reticent when desirable, quiet, and unobtrusive, always seeming to think a great deal more than he spoke, and to feel much that he could not express. His life was a busy and strenuous one to the end, for he could not be idle while there was so much to do.

On Lord's Day, August 23, Mr. Horne preached at Watford Congregational Church, where his ministrations were warmly appreciated. Taken ill in the train on Monday morning, he passed in a few minutes to be with the Lord. A peaceful home-going closed a beautiful life lived truly to the glory of God.

Personalia.

Mr. Charles Inglis, who has been preaching in Norway during the past fortnight, leaves this week for meetings in Switzerland.

Rev. Dr. T. L. Cuyler has been spending his time of holiday at Lake Mohonk Mountain Home, a popular Christian summer resort in Ulster County, New York State. Though carrying the weight of more than eighty years, he rejoices to be able to preach the Gospel every Sabbath, even when thus absent from home.

Professor Szabo, of the Theological Academy, Budapest, who is well known in connection with Evangelical efforts in Hungary, is now on a visit to England, and will be glad of opportunities of speaking about the difficulties and needs of Christian work in Hungary. His present address is c/o the China Inland Mission, Newington Green, N.

In view of Rev. F. B. Meyer's labours in America, extending over many years, it was not at all surprising that Temple College, Philadelphia, should seek to honour him by conferring on him the degree of Doctor of Divinity. Mr. Meyer has, however, intimated his intention not to use the title. "It would," he says, "be altogether unbecoming to one of my too scant attainments to figure as a Doctor of Divinity, and it would rob me of my simplicity and naturalness. I hope that editors of religious papers will notice this, as nothing would disturb me more than to find people calling me Doctor. It would give a suspicion of superiority over ordinary people, and hedge me round from my working men and their wives and children."

About Books.

BOOKS ON PROPHECY.

A COMPACT book on a great subject is Hints on the Book of Daniel. By Alfred H. Burton. (2s. Carter.) The author has a twofold aim —to vindicate the inspired character and literary integrity of the prophecy, and then to unfold, in a plain way, the several visions; and this he does upon what have come to be known as "Futurist" lines. The outcome of careful study and reverent thought, the volume deserves consideration in the study of Daniel's book.

The End of the Bible: A Book on Prophecy for Young Christians. By Mrs. John Stewart Oliphant. (3s. 6d. Marshall Bros.) After twenty-one short chapters on Old Testament prophecy, the author comes to the New, dealing with the Revelation in particular, completing her work in forty-eight chapters. The treatment is "Futurist"—"the things which shall be after these," being regarded as relating to times after the Church has been taken from earthly scenes. From first to last, however, the book is the work of a thorough student of Holy Scripture, and cannot but be read with profit by earnest inquirers after truth.

The Apocalypse; or, The Day of the Lord. This is a volume of 750 pages, reprinted from "Things to Come." In it, Dr. Bullinger gives an exposition of the Book of Revelation, with more or less continual reference to prophecy in general. In a word, the Book is regarded as dealing with Israel and not the Church; and with chapter iv. begin visions of the judgments with which Christ will visit the earth in His "day" yet to come. Neither in plan nor execution does Dr. Bullinger follow any of the accepted "schools"; he discusses questions of structure, translation, interpretation, and application, with schemes, divisions, and references that testify to prodigious labour in the arrangement of details. Though calculated to provoke keen controversy, this also is a book fully worthy the attention of students who would consider the inspired Word from all points of view (5s. Eyre and Spottiswoode.)

Christ, Anti-Christ, and Millennium. By Rev. David D. Rutledge, M.A., M.B., &c. (7s. 6d. net. Marshall Brothers.) Over eight hundred large pages, from the pen of one who seems to have read everything, and in particular to have studied the Scriptures of Truth. Though taking the "Futurist" view, the author makes a path for himself on many important points. He regards the "man-child" of Rev. xii. as the "one that restraineth till he be taken out of the way," and holds that the Holy Spirit will continue His ministry on earth right through the present dispensation, and after the rapture of the saints has taken place. Dr. Rutledge controverts many of the contentions of what have come to be known as standard expositions of prophecy, especially those on "Historicist" lines. No one can object to his independence, in view of the fact that he makes substantial contributions to the discussion of questions of absorbing interest. At the end of the book are several excursuses on important subjects, enriching the work, and obviously making it of peculiar service for purposes of comparative reference.

Talks to Boys and Girls (1s. 6d. net. Revell), by Sydney Strong, are just such pithy papers as will make our young friends think, and that to good purpose, on spiritual things.

In a series of interesting talks to children—About Money. (1s. 6d. Revell.)—Perry Wayland Sinks points, in clear and lucid style, some valuable lessons about the use of money from the standpoint of the Christian life.

Workers among the young, in the great temperance cause, will find practical help in a booklet, entitled, Suggestions for Improvement in the Methods of Conducting the Devotional Exercises at Band of Hope Meetings, by Annie B. Salmon, editor of the Young Abstainer. The pages reproduce a paper read at a conference of the Hackney and East Middlesex Band of Hope Union, and they are well worth attention. (1d. R. J. James, 3 and 4, London House Yard, E.C.)

It is gratifying to learn that in many quarters a revival of interest in the magazine Rest and Reaping is being manifested. The September issue is an attractive number. A timely article on "The Seasons of the Soul," by Rev. I. E. Page, deals with the lessons which autumn brings home to the heart; Miss Lucy E. Bennett contributes a brief homily on the words, "I will give you rest;" and Colonel Oldham a helpful exposition of Rom. v. 10. Numerous poems and illustrated items of missionary news, home and foreign, combine to make a paper which appeals to an even wider community than is helped by Miss Mason's beneficent ministry. (1d. Morgan & Scott.)

Tonford Manor: A pre-Reformation Story. By Sardius Hancock. (3s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin). A pretty story, giving glimmerings of the unrest which took possession of the English people just before the Reformation. Speaking of Hugh Latimer, the author says: "The penetrating intellect, the determination to find the truth, the subtlety, readiness, and dexterity of his mind, he inherited from his mother. The inflexible will, the bold spirit, the large conscience, he owed to his father. The blend of all these qualities gave him a genius that was his own."

Five Aspects of the Church of God. By Thomas P. Gorst. (3d. Partridge.) A thoughtful booklet on the Church—in Divine Contemplation, Formation, Preservation, Presentation, and Manifestation.

Large numbers of helpful tracts and leaflets have been issued by Messrs. Pearce & Co., formerly of Putney, but now of The Pantiles, Tunbridge Wells. The Edenvale Leaflets find wide acceptance (assorted packets, 7d. post free).

Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Sons have in preparation, for publication early in the forthcoming season, three new libraries of reward books in uniform bindings, to be issued at 1s., 1s. 6d., and 2s. per volume respectively. Mrs. Rundle Charles' classic, The Schonberg-Cotta Family, will lead off the Two-shilling Series, and this will be followed by Miss Alcock's Spanish Brothers, Annie Lucas's Leonie, and Within Iron Walls, and volumes by Harold Avery, Fred Whishaw, &c.

Mr. Henry Frowde has just acquired a series of drawings on wood made by George Cruikshank nearly fifty years ago, to illustrate "The Pilgrim's Progress." These drawings have never yet been published, and they will form the chief feature of an edition de luxe of Bunyan's masterpiece, which will be issued from the Oxford University Press in the autumn. Some of the drawings were cut on wood under the artist's own direction, and the others have now been similarly prepared, and each is to be printed as a separate plate on Japanese paper. For upwards of thirty years these drawings have been in the possession of a well-known collector, who was a friend of Cruikshank, and they are thoroughly characteristic of the artist's genius.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE first stone of the building of the Oporto Association has just been laid. The progress of the work in this city is rapid.

New premises have been opened for the Y.M.C.A. in Reykjavik, Iceland. These include a good hall with sitting accommodation for 200.

In Basle there are sixteen societies, with a membership of 971. Several of these work among bakers and hotel employés.

At the forty-fifth general meeting of the Belgium Associations, it was reported that there are now in Belgium, thirty-four Y.M.C.A.'s with a membership of 1,390. This is a slight decrease in the number of centres, but an increase in the membership.

At a recent meeting of the Council of the Glasgow United Young Men's Christian Association it was reported that the total membership for the year ended June 30 was 7,750, being an increase of 791 over the previous year. There are now 213 branches of the association, an increase of twelve. The enrolment for the educational classes numbers 2,718, as compared with 2,330 last year. The holiday camp has proved a greater success than ever, there having been over 700 bookings. A small financial balance is in hand after paying all expenses.

A plenary session of the World's Committee was recently held at Geneva, when representatives were present from Great Britain, Germany, North America, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Holland, Sweden, and Switzerland. The meeting celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the foundation of the Committee, and addresses of congratulation were presented from the National Councils of England and several other countries. M. Charles Fermaud, who has been general secretary throughout the entire period, was presented with a number of testimonies of affection and gratitude, among these being an album containing many signatures representing the various countries of the Alliance.

The Story of a Crime.—We have already called attention to the 4 pp. leaflet, published by Messrs. Gowans Bros., in which the remarkable story related in our columns by the vicar of Sileby, Loughborough, is reproduced. The narrative is now printed in large-size tract form, under the same title, "Tell Them ——!" The illustration shows the constable bidding good-bye to his little one on that fatal night, and the child appealing to him not to go out again. For temperance crusades and missions among working men, nothing could be more suitable for distribution than these thrilling messages of murderers whose crime was the undoubted outcome of drink. Welsh Notes.

THE centenary of the Hebron Congregational church, Pembroke, has just been held. The celebration took the form of preaching services, at which all the ministers and preachers who had been members of the church in past years took part.

Two Welsh missionaries in China, Rev. Hopkyn Rees and Rev. Mr. Bridge, have just been honoured by the Emperor of China. They have both had the dignity of "Prefect" conferred upon them. This is the highest honour open to those who are not natives of the country.

In reply to a Welsh correspondent, Mr. Arthur Chamberlain has written a letter in which he expresses the hope that at the next general election all friends of temperance "will take care that candidates for Parliamentary honours in their localities shall represent the moral sense of the community on this important question."

The steady aggression of Roman Catholicism in Wales continues. A new chapel is to be erected at Barmouth. The estimated cost is £2,000, and already amongst the contributors are several Protestants. At Aberystwyth a convent has been established by the nuns of the order of the "Filles de St. Esprit." Nuns of the Ursuline Order have also taken the mansion of Abermarde, near Aberystwyth, as a permanent home.

Not the least of the services rendered by the late Dean Vaughan to the Church of England was his work in training young clergymen. No fewer than 400 were prepared by him for orders in the Church. Several have attained to high distinction, notably the present Archbishop of Canterbury. A proposal is on foot to hold a reunion of the clergymen in the north of England and the Midlands who were trained by the late Dean.

Through the kindness of a generous Christian lady, thirty of the evangelists of the Welsh Forward Movement were enabled to attend the recent Convention for the deepening of the spiritual life held at Llandrindod. Following the convention came a conference of the evangelists, which lasted for three days. During our own recent visit to Llandrindod we learned that of the ministers who came to the Convention many highly appreciated the truths taught and testified to blessing received.

The marked decline in Sunday-school attendance in Wales is a serious and depressing fact. Presumably official action will be taken to discuss the matter and to devise some means of preventing further retrogression in so important a department of Christian work. One effort in this direction is being already promoted. In the populous mining valley of Aberdare, several Congregational churches have banded together to hold a united class. This will have for its chief object the training of Sunday-school teachers.

On Thursday last a new chapel was opened at Llansannan, Denbighshire, in memory of the late Dr. Gwilym Rees, better known throughout the Principality by his bardic name of Hiraethog. Mr. Herbert Roberts, M.P., delivered an address in which he paid a high tribute to the memory of one who he declared had worked strenuously and sacrificed much for the good of his fellow-men. Dr. Rees was a great poet, a great writer, and a great preacher, and a man whose life-work was inspired and shaped by the deepest religious convictions.

Isle of Man Convention.

THE annual convention for the promotion of practical holiness was held at Castletown, on August 18 and 19, the town hall being filled by the large audiences. Rev. J. M. Spicer (Vicar of Malew) presided. At the opening gathering a Bible-reading was given by Rev. A. G. Whaley on "Walking in the Light." Rev. S. A. Selwyn followed with an address on Romans vi. 8, remarking that there are three ways of dealing with sin: (1) Yielding to it: (2) fighting against it in a half-hearted way in our own strength; (3) "dying to it." In the evening Mr. Whaley gave a Bible-reading in which he took as his key-note Isa. vi. 5, Mr. Selwyn following him with an address (Heb. xiii. 13).

Wednesday's proceedings began with an early prayer meeting. In the afternoon Mr. Whaley gave his third Bible reading on the subject of "Rest." Mr. Selwyn presented what he termed a bird's-eye view of Ephesians, showing how in chap. i. God's people are chosen to be holy; in chap. ii. the method of holiness is set down; in chap. iii. the blessing to be shared is revealed; in chap. iv. the reader is shown what God expects from Christian believers; while chap. v. shows the necessity of being filled with the Spirit. In the evening the two series of addresses were closed, Mr. Whaley's Bible reading being on "The Work of the Holy Spirit," and Mr. Selwyn's address on 2 Chron. xxix. 10. Among others who took part in the Convention were Canons Christopher and Kewley, Rev. W. Bradbury, and Colonel Major.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

The Gospel on Clapham Common.

ON only a small portion of Clapham Park do the authorities permit meetings of any kind to be held. On a recent Sunday afternoon I found many different groups within the area, and I had a general look round before I went to the meeting where I had arranged to speak. Here were some folks known as "Flattists," who were wasting their time trying to persuade their hearers that the world is flat, not round. A little distance off was a man whom the late Mr. Gawin Kirkham declared "had disturbed every open-air meeting in London"; he was preaching Antinomianism to four or five men and a small boy.

Further over, near the railings, were a number of simple Christians, seeking God's blessing in prayer before beginning their Gospel service. On the other side were Salvation Army friends with their band. Besides these were one or two smaller groups which I had not time to visit, with one or two other faddists, and a large political meeting. When I relate that most of the Gospel meetings had brass instruments to lead the singing, and all were within sound of each other, it will readily be understood that when I began to preach from "Through this Man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins," I longed for the quiet of Hyde Park, where happily no instrumental music is allowed. However, we gathered a goodly share of the people, and I was inspired and kept close to the finished work of the Lord Jesus by observing in the crowd two Roman Catholic priests who remained among the most attentive of my listeners. May the Lord save them.

Mr. Chas. Hall who arranged these particular services is to be congratulated on their success though he has been at death's door through a chill caught when beginning them. At 6.30, there being only one other meeting, the quietness and order was delightful, and amidst breathless attention I spoke with a sympathetic heart, the love of Christ, constraining me, from the words of our Lord in Mark iii., "In danger of eternal damnation." As darkness drew on the crowd increased, and there was a solemn hush, all feeling the Spirit of the Lord was doing His work.

Chas. Cook.

The Open-Air Mission.

For several years past it has been the privilege of the Open-Air Mission to send a band of workers to Great Yarmouth during the height of the summer season. The services were this year carried on through the month of August with evident tokens of blessing following the simple proclamation of the Gospel. The local authorities have shown their sympathy with the work by placing a most convenient corner of the sea wall at the disposal of the missioners, where some hundreds of people can be conveniently brought together. Each weekday forenoon (Saturday excepted) finds a fair congregation gathered around the crimson banner of the mission; while at the evening service the crowd extends along the sea-wall to the limit of the speakers' voice.

Visitors from practically all parts of England attend the services. On Sundays the "Singers' Ring"—a large circular space on the sands, surrounded by a canvas screen, well lighted and seated for about 1,500 people—is, by the kindness of the Corporation, available for the services, of which there are three.

The missioners are well supported in the conduct of the services by a willing band of visitors, many of whom have themselves received blessing on the sands in previous years. The names and addresses of a considerable number of those professing conversion have been taken in the course of the month. Provision will be made for following up, as far as possible, each individual case.

Many spontaneous testimonies, both written and oral, have already been received as to blessing derived through the mission just concluded. Not the smallest opposition has been encountered from scoffers, the meetings throughout have been perfectly uninterrupted.

The daily morning prayer meeting, held as usual in Miss Foreman's drawing-room, was well attended, and proved a real blessing to many of those present. Several local clergymen and ministers showed their kind appreciation of the work generally. Revs. Bevan, Marriott, Rose, and Dixon took part in the services. Without any attempt to tabulate results, it may be mentioned that a London gentleman, who had lived his entire life without any thought of religion, was present at many of the meetings. He gladly accepted a Marked Testament, which he is now studying carefully, and sent a cheque for the funds of the mission.

Several cases of conversion have been recorded, and from one a letter of thanks has been received from Leicester, together with a hearty offer of hospitality to the members of the mission on the occasion of their visit to that town at the end of this month. The missioners were Dr. Churcher (North African Mission), Colonel Sage, and Messrs. Gerald Coultas, Roland French, and Cockrem (Secretary, Open-air Mission, 11, Adam Street, Street, W.C., and

On the Devonshire Coast.

God has very graciously blessed the special mission conducted by Messrs. W. L. Parker, Charles Christenson, and E. Upton (of the Open Air Mission, London), assisted by Rev. John B. and Mrs. Pickstock (of the Gospel Union Mission, Brixham, Devon). Altogether thirty-two open-air services have been held, besides ten indoor gatherings at the Gospel Union Mission Hall, Brixham, and about twenty souls have been led to accept Christ as their Saviour.

During the mission several towns and villages along the shores of Tor Bay have been visited, where open air services have been held, and a large number of Gospel tracts have been distributed to people in their homes, in the highways and byeways, in the crowded streets, and along the seaside. The following are some of the places visited: Kingswear (at the mouth of the River Dart), Churston, Paignton (where vast crowds gathered around as we stood on the beach and preached the Gospel to those attending the regatta), Brixham, on the fish market, on the quay, among the fisher-folk, and in the back streets and alleys, and in the mission hall (which has been crowded). Torquay and Dartmouth were also visited, and much fruitful missioning done among those attending the regattas. A. P.

Mr. Frank Weaver in Hyde Park.

Mr. Frank Weaver has just closed a month's work in Hyde Park and Hyde Park Hall, and we are pleased with his visit. He has done well, and the meetings have been largely attended, and fruit been gathered in. His voice was capable of reaching to the fringe of our largest gathering on Sunday evenings, and his addresses full of fire and earnestness.

The week-night meetings in the Park have been most interesting, and the number of men attending phenomenal. In the after-meetings in the Hall, a number of both sexes have confessed Christ. One of these was a young Roman Catholic girl, who was dreadfully afraid of having entered any place other than a Catholic church, but who has written since: "You will be glad to know I am trusting in Jesus alone for my salvation. I do believe His precious blood has paid for all my sins, and now having accepted Him as my Saviour He has pardoned my sins. The books you sent me helped me much, and specially the hymn:—

Come with your burden to Jesus,
Sinner that's all you can do;
No need to wait for salvation,
Jesus stands waiting for you." C. C.

Rev. Jesse Mayo's Itinerary.

After visiting Castleacre, the National Free Church Council Van spent a week at Sporle, and well-attended meetings were held in the Baptist and Primitive Methodist churches, conducted by Rev. Jesse Mayo. Notwithstanding the unfavourable weather and the harvest operations, a good week's work was done, and several young people received spiritual blessing. The mission has stirred up the people, and they speak highly of the services rendered by the missioner.

On the 22nd the van moved on to Swaffham. On Sunday morning Mr. Mayo spoke at the Baptist Church, and in the evening at the Wesleyan. In the afternoon a service was held from the van on the Market Hill, when a large crowd assembled to listen to the Gospel message, and later a still larger crowd gathered when the captain of the Salvation Army presided and spoke. Rev. J. Menzies Love (Baptist), Mr. Softly (Wesleyan), and Rev. Jesse Mayo gave earnest Gospel addresses, which were attentively listened to; and the services have been continued in the various churches during the week. Several young people accepted the Saviour. We follow our friend with prayerful interest as he goes to Markham and the villages of north Norfolk.

Fred Christopherson, Secretary.

Doncaster Races.

The members of the Racecourse Mission are looking forward with much expectation to their visit to Doncaster Races next week. By kind permission of the trustees and minister, Priory Place Chapel is to be their headquarters. Prayer and sympathy are asked on the part of those interested in the missioning of the masses.

Whyteleafe Tabernacle.

We have been favoured with a visit of Mr. George L. Collins. Our brother sticks with true fidelity to the grand fundamental truths of the Word of God. Mr. Collins preached with power and pathos, and many were helped by his ministry. No little help to the services was the beautiful singing of Mrs. Collins—her rendering of the quaint melodies of the Africans (among whom they had laboured) delighted the young folk immensely. Gerald R. Coultas, Pastor.

The Bishop Hooper Van.

During the past week the evangelist in charge of the Bishop Hooper Protestant Van has been doing some mission work in the parish of Westerleigh and in the small town of Chipping Sodbury. On the Monday evening he gave a lecture on "Ireland and its Religion," in which the people were deeply interested. At Chipping Sodbury the evangelist visited from house to house with books and tracts, and had interesting conversations with some of the people. A farmer at Westerleigh lent his horses to take the van to Chipping Sodbury, and another earnest Christian at Sodbury paid for its conveyance to Wickwar.

Evangelistic Endeavourers.

Whitehaven Christian Endeavourers are enthusiastic and persevering in evangelistic efforts. For some time they sustained services in the surrounding villages which possessed neither chapel nor church. At Sandwith the only available place for the meetings was a farm kitchen, and often there was an attendance of fifty people. The interest was such as to encourage the Endeavourers to attempt something on a larger scale. A tent to seat 300 was secured, and Mr. R. McLean undertook to conduct a mission. Although it is the farmers' busy season, from the commencement the tent has been filled. As the mission has proceeded interest has deepened. The Endeavourers have wrought with a will, local Christians have been enabled to make a definite testimony for Christ, and many souls have been won, among residents and visitors. Children's services have been a feature of the mission. The meetings were continued for a fourth week.

During the month of August, evangelistic services were conducted by Mr. William Hill at the large Craiglockhart Poorhouse, Edinburgh. There have been many signs of blessing among the inmates.

A fruitful work is going on at Burgess Hill, Sussex, in one of the tents belonging to the Evangelization Society. The evangelist, Mr. Pouncey, is an able preacher, well taught in the Scriptures; able, through the Spirit of God, to speak to the edification of Christians, as well as Divinely qualified to preach the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. W. P.

Dr. R. Foster Owen, of the London Medical Mission, has been conducting meetings for young people on the beach at Kingdown, near Dover, in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission. There have been good attendances, and the interest of the young folk has been well sustained. The services are being continued till September 12.

Mr. A. Y. McGregor has been holding a mission at Abbeyhill, Edinburgh, which has proved a time of quickening. A correspondent writes:—"God has so blessed us that the oldest Christians say it is ten years or more since so many souls were saved in this district. There is no joy of the Christian like that which comes from seeing souls flock to Jesus, and this has been the case with us. I speak from what I know when I say that there are a great number of men and women ready to yield themselves to Christ. May God in His providence send someone to gather in that which is white unto harvest."

Mr. William Forbes has paid a visit to Morecambe in the interests of the theatrical employés. He is thoroughly devoted to this much neglected class of people, and considerable success has attended his work. Last Thursday afternoon Mr. Forbes arranged a tea in the Waverley Restaurant for about thirty young women, engaged by the Winter Gardens Company. After the tea, Sankey's hymns were sung, and a short address was given by the Baptist minister, Rev. Edward Smith. Mr. Forbes handed to each friend a copy of the Marked New Testament, the gift of Captain Woodward. The young people expressed their pleasure with the meeting, and promised to meet again the following Wednesday. E. S.

The Meaning of Time.—Our days are like beautiful summer fields, as God gives them to us. The minutes are lovely, blooming flowers and silvery grass blades, and stalks of wheat with their germs of golden foliage, or vines with their blossoms—prophecies of coming purple clusters. Oh, the fair possibilities of the days and hours and minutes as they come to us from God's hands! But what did you do with yesterday? How does the little acre of that one day look to you now? Is it waving with beauty? Are there no waste spots in it? What did you do with the seven days of last week? How does that seven-acre field appear to you as you view it from the hilltop of the holy Sabbath? Are there no wasted minutes, no squandered hours?—J. R. Miller.

Church of England.

It is proposed to hold a great Church Ministry Exhibition for South London in October next year.

The Church of England Sunday-school Institute reports 2,919,413 scholars and members of Bible classes (an increase on the year of 64,757), with 206,203 teachers.

Rev. Frank Swainson, curate of All Saints', Sheffield, has been appointed by the trustees to the vicarage of St. Barnabas, Islington, in succession to Rev. W. Hind. Mr. Swainson was for some time before entering the ministry a lay worker at St. James', Holloway. The new vicar of St. Barnabas has decided Protestant sympathies, and enjoys the distinction of having the largest Bible class in the United Kingdom. He started his men's class at All Saints' in 1898 with a membership of nine. At the commencement of the present year the figure stood at 2,000, and last month its numbers increased to over 2,200. A similar class for women was inaugurated by Mr. Swainson, and, although failure was predicted, the movement went steadily forward, and at the end of the first year its numbers reached 1,600.

The open-air services on Douglas Head on Sunday afternoons have again proved very successful, this year large and appreciative congregations assembling to take part in these unique gatherings. On a recent Sunday an immense crowd listened to an eloquent address by the Bishop of Liverpool. Taking as his text Ps. cviii. 24-27, Dr. Chavasse spoke of the Providence of God that answered prayer. He wanted everyone whose eyes were looking towards him to realize that the heart-aches and sorrows of men were seen by God, sympathized with by God, and provided for by God. He alluded to God's three great books—the Bible, nature, and history—each of which taught the doctrine of particular Providence. Three lessons he impressed upon his hearers' hearts—adoration, trustfulness, and imitation. Let them adore God for His goodness and His love: let them trust Him in the little as well as in the great things of life; and let them be godly—that is, God-like.

Congregational.

Mr. Thomas Loose, who sails next week in the ss. Gascon for South Africa, to resume his work in Pondoland for the S. A. General Mission has been ordained at Woolwich to the Congregational ministry. Revs. R. Wardlaw Thompson, A. Mearns, A. E. Abel, and Thomas Morgan officiated.

One of the oldest ministers in South Australia, Rev. Charles Hodge, who went out exactly forty-seven years ago, has just returned to this country on furlough. Mr. Hodge, who is a Cornishman, is an ex-chairman of the Union of his colony, and will represent the churches of South Australia at forthcoming meetings of the Congregational Union at Bournemouth.

Rev. William J. Bull has intimated to his congregation at Bodmin his intention of closing his ministry in June next year, or earlier if a successor can be appointed. He assumed his present charge thirty-two years ago after a seven years' pastorate at Curry River, and now feels that his advancing years and failing strength necessitate retirement. A request to reconsider this step being unavailing, the church at a special meeting passed a resolution expressive of its love and sympathy.

The church at Hither Green, S.E., is making conspicuous progress. It is now proposed to supersede the present church (opened three years ago) with one having twice the accommodation. Plans have been accepted for a building, to seat 750, to cost £5,000, exclusive of incidentals. Towards this the members have given or promised over £400. "We are hopeful," writes Rev. F. J. Trick, the pastor, "that this may in time be increased to £1,000, yet we are painfully conscious that without generous help from outside friends we shall be unable to carry through the enterprise which has been forced upon us." Although this is comparatively a new suburb the population is 15,000, and is still increasing.

Baptist.

Mr. Leonard Weaver is meeting with much encouragement in his meetings at the Fulham Baptist Chapel, Dawes Road. On Sunday last the attendance was good, and the preaching was with great power. The evening service was especially fruitful in blessing, over thirty openly signifying their desire to follow Christ.

Rawdon College celebrates its centenary in the course of next year. The institution was founded at Horton, Bradford, in 1804, and was named the "Northern Baptist Education Society." In 1859 it was removed to Rawdon. It is proposed to raise a centenary fund of £5,000 in order that the finances of the institution may be placed on a firmer footing.

The Handbook of the Baptist Union of Ireland shows that there are thirty-three churches, providing accommodation for 8,170 persons, with a membership of 2,727. There are 2,405 scholars in the schools, with 249 teachers. These churches are under the pastoral care of twenty-five ministers, assisted by 104 local preachers. The chief work of the Union is home mission work, and the subscriptions for that object last year reached a total of £1,739 3s. 6d.

On Sunday week Mr. W. R. Lane preached at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, both morning and evening, his ministry proving particularly helpful. Pastor Thomas Spurgeon commended the preacher to the congregation in a letter, describing him as "Our good friend, Mr. Lane, whose praise is in all the churches as an earnest and faithful evangelist. The Lord make him a power in our midst, both now and during the mission we propose to hold toward the end of November."

Methodist.

An interesting ceremony took place at Bootle on Saturday week. One hundred children laid as many memorial bricks, and gave a guinea each to the funds of the Wesleyan chapel now being built at Cyprus Road, at a cost of £4,000.

The General Committee of the Primitive Methodist Church has been authorised by the Conference to appoint seven of its members to prepare legislation for next Conference on the improved training and equipment of local preachers.

Only £3,000 of the £21,000 which the Victoria Hall, Deptford, has cost, remains to be raised. The hall, which will be Rev. J. Gregory Mantle's new sphere of work, will be opened on October 15 by Revs. G. Campbell Morgan, Thomas Champness, and others.

An analysis of the ministerial appointments in the United Methodist Church for the Connexional year just commenced shows that Free Methodism still retains its elasticity in the matter of the length of residence in its circuits. There is, however, evidence of a tendency to shorten the average stay where the fifth year is exceeded. Rev. G. H. Turner remains in London First for a sixteenth year; Rev. R. Waters at Plymouth for a twenty-fifth; Rev. W. C. Rank at Accrington for a twenty-sixth; and Rev. Joe Cockin at Truro for a twenty-eighth.

Among Wesleyan ministers and circuits the present week is one of much disturbance. No fewer than 780 ministers have received new appointments this year, and according to long-standing custom they are expected to be in their places on the first Sunday in September. Didsbury College loses its classical tator, Mr. W. F. Slater, who retires after forty-nine years' service. His chair at the college is to be filled by Mr. Arthur Moorhouse, B.D. The same institution also loses its assistant tutor, Mr. Sherwin Smith, who is to get his first experience of circuit work in London.

The annual address to the ministers, members, and friends of the Methodist New Connexion refers with regret to the troubles in China which have reduced the number of members by 674, otherwise an increase would have been reported. The address deplores the growing habit of attending only one of the Sunday services, and suggests that the private means of grace might be better sustained. The need of clear, Evangelical, New Testament and "Reformation" teaching in the Sunday-schools is emphasized with reference to the dangers of the Education Act. The subject of Methodist union is briefly but pointedly referred to; and it is stated that the matter will be brought before the circuits of our Connexion during the year, that members may have the opportunity of giving their judgment thereon.

Presbyterian.

The week of prayer and self-denial on behalf of foreign missions will commence on November 24.

Rev. J. S. Macphail, of Benbecula, who laboured in Skye thirty-four years, has attained his ministerial jubilee.

St. John's and Erskine Churches, Tarbolton, have been formally united, under the name of Tarbolton Church, by resolution of Ayr Presbytery.

Newcastle Presbytery has ordained Rev. Robert Irvine, probationer in charge, to the pastorate of a congregation formed by the union of the preaching stations at Callerton and Newburn.

The Newcastle Presbytery has taken a step in advance of other Presbyteries by appointing a church extension agent. Rev. Joseph Rorke, of Heaton, has resigned his charge to undertake the appointment.

Rev. Dr. Thoburn McGaw, who has been conducting Presbyterian services at St. Moritz, in the Engadine, during the "season" now closing, returns to London this week, and resumes his secretarial duties on Monday next.

Society of Friends.

At Lewes and Chichester monthly meeting, held at Brighton on the 20th ult., Joseph G. Hopkins, of Lewes, was liberated to attend quarterly meeting of Essex and Suffolk, at Saffron Walden, and to visit some of the particular meetings within its compass as way may open, especially in Thaxted and Colchester.

A Friends' Missionary Conference for members of the Board and F.F.M.A. correspondents and missionaries is to be held at Devonshire House on September 29, preceded on the 28th by a farewell meeting for Indian missionaries. Throughout the week there is to be a small missionary exhibition on the premises, open to all Friends, which it is hoped will prove of much value in showing a practical way of spreading knowledge of the mission fields.

The early services in the tent in Rye Lane were a good augury for the success of the Convention and Mission. An introductory prayer-meeting on Saturday was attended by some 350. The Sunday services were conducted by Rev. J. W. Ewing, M.A., B.D. (pastor). Mr. Ewing's address in the morning was an appeal for progress in the Christian life; in the evening, when the tent was filled, many having to stand, the address was of an evangelistic character. Several local ministers and clergymen are taking part in the services, which are being continued throughout the week.

Willowfield, a Belfast city parish, with a population of 4,000, has been in charge of Rev. Canon Harding since May, 1900. After some months it became necessary to enlarge the church, build a mission hall, and renovate the schoolhouse. This was done at a cost of £3,700. Towards this sum about £2,000 has been raised, and the rector and parishioners are making an earnest effort to collect the remainder. Canon Harding works along evangelical and evangelistic lines, and his preaching of the Word is being owned of God to the conversion of many. Prayer meetings are well attended, the Sunday-schools are steadily increasing, and ministers of other denominations frequently take part in the meetings. Communications may be addressed to Canon Harding at Willowfield Parsonage, Belfast.

Fallen Asleep.

Cleckheaton Wesleyan Circuit has lost one of its most active workers by the death of Mr. Jonas Stead. As class leader, Sunday-school teacher, temperance advocate, and trustee of several chapels, he rendered acceptable service; while as a visitor to the sick and dying he was in much request.—Mr. James Bowden, ex-mayor of Burslem, and the oldest local preacher among the Methodist New Connexion in the town, has passed away. On several occasions he represented his circuit at Conference, and was a member of several Connexional committees.—Mr. James Ashworth, a well-known Rochdale Free Methodist, and a leading local politician, at the age of seventy-nine.—Mr. Joseph Williams, of Merthyr, a staunch supporter of Congregationalism in Wales, publisher of several magazines.—Rev. Stewart Hooson (Primitive Methodist), of East Leigh, who travelled forty-five years, chiefly in Brinkworth and Swindon District.—The death of Alderman Manton is a matter of regret to thousands of Sunday-school scholars and teachers throughout the country. The "Father of the Birmingham Town Council," was said to be the oldest Sunday-school teacher in the world; for the last eighty years he was associated with the work.—At Dublin, Rev. James Daly, Methodist minister, aged sixty years.—At Rathfriland, co. Down, Rev. John Harvey, senior minister of Ryan's Presbyterian Church, aged fifty-two years.—Sincere regret is felt at the death of Rev. R. D. Skuse, rector of Ballyhean and Clonevburgh, Portarlington, who has passed away, aged fifty-one years.

Doubt in the Garb of Faith. There is a call for men to lead the Church of God; but except the men have faith such as will exclude from their teachings words of doubt and disloyal expressions, the Church of God will be little benefited by their care or attention. Modern unbelief is the more dangerous by reason of its respectability. Thirty years ago Horatius Bonar mourned a situation which is still with us:—

Good Shepherd! In these days of subtle ill,
When all the elements of earth and sky
Are on the side of doubt; when unbelief
Assumes the garb of faith, speaks with its voice,
And steals its holiest words; when the dark foe,
Unwearied, seeks its victims; day and night
Watch Thy lone flock; and though the shepherds here
Know little of the Shepherd's love and skill,
Take Thou Thyself the rod and crook and staff;
Do Thou the work which only Thou canst do!
Watch Thou the fold, for every beast of prey
That loves the night, howls round its broken wall.

Dr. Denney on the Atonement. Dr. Denney continues in this month's Expositor his studies on "The Atonement and the Modern Mind." We are glad to call special attention to it because of the strong manner in which the writer presents Evangelical Truth to the man who thinks there is no need of Atonement. One excellent point he makes in dealing with the objection drawn by so many from the absence of any Mediator in the parable of the Prodigal Son. Dr. Denney pertinently says that there is no Christ in that parable either, "no Elder Brother who goes out to seek and to save the lost." And he adds with great force: "Yet surely we are not to put the Good Shepherd out of the Christian religion." There is no answer to this. Those who reject the Atonement upon the ground that it is not mentioned in the parable of the Prodigal Son, must on the same ground reject Christ altogether. They forget, however, that He who uttered that parable said also that He came to give His life a ransom for many. We are glad to see a man of Dr. Denney's power making a specialty of this subject. There are many younger ministers who speak with hesitation about the Cross. They might with advantage sit at Dr. Denney's feet.

The Solid Foundation. We are glad to notice in the current number of the same magazine a trenchant criticism of the position which certain religious teachers have so greatly over-estimated, i.e., that psychology is everything in religion, and "religious states" are the ultimate tests for the reality of the religious life. This one-sided insistence upon states of mind and spirit is perilous to the last degree, inasmuch as it opens the door to every fad and folly, and removes the foundation of life to a subjective state of soul. Mr. Forgan, who writes the article to which we allude, very properly recalls men to the truth, which extremists quietly ignore, that the historical revelation of God in Christ is the real foundation of true religion. It is that which is true or false, and which men must deal with. A fact of accredited history is worth more than any number of subjective experiences. That new psychology which ignores history is one outcome of abandoning the Word of God as the supreme authority. Men must have authority, and if they reject it in God, they will try and find it within themselves.

An Excellent Scheme. We have followed with much interest the fortunes of Westminster Chapel, built for the sainted Samuel Martin. In his days the huge building was crowded; to-day, owing to an entire change in the neighbourhood, it is very scantily attended. It is one of those central churches which offer a serious problem to Christian men. The officers have just proposed a scheme which bids fair to open up a new era of blessing for the church, and which also offers a suggestion for the use of similar churches elsewhere. It is to appoint a pastor who shall be responsible for the leadership of the general work of the church, and to invite leading men to preach in turn for a period of, say, two months at a time. Thus a decaying church may yet become a great centre for the preaching of the Gospel. This is one solution of a great difficulty; it will help to lessen the strain which constant preaching in one place imposes upon a man, and it will provide that necessary variety which is one of the first laws of God. It is a kind of Apostolic itinerancy for which we have frequently pleaded. It secures force and freshness all round.

Pew Rents. A recent critic has said that "it is time the churches took away that reproach of St. James—and of the modern democracy—that they favour wealth." This statement of the case against the "pew rent" system is, however, scarcely a fair one, for the payments are made in many cases by those who are in no way wealthy, but who recognize the fact that the expenses of the place of worship have to be met, and that there are no endowments to fall back upon. Rev. Silvester Horne, upon taking up his work at the Whitefield's Memorial Chapel, has arranged for a modification which should be grateful to the "modern democracy," for in future only for the morning services will seats be allocated, and in the evenings every seat in the large building will be free. The motto of this desirable experiment might be that which appears outside a Wesleyan chapel in a South Coast town, "A book, a seat, and a hearty welcome for all." With a little more Christian courtesy on the part of seat-holders, many other places of worship might thus be thrown open, and the royal law be fulfilled (James ii. 8).

The King's Highway. Following the excellent example set by the Wesleyan body, the National Free Church Council has sent out Mission Vans in charge of evangelists. This method of reaching those who are not regular attendants of places of worship is an admirable one, and, hitherto, a large measure of blessing has followed its adoption. A daily contemporary has recorded the pleasant fact that one of these vans recently had an audience of 1,000 persons at two services in Norfolk on the Lord's Day, the evangelist having the assistance of the Wesleyan and Baptist ministers in the little town, and of a captain in the Salvation Army. To fulfil the great missionary command of Christ it is essential that the Gospel should be proclaimed in the highways, and that as many as shall be found be bidden to the marriage (Matt. xxii. 9).

The Blue Book Revelations. Englishmen have every reason to be ashamed of the state of things which has been so thoroughly unveiled in the Report upon the late war. It is now evident that many of our misfortunes were due to helpless incompetency and to moral enervation. In a word, we had very few real men. The time has come to change all that, and the work of reform should commence immediately. We abhor war and all that pertains to it, but while it is at all necessary to defend a country, the defence should be thorough and in the hands of men who can be depended upon. But they who advocate a change in method and administration only, touch but the surface of the matter. The requisite reform touches a region over which commissioners have no control. The "clean sweep" needed is in the heart. Whilst drink, lust, immorality, swearing, and ungodliness prevail, we cannot grow true patriots. The moral enervation in the Army and elsewhere is not a sudden weakness; it is the fatal result of years of unnatural living. In reckoning without God, men have boasted of their "freedom from superstition." The Blue Book has shown us the real meaning of their "freedom."

The Country's Need. The country itself now understands, through defeat, that it needs men. There is a universal cry for leaders. It is good that men are awake to that extent to their needs. But we should like to direct those who are so properly calling out for "men," to the history of our nation. If they would carefully examine the records, they would find that the great leaders to whom the country owes most were, without exception, God-fearing men. And if we are once more to have a race of stalwarts, Christ must be adored as Lord and Saviour. It will be a good thing if the country learns, through its weakness, that God cannot be displaced without the most serious harm resulting to a nation's life.

The Cry of Macedonia. We ask the careful and prayerful attention of our readers to the extracts from Mr. Nowell Smith's letter to The Spectator, on page 18. The Sultan's massacre of the Bulgarians in 1876, which called forth from Mr. Gladstone the title of "the Great Assassin," moved all Europe to horror and indignation; but we seem to have got accustomed to hearing of massacre and violation, and the terrors daily reported are as an oft-told tale which moves us but a little. Shall we not at least individually if not collectively lie on our faces, and cry to the Judge of all the earth, to stay this carnival of blood, and to remove this monstrous misgovernment from the face of the earth?

A Desirable Policy. An eminently wise suggestion appeared in the Westminster Gazette last week, over the signatures of several responsible gentlemen who have all, at different times, had the opportunity of observing at first hand the tyranny and insecurity from which the Macedonian peasants suffer. It is to the effect that the demand of the Macedonian Committees for the appointment of a Christian Governor of Macedonia who has never been an Ottoman official, and who shall be responsible to the Powers and irremovable without their consent, shall be acceded to. This is a policy, eminently sane and simple, upon which all who care for liberty and order may agree. It accords with the Lebanon precedent, and therefore has the justification of experience behind it. The knot would be cut at once if this policy were accepted, and it seems to us a matter for pressing on all parties to the treaty of Berlin. It will be this and the restoration of tranquillity, or else a most disastrous war before long, for it is certain that the Macedonians will never accept a governor of Turkey's choosing. Who can blame them for that, in face of Turkey's past record?

Vain Repetitions. The current objections to Foreign Missions have one thing, and one thing only, in their favour—their venerable antiquity. Like the lower organisms in natural life, they are tenacious of existence. No doubt those which are so glibly reiterated to-day are in most respects similar to those which the sceptical and the unbelieving addressed to Paul and his colleagues before those wonderful missionary journeys to the Gentiles to which we owe everything that makes life worth living in these islands to-day. A recent writer has remarked with truth that it was just the disregard of those objections "that rendered it possible for Christianity to spread throughout the then known world." The modern objector finds it convenient to ignore the religious history of the world, "beginning first at Jerusalem," and that history is one of the best arguments in favour of Foreign Missions, next to the command of our Divine Lord (Mark xvi. 15).

The Plague of Leprosy. Dr. Tonkin's two articles in the Empire Review for August and September, "Among the Lepers in Northern Nigeria," are of great interest, not merely from the medical and scientific point of view, but also to all those who are concerned in the surroundings of missionary work. As medical officer of the famous Hausa Association's Central Indian expedition, the doctor had exceptional opportunities of studying leprosy in one of its hotbeds, about 150 miles square, so that his conclusions possess great value when he deals with its causes. That he puts insufficient and unsuitable food in the first place among the factors of predisposition to the contagion, is a disquieting fact in face of the Indian Famine figures, for it is to be feared that India may witness a development of the dread disease, with the ravages of which our missionaries unhappily are so familiar. Dr. Tonkin reminds us that leprosy was a common complaint in England two centuries ago, and that only with the increase of food, and the improved conditions of the last two hundred years, has it disappeared. Certainly Nigeria is a striking example of the "difficulties of empire," but God has widened our rule that such things may be met and overcome in the name of Him who cleansed the lepers, and who died to save men from the still more widely spread leprosy of sin.

The Servant within thy Gates. An article from the pen of Mr. Richard Bell, M.P., doubtless will be, what its writer wishes, "a surprise to the public." Mr. Bell quotes from the Board of Trade returns, and shows that of the 523,982 railway officials employed in England about 133,000 receive wages of only from 15s. to 18s. per week. One of these, a gatekeeper in the service of two of the leading companies, was "on duty" in one week fourteen to eighteen hours per day for six consecutive days, and for fifteen hours on the Sabbath. Mr. Bell states that this is no isolated case. The absence of such workingmen from divine worship is, therefore, easily accounted for. How can such toilers regard the appeals which are made to them to attend to spiritual things?

A New Missionary Effort.

IT has grown upon us increasingly for years past that of all the ideas communicated by God to man, of all conceptions of which the mind of man is capable, of all the commands of Jehovah to His people, nothing approaches in importance in the mind of God, nothing is so dear to His heart, nothing so vital to His glory, in relation to mankind in this age or the coming ages, as the last command of the Son of His love on the eve of His return to the Father: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel (proclaim the Good Tidings of salvation) to every creature."

On the other hand, nothing is more strange in all the wayward ways of men redeemed by Christ, nothing more unreasonable, nothing more inconsistent with their holy calling, nothing more contrary to their highest interests, than the indifference, the unwillingness, even the opposedness, of His blood-bought people to obey and carry out this infinitely kind command.

From the date of the Covenant between the Father and the Son, when from the foundation of the world the Son was set apart as the Lamb slain, His face was steadfastly set to go to Jerusalem, in order that by pouring out His soul unto death and bearing away the sin of the world, He might vindicate the love, wisdom, grace, righteousness, of God.

Under God's instruction, man may subdue the earth, may find out as God enables him, forces and possibilities in the material world hitherto unknown, and deify himself as though he were a creator instead of a discoverer; but however learned or powerful or cultured or experienced, man is not qualified, apart from regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost, to take part in the Evangelization of the world. This is necessarily confined to that portion of the race who have yielded themselves to the Gospel of God.

In the first century, with the power of the Pentecostal Spirit resting upon them, the Jewish Christians of Jerusalem, driven out by the First Persecution, went everywhere preaching the word; and Paul and Barnabas and Silas and other true witnesses of Jesus so tormented the men of the earth, who have their portion in this life, that they cried out, "The men who have turned the world upside down have come hither also." But through a long interval of neglect extending over many centuries, with magnificent exceptions from time to time, the Great Commission has been generally disobeyed.

In the closing quarter of the eighteenth century, however, God found a shoemaker, the noble William Carey, filled with the spirit of the Gospel, so that in spite of the opposition of some of his brethren, others were possessed by the same spirit, and Carey and Marshman and Ward went down into the pit of heathenism, on the understanding that those at home should hold the ropes.

Carey had been stirred by the example of the saintly David Brainerd, whose story also drew the beloved Henry Martyn from his college at Cambridge to spread the light of the Gospel in Persia. A little while before Christian Schwarz had worked as well as prayed for the conversion of India's millions. These men were in the succession of the Apostles; and in the interval of dark and dreary days others had anticipated their faith and devotion. They looked far ahead, and at the same time it was their joy to look back upon beginnings of Christian zeal; for had not Raymond Lull taken the Gospel to the Mohammedans in the thirteenth century? and had not the German Pietists and Moravians been seeking the lost in the earlier years of the eighteenth?

The result is that there are now 10,000 missionaries, more or less, dwelling in heathen lands, holding forth the Word of Life, preaching the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God, making disciples among all nations, and baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost.

It is ours at home to "hold the ropes." In material support much is done, and yet very little in comparison to the need. A missionary enthusiasm at all adequate to the stringency of the command, and the burning love of God for the souls of men out of which the command was given, would create a further supply of devoted men and women offering themselves for the work, and a supply of funds equal to their need.

But "holding the ropes" means more than the allocation of the missionaries, and care for their physical needs. (Although on our part does it not often amount to less than that?) It must also include words and acts of encouragement and cheer in their spiritual life. Mr. Moody told a story of a fireman who hesitated to go another step on the ladder in the face of the flames of a burning house. A voice below shouted, "Give him a cheer," and the ringing response from the anxious crowd put heart into him, and he struggled on and rescued the imperilled life.

The desire to give a cheer to the Missionaries in their isolation led a year ago to the formation of The Missionary Association, which has put itself into communication with every known member of the 10,000 Missionaries abroad, by sending them three numbers of an Occasional Paper entitled "The Missionary Association Letter," which has received, as we have shown in former issues, the warmest thanks, from more than 1,000 of them, for the interest shown in their spiritual welfare, and the sympathy expressed in the many difficulties and trials of their position.

Having been identified with this Association from its first meeting, and having always taken a deep personal interest in its well-being and well-doing, we have been asked to make the aims and efforts of the Association a special feature of our paper, which we are quite pleased to do.

This necessitates no change in our general make-up, for week by week we give Missionary intelligence, and frequently articles bearing on Missionary questions. While continuing to do so, we now purpose to issue, probably once in three months, a Missionary Association Number, specially designed to interest Missionaries abroad and their most earnest supporters at home. This special number will be sent by the Missionary Association, as far as the kind contributions of their friends render it financially possible, to every Missionary in the world.

This leads us to affirm the imperative necessity that the link between those who "hold the ropes" at home and the pioneers of Missionary effort in the foreign field should be far closer and stronger than at present is the case.

Hitherto the welcome accorded to the Missionary Association by those labouring to advance the outposts of Christianity, has necessarily been greater than the interest evoked in it from those to whom belongs the honour and the responsibility of contributing to their material support. We say this has necessarily been the case, because until the existence of the Association had been justified by the warm welcome given to it by Missionaries in the field, as meeting in a unique way a need deeply felt by them, there was no sufficient ground for its founders to expect the interest and sympathy of friends of Missionaries in the homeland.

Now, however, the Missionary Association has acquired a sufficient raison d'être, and its first appeal may well be to all who have friends to whom they are linked by ties of relationship, friendship, or co-operation, and to whose spiritual welfare they feel it their privilege and obligation to minister. And beyond these the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us!" must sound in the ears of all who hold themselves in sympathy and fealty and obedience to the Lord of the Harvest. May we not believe and expect that He will freely bestow a spirit of generosity upon all such?

It will be our privilege to consider subjects spiritually helpful to Missionaries themselves; to bring into desirable prominence any questions affecting the mutual relationship between those in the foreign field and those who send them out; and to emphasize the responsibility of the Church of Christ, and therefore of all the churches, and of their members individually—the responsibility for the Evangelization of the World, which rests upon all pastors and all churches, on the Missionary Societies, and on individual Christians.

We desire and expect thus to open up a much-needed means of communication for all who recognise this responsibility. Correspondence is heartily invited, and co-operation will be as heartily welcomed.

The offices of the Missionary Association are at Donington House, 30, Norfolk Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Correction.—In our article of last week on the "Exposition of the Apocalypse," the sentence commencing "All Scripture has an inward fulfilment in the microcosm of the individual soul, as real as any outward fulfilment in the microcosm of the world," should of course have read: "All Scripture has an inward fulfilment in the microcosm of the individual soul, as real as any outward fulfilment in the macrocosm of the world."

Faithful in Little.—You who are wishing you could do a thing you ought to do, and hiding behind your weakness—you must hear God saying, "Do it!" and feel the necessity of obeying Him—the joy of pleasing Him—run through your being like the strong blood of a new life. Then—then only—you are on your feet, and the impossible thing is done. If you do your work with complete faithfulness, you are making as genuine a contribution to the substance of the universal good as is the most brilliant worker whom the world contains. You are setting as true a fact between the eternities as he.—Phillips Brooks.

Middle-Age.

By Rev. E. GRIFFITH-JONES, B.A., Balham.

II.—Its Perils.

WHILE acknowledging the many privileges that are, and may be, enjoyed by those who have passed the flush and glory of their youth, we must not forget that there are perils incidental to the period of life into which they are about to enter. The greatest watchfulness and care must be exercised in order to avoid and master these.

Some considerable time ago there was an interesting newspaper correspondence on what a certain gifted preacher called "The Dangerous Years"—by which he meant not the years between fifteen and thirty, but those between thirty-five and fifty. He said: "There is danger enough for youth and young manhood. But the most slippery places, the most dangerous years, lie further on." In proof of this, we appeal to the records of history and literature, in which it is shown, as he said, that "the period of great crimes is not that of the earliest, but of the later years. If Solomon, Tiberius, Domitian, Henry VIII., and Napoleon had died in the first years of their reigns, their names would have been untarnished, their memories almost fragrant. Shakespeare here again shows his unerring skill. His criminals, his villains, are not to be found among the young. Macbeth and his wife are not a young couple on their honeymoon. Iago and King John, Shakespeare's most contemptible villains, are men of middle age. Dickens, Thackeray, and all the great novelists illustrate the same law in their character-building." I was myself much startled a little while ago by a magazine article concerning statistics of offences against the marriage laws. The number of divorce cases occurring between twenty-five and forty are comparatively few; the vast majority occur during the second decade of married life—between the ages of forty and fifty. Looked at from this point of view, the preacher I have referred to seems to have made out his case.

At the same time I demur strongly from his conclusion. If we go behind symptoms to causes, we shall find that whereas the fruits of evil impulses ripen during middle life, the seeds are sown with youth. Young people are settling to-day what they will be ten, twenty, thirty years hence. The evil imagination of twenty leads to the divorce court at forty. The first undetected act of dishonesty at twenty-five ends in the discovery of a great forgery at forty-five. What we become in middle life is mainly settled for us by what we were in early youth and manhood.

With this proviso, there still remains the fact that middle-age, like youth, has its own peculiar perils, which do not begin to affect us till we have passed through the earlier experiences and perils of life.

1. There is, for instance, a tendency in most of us to deepen our hold on life as such, and to become absorbed in the affairs and the interests of the secular world.

There is a peculiar sense in which life is specially interesting to the young, but it is not true that it loses interest as we grow older. The hold of the world strengthens on us as we get into its deeper current. We are caught up into its swift flow; the battle with circumstances and business rivals absorbs every faculty; the plot-interests of life captivate and enthral the imagination. The future is ever with the young; the present often tyrannizes over the middle-aged. The claims of business, the responsibilities of a growing family, the imperious call of public duty or private profit—how these tend to hold us spell-bound and imprisoned in the day and the hour! It needs a strong will, a firm, determined resolution to keep these things in their place, and leave the soul free for its proper aims and discipline. Even in the house of God our thoughts are often hard to control. The events of the past week, the prospects of the week to come—do they not intrude into our worship? There is thus a perpetual call to be watchful and prayerful, and to take a deeper interest in the things of God during the busy years of life. "Let him that standeth take heed lest he fall."

2. There is also an increasing tendency to dulness of spiritual sensibility.

In youth the facts and truths of the spirit are naturally fresh and vivid. One of the trials of the later years is to be able to see the great truths just as clearly and yet to fail to feel their importance with corresponding vividness. We grow accustomed to so many things!

> It is the crowning woe of life
> To feel all feeling die!

"It is a terrible misfortune," writes that genial but wise observer of life, A.K.H.B., "that we can talk about matters of the most awful importance in themselves, and the most awful bearing on our condition, and yet realize the thought of them as little as we can grasp the atmosphere, and feel as little emotion excited by the thought of them as if they were things in a fairy tale." But the man who keeps ever busy in doing the will of God will not find himself losing vital interest in the work of God, but will retain all the proud impulse of youth as a permanent possession.

3. Is there not also a tendency in middle life to a certain narrowing of sympathy?

Many men begin life with hearts as tender and as far-reaching in their sympathies as the race itself. They would "clasp the rocky world to their bosom." But slowly the horizon tends to contract; the globe shrinks into the nation; humanitarianism dwindles into patriotism; the interests of the nation harden into those of a party or class; the class narrows into the parish, the parish into one's own family, and there many men finally end. The large enthusiasms of youth shrivel into a stubborn prejudice to uphold things as they are, lest in the general disturbance of progress our own little interests may be endangered. It should be only our first endeavours to keep open the fountains of our sympathy, and let the stream flow into all channels, "not looking each of us to our own things, but each of us also to the things of others." Practical beneficence is the best safeguard of sympathy. If we would feel as we ought towards all the world, let us "do good to all men, especially unto them that are of the household of faith."

4. One more point we must glance at. We often speak of the illusions of youth. One by one these illusions tend to evaporate and vanish, and they often cause more precious things to vanish with them. There is a peril that with the generous "illusions" of our childhood faith may also disappear, and hard views of men, and even of God, take their place. Our judgment of others tends to materialise. After a few rude blows to our confidence in the goodness and genuineness of others, we are prone to doubt everyone; having seen many abortive reformations, we begin to doubt if any reformation is possible. The worst bane of middle age is cynicism, which is disbelief in human nature, and in the Divine grace. One of the most painful manifestations of this tendency is in family life. The romance of courtship and marriage is one of nature's wise provisions against the inevitable strains and frictions of life. It should be the earnest endeavours of all husbands and wives to keep this magic flame alive in their mutual regard. When it dies down altogether, farewell to married happiness; but there is no reason why it should. By careful and chivalrous treatment on the one side, and loving affectionate solicitude on the other, all that is precious in our early affection may keep on blossoming to the end; and when this is done the joy of the later years of married life far surpasses the novelty and zest of the earlier. Most of all should we pray and strive for a deepening rather than a waning faith in God's goodness, and guidance, and everlasting love; for this faith is the central spring of everything good and fair in life.

These are the privileges and perils of middle age. By wise appreciation of the one, and careful, prayerful avoidance of the other, life, instead of becoming a dwindling stream to be lost at last in the dry sands of worldliness, may become a broadening river, blessing and to bless, flowing through this world into the eternal ocean of peace and joy.

THE

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Speech.

Matt. v. 33-37.

SPEECH is the utterance of the soul; and more: because the soul dyes and impregnates speech with its emotions and inspirations, so that they are communicated to others as by spiritual magnetism.

God spake, and the visible creation emerged from the realm of thought into realized fact. By speech the Law was promulgated from Sinai; and by speech He who spake as never man spake, and who was the Word of God incarnate, left us thoughts that can never die. Speech has burned with the vehemence of Demosthenes, flashed with the eloquence of Cicero, trembled with the pathos of Chrysostom, thundered with the emphasis of Luther, rung with the high note of Pitt, glittered with the brilliance of Sheridan, and poured like a torrent from the lips of Burke. What a wonderful gift is this of human speech! To what heights it may rise, to what depths descend! "Therewith bless we the Lord and Father, and therewith curse we men, which are made after the likeness of God."

The noblest form of speech is the reflection in simple and natural words of great and good thoughts, which have been occupying the speaker's mind. Then language becomes strong in its simplicity and majestic in its unadorned truth. There is small need for nicely-balanced sentences, or highly-flavoured speech when the soul of patriot, orator, or preacher is aglow with exalted and inspiring conceptions. The volcanic fires that are burning within vent themselves in burning syllables, which plough their way into the hearts of men.

When the speaker is deeply moved, his manuscript is crumpled in his hand, the precise words which he had carefully prepared are forgotten, and he makes a fresh way for himself in words that leap red-hot and alive from his lips. The yeas and nays of Christ have been sufficient to revolutionize the ages, not because of their eloquence (as judged by human standards), but because they are weighted with the wisdom and life of God. Terse, unadorned, and simple sentences—such, for instance, as Abraham Lincoln was wont to utter—are sufficient, when far-reaching and profound principles of personal conduct or public policy have to be announced.

If then we would obey this command of our Lord as to speech, and confine ourselves to pure and simple language, we must begin to think more deeply, to love more tenderly, to cultivate our souls to nobler issues, and to amass spiritual treasure. We can safely leave our words to take care of themselves, if our inner life is pure, and sweet, and strong. Let us only imbibe our Master's spirit, and love God first and our neighbours as ourselves—then from the pure fountain will flow pellucid streams like those that issue from the throne of God and of the Lamb.

It must, however, be sorrowfully confessed that, for the most part, the thinking of ourselves and of others is not of that order. Men are not true, or deep, or unselfish, in their innermost hearts, and they know it, and therefore in all ages they have endeavoured to atone for the poverty of their thought by the extravagance of their language.

Men are not true. To compensate, therefore, for their lack of veracity, and to induce others to think that they were neither lying nor deceiving, they have linked their words with the awful name of God, daring the All-True to step out of His silence to confound them if it were not as they said.

Men are not profound. To compensate, therefore, for their lack of deep and original thoughts, and to turn public attention from their threadbare and impoverished souls, they employ extravagant and exaggerated speech.

Men are not unselfish. To compensate, therefore, for their conscious lack of that love which forgets itself in its devotion to the interests of others they will fill their speech with expressions such as may impress the ear and heart of those that hear them for the first time, but fall vain and insipid on those who know that the love which vaunts itself most passionately is more than likely to be scheming for its personal advantage.

It is common enough for us to hide our nakedness, our untruthfulness, our selfishness under strong asseverations and protestations, which call in the Supreme Being to witness against us, if it be not as we affirm.

The remarkable thing is that God keeps silent. Though His verdict be invoked by the habitual liar and blasphemer, who swears that black is white, and calls on God to strike him dead, or in some other way to prove that his words are false, yet Heaven makes no sign. No voice speaks out of the silence, no thunderbolt hurtles through the air, no sign is given that God is not mocked. Indeed it might seem as though God had not heard, or that He was perfectly indifferent.

But such is not the case. There are many examples on record, like that for instance of Ananias and Sapphira, where, in answer to some blasphemous appeal, God has interposed to vindicate the truth which had been shamefully mis-stated. God is not indifferent. He is not careless of the interest of truth and righteousness. He hides Himself under the slow working of immutable laws. But He is never appealed to without sooner or later answering the appeal, vindicating innocence and exposing the liar and the profane. With slow, silent, and inexorable precision the Divine Government deals with all exaggerations, lies, and blasphemies, showing their hollowness, exposing their futility, and casting them up on the beach of the universe, to the derision of all pure and righteous souls.

In order to avoid using the Name of God in their protestations, men have introduced into their speech expressions which, in fact, derived all the significance they possessed from their association with Him. It has been a mean subterfuge. They have not liked to say, By God, or By the Life of God, and therefore they have substituted the phrase, By Heaven. They have scrupled to say, May God strike me dead if I lie, and therefore they have slightly modified their speech, and said, By my life, or By my head, though they know perfectly well that life and death are ultimately only at the disposal of the Almighty.

Familiar exclamations will occur to the reader that are open to serious objection, although quite commonly used to give the impression of solemnity and reliableness to statements which have no other claim for consideration except that they are associated with the awful Name and Being of God.

The Jews, like all Oriental nations, were especially given to these expletives, and sheltered themselves with the excuse that so long as they did not mention the Divine Being, they might be excused. They said, "Thou shalt perform to the Lord thine oaths," meant that oaths which were not definitely made to the Lord, or by the invocation of the name of God were not binding.

Our Lord shows the fallacy of this reasoning. He says that whatever emphasis the allusions to Heaven, or Jerusalem, or the head, may give to our speech, is derived from their association with God; and that, therefore, if we would avoid the charge of blasphemy, we must cease to interlard our speech with such expressions. They are needless when our hearts are pure, and our words sincere; they are objectionable and worse when introduced to give a false and unnatural emphasis to our speech.

As the disciples of Jesus we must avoid in dress, in expenditure, in our household equipment, whatever savours of extravagance. In all our behaviour, as well in our speech, there must be the simplicity and beauty of Jesus.

Perhaps there is more truth than we would care to admit in the following minute of an old Friends' meeting: "It is the judgment of Friends that we should refrain from having fine tea tables set with fine china, seeing it is more for sight than service, and it's advised that Friends should not have so much china or earthenware sett on their mantel-pieces or on their chests of drawers, but rather sett them in their closets until they have occasion to use them. And we desire an alteration in those things that Truth's testimony is gone out against, viz., the Friends' gowns made indecently, one part over long and the other too short, with lead in the sleeves, and that Friends should come to a stability and be satisfied in the shape and compas that Truth leads into without changing as the world changes, allso that Friends' cloaths may be of a decent modest colour, not hair cut or powdered, and neither coives to be made with gathers on the forehead, bordering on the fashion of the world."

This prohibition of our Lord, "Swear not at all," does not, in my judgment, touch on the subject of taking an oath in a court of law or on the assumption of high office. He is simply dealing with the use of expletives in ordinary speech; or forbidding us to bind ourselves by vows, because we have no power over ourselves. We are not our own, but God's. In His own trial Jesus did not scruple to be put upon His oath. When the High Priest said unto Him, "I adjure Thee by the living God that Thou tell us whether Thou be the Christ, the Son of God," Jesus said, "Thou hast said."

And on one solemn occasion the Apostle Paul deliberately called God to witness that he spoke the truth in Christ, "his conscience bearing witness in the Holy Ghost."

It is not inadmissible that on occasions of high and solemn importance we should bare our heads as we stand before God and solemnly ask Him to stand with us in attesting the truth of the words we speak and the vows we make. But there is a difference between this and the incessant and thoughtless appeal to God on every small and frivolous occasion.

The true and holy soul finds God everywhere and in everything. Heaven above is God's throne; earth beneath His footstool; Jerusalem, the holy city, the residence of the great King. Note these closing words—"the Great King." We are reminded of the sublime words with which the last of the prophets rebuked the lax and slovenly worship of the chosen people: "From the rising of the sun even to the going down of the same My Name is great among the Gentiles, and in every place incense is offered unto My Name, and a pure offering, for I am a great King, saith the Lord of hosts, and My Name is terrible among the Gentiles" (Mal. i. 11, 14).

Let us cultivate this thought, that God is not only our Father, but a great King, and with all the familiarity of little children will be mingled reverential awe. Wherever we go, we shall recollect the presence of God, and this will prevent us from the spirit which is betrayed into extravagant speech. We shall not dream of using words which come within the scope of our Lord's condemnation when we remember that every word is spoken in the presence of our Judge, and that of every idle word that we may speak we shall be called to account.

All harsh judgments of other people, who are God's creatures; all flippant reference to Scripture to spice our conversation, and suggest witticisms and conundrums; all light remarks on God's dealings with men, as in a book once published, called, "The Comic History of England"; all trifling with sacred subjects, or exposing them to ridicule—will be impossible to those who invest them with the thought that God is great, and greatly to be feared, and to be had in reverence by all that are about Him. The reverent use of the Day of God, the entrance with devout and sacred thoughts into His House, the wary and careful participation in the Lord's Supper, the loving handling of Scripture, and even of the Book which contains it, the honour with which parent and friend, old and young are treated—all these admirable and beautiful traits, so necessary to the perfecting of character, are due to the same origin and source. When God is treated as the Great King, the whole life falls into symmetry and order, and becomes a prolonged Yea to truth, a profound Nay to falsehood and error.

SUNDAY, September 13. Psalm cxviii.

A Temple Psalm.

IT is generally agreed that this Psalm was written at the restoration from Babylon, and was probably used for the first time at the great Feast of Tabernacles mentioned in Neh. viii. 14-18.

1-16. This half of the Psalm seems to have been sung as a Processional hymn whilst a long train of priests, Levites, and people were entering the Holy Place. Notice the alternation of the full chorus in the first four verses with the solo voice of vv. 5, 6, 7, which is again followed by the chorus of vv. 8, 9, and the solo of vv. 10-16. What Israel said through the voice of the soloist each soul may say for itself, "The Lord is for me, I will not fear. Who can condemn? Who can overthrow?" Only be sure that you have so thoroughly identified yourself with God that your cares and His are one. Let Him be both strength and song, and be prepared to stand still whilst His right hand fights your battle and wins your victory. Then let Him be your boast and glory.

17-29. The procession has now reached the Temple. Again the soloist is heard in vv. 17-19. In the mellowing light of that sanctuary, all thought of the human foe, whoever it was, has passed away, and God's Hand alone is seen in the trouble. "Thou didst thrust at me sore" is now exchanged for "Jehovah hath chastened me sore."

Verse 20 is for the chorus, v. 21 for the soloist; vv. 22-24 belong to the chorus of priests, describing how the rejected Stone became the Head of the corner. These words were quoted by our Lord of Himself, rejected of men, but glorified of God who was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself. In v. 25 we have again the soloist, followed in vv. 26, 27 by a chorus of priests, who had probably been waiting in the temple to greet the entering procession. Verse 28 is again the voice of Israel speaking in the soloist, followed by a chorus (v. 29) culled from Miriam's song, in which the praises of the whole multitude, both of those who had entered the Temple and those who had awaited them there, ascend as a cloud of fragrant breath to the Eternal. Let us catch the contagion of this great outburst of praise.

An Ode on the Excellence of Scripture.

In every verse except vv. 122 and 132 an expression for the Scriptures is employed—i.e., statutes, commandments, testimonies, judgments, &c. It is as though some devout soul set itself to celebrate the surpassing excellence of the Word of God. It is less wonderful that this prayer should emanate from the lips of this godly soul, when we notice the concluding words, in which he compares himself to a lost sheep. It is the wandering soul which has been brought back from wandering that can best appreciate the value of that Divine word by which it has been reclaimed.

There are many ways of studying the Psalm. First, class together the verses that speak of the Scriptures under the same general title as statutes or testimonies. Second, write down all the expressions of yearning with which the psalm abounds, commencing with Oh! Third, notice the effect that the study of the Scriptures has upon the life, as in vv. 9, 11. Fourth, notice the comparison between the law of God and other things in which men pride themselves, as wealth v. 14. Fifth, notice the opposition around the Psalmist, the names he uses for those who resist and pervert the Bible, as accentuating his own rest in God's Word. It is only by taking some pains, and making an effort of this sort, that the real beauty and majesty of the psalm become apparent.

My favourite verses are 94, 117, 132, 135, 151. But how can one cull this flower or that when the entire garden is full of such bloom!

The Song of the Sojourner.

This is the first of the fifteen Songs of Degrees (Songs of Steps). They were probably composed to be sung by worshippers travelling from all parts of the Holy Land to the great Temple feasts. What a beautiful effect must have been produced when the whole land was filled with little groups of pilgrims, with their faces towards Jerusalem.

It is befitting that the first pilgrim song should tell the story of unrest, arising from uncongenial associates. The sensitive soul of the Psalmist has for long been compelled to be a sojourner where he has heard lying lips and deceitful tongues. The atmosphere of falsehood was almost choking his soul; and this made its yearnings for the Holy City and the Temple the more intense.

The third verse suggests that God will inflict unusual punishments on deceitful tongues. They are compared to sharp swords and arrows in Psa. lvii. 4, and lxiv. 3, but now in turn they shall be pierced by the sharpened arrows of the Almighty, and with the intense heat of coals of the juniper or broom.

5-7. Meshech was the name of tribes in the neighbourhood of the Black Sea. Kedar, for the Bedouin tribes of the desert. Cromwell quotes these words thus: "I live, you know where, in Meshech, which they say signifies prolonging, and in Kedar, which signifies blackness, yet the Lord forsaketh me not." The soul often seems removed from heart and hope, which makes it all the more eager to find its true resting-place in the Home of God.

The Psalm ends with a sigh. Though his heart is set on peace, he had only to say as much to rouse all the enmity of his foes. His lightest whisper only inflames their anger the more. Ah, there are many souls like this in the world, to whom we can only quote the beatitude: "Blessed are the homesick, for they shall find their way home." But let them live within, where the peace of God sentinels the soul.

WEDNESDAY, September 16. Psalm cxxi.

The Psalm of God's Keeping.

Six times in these few verses Jehovah is mentioned as the Keeper of Israel, or of the single soul; and out of this conviction and confidence comes strength.

1, 2. Lift up your eyes from your coil of trouble and peril to the heights. The loftier your ideal, the more help you will get. Nay! Look above the mountains and hills to Him who dwells above them. Surely the Maker of heaven and earth, who fills them both, is able to fill thy heart and life with His omnipotent succour.

3, 4. It may be that these words are addressed to the Psalmist by some friendly voice, assuring the suppliant that his prayer will be graciously answered. It was as though some loving soul had overheard the whispered petitions of the earlier verses, and assures of an answer of grace. Or it may be that from the depths of the sub-conscious soul, where God Himself dwells, comes the assurance, in answer to its own voice, that its prayer has prevailed. Other helpers may fail, the most loving heart may drop into slumber whilst the tiny babe sleeps in the cot, but God will never cease to think of and watch His child.

5, 6. The fierce sunlight may beat down on the pilgrim band, the moon may shed malign influences on the camp, day may be succeeded by night, and work by rest, but there will be no difference to the assiduous care of Him who loves thee better than Himself. Did He not give His Son?

7, 8. We are always going out and coming in. Life is one perpetual issuing forth to work or war, and coming back to the sweet home-circle. Each needs the helping grace of the Saviour, and in each He is sufficient, until that moment when we shall go out as pilgrims indeed into the Infinite, and come in to the Home of many mansions.

THURSDAY, September 17. Psalm cxxii.

The Psalm of the House of God.

1, 2. The R.V. renders verse 2, "Our feet are standing." From the standpoint of satisfied and realized purpose the singer reviews the challenge of his friends to accompany them from some distant spot in the Land of Promise to the Holy City. The pilgrimage began in joy; it has ended in satisfied rapture. The weariness and danger of the road are forgotten. Even so some day, as we stand together in the Eternal City, we shall be so thankful that any invited and encouraged us to start on pilgrimage thither.

3-5. The pilgrim feasts his eyes on the Beloved City. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, newly builded from thy ruins, thy breaches made good, thy walls raised again in their ancient beauty, how fair thou wert — the central meeting-place of God's Israel; but thou hast no glory compared with the excelling glory of that City, which is being built through the ages, and shall come down from Heaven, having the glory of God. Thither, also, the tribes of the Lord are gathering from all lands; and there, also, are thrones for souls that were all but vanquished in the stress of life's battle.

6-9. The highest prosperity is realised when we forget our own personal and individual interests in our love and devotion to God's cause. For the sake of our brethren and companions, and for the sake of the house of God, let us pray for and seek the good of the Church, which is the City of God.

FRIDAY, September 18. Psalm cxxiii.

The Cry of the Contemned.

The pilgrim's experience is full of sharp contrasts. Only yesterday they were rejoicing in Jerusalem and praying for her peace, to-day they are deeply conscious of the contempt with which Sanballat, Tobiah, and others regard them. Hence this tiny psalm, which has been compared to "a sigh, an upward gaze, and a sigh."

1, 2. An Upturned Look. Don't look back, or down, or around, but up. You are the purchased possession of the dear Master, look to Him in submission, in silence, in waiting expectancy—prepared to spring into activity at His least signal, or to wait through long years until some movement of the pierced hand indicates His will. "Till He be gracious," yes till, though years intervene, but He is gracious in the meantime.

3. A Prayer. "Be gracious." Show Thyself strong on our behalf. There is no reason why we should not ask God for deliverance, though we are absolutely submissive to His choice.

4. A Sigh. Tell God your sorrows, breathe out your sigh into His ears; it will relieve you. He knows all about it before you tell Him, but He is glad that you should tell Him, and His peace shall fill your soul in the place of their scorning.

SATURDAY, September 19. Psalm cxxiv.

The Psalm of the Broken Snare.

Again, how great the alternation of feeling in the pilgrim's heart. Yesterday in almost mute anguish it was filled with contempt; here it is as full of inexpressible gladness.

1-5. One look on the peril that had passed. Men had arisen. They had raged like beasts of prey, threatening to devour. They had chafed against the chosen people, as the winter torrent which sweeps away in its foaming current the most steadfast structures of human skill. It seemed more than once as if the proud waters must pass over the soul, leaving it submerged under the impetuous torrent.

6-8. But no, at the very moment when all help and hope seemed at an end Jehovah had arisen, and said that His beloved should be delivered. The metaphor by which the soul is compared to a bird, is very beautiful. Look at the little fluttering thing. Suddenly it finds itself caught in the fowler's snare. It trembles, and spreads its wings, and seeks to wrench itself away—but in vain. It only entangles itself the more. Then a pitiful hand delivers it, and it is away to its native woods—escaped! Are you ensnared in trouble, in perplexity, in physical weakness, there is one hand, the hand of Him that was pierced, which can deliver—only be sure to praise Him in thy escape.

Other Lands.

At the American Conventions.

AMERICA, when the summer sun is in the sky, is more and more becoming dotted with great religious conventions, which make the shady groves and sea and lake and river vocal with songs of praise to God. Trolleys groan and clang their gongs with crowds who swell the audiences in the fan-shaped open-air auditorium, whose benches are divided by rows of tall pine trees. It is a revival of the old camp meeting, with an infusion, not all gain, of the modern "Chautauqua" and Summer Bible School.

The Niagara Convention, headed for many years by the sainted Dr. James H. Brookes, of St. Louis, is the pioneer of these Summer Bible Schools, and Northfield, where the friends of God from all lands were the friends of the lamented Mr. D. L. Moody, is the full blossom of the movement.

While supplying for three months the pulpit of Rev. Herbert Johnson, one of Boston's greatest preachers, who has been away ill, calls from several of these Conventions came along, and were responded to.

OLD ORCHARD.

Here Dr. A. B. Simpson, of New York, holds the leading Convention of the Christian and Missionary Alliance, a society which has from two to three hundred missionaries in foreign parts. Dr. Simpson was a Presbyterian minister in New York, and made a big sacrifice—or, should it be termed rather a big gain?—when he left his church and plunged in the name of God into work among the masses in that congeries of cities, New York. In addition to the spirituality of his movement, its liberality in offering for the work leads by a long way all others. I have seen some years ago at one of Dr. Simpson's meetings a collection taken, in cash, pledges, and jewellery poured into the plates, to the amount of £20,000 sterling. The Convention this year seemed larger than last, and the missionary offering following the unique and soul-stirring cry for foreign missions by Dr. Simpson was nearly 50,000 dols. Dr. Simpson is a man of God, and should be prayed for by those who find the Divine ear open.

MARTHA'S VINEYARD.

Here the Baptists of the Eastern States have their annual Convention. Could there be a quainter, bonnier spot than Cottage City, in this little island, curled all round by the great rollers of the Atlantic? Train from Boston to Wood's Hole, and thence, through the colours of a gorgeous sunset, doubled by the glassy mirror of the smoothest sea, by steamer to this dreamland of a summer hamlet. Electric globes glow like land stars. Crowds of white dresses and straw hats surround the gangway, and here is the buggy in waiting to drive the expected preacher to the Tabernacle, where a vast throng spreads itself away under the presidency of Mr. Eddy, a Boston business man, and a friend of years. The Baptists of America are a great force for the Gospel; brotherly love and evangelistic zeal characterize them, and when they sing, "Blest be the tie that binds," our heart is strangely moved.

SING-SING.

The great New York prison, "Sing-Sing"—so linked to all American crime—is here, and the sensitive inhabitants of the neighbouring town have re-christened their dwelling-place Ossining. Here is the oldest Methodist camp-meeting in the country, and in former days its light was like the engine head-lamp of all John Wesley's followers. What scenes of "old-time religion" were witnessed in this shady grove by the broad Hudson! This historic camp-meeting has rather fallen into decay, Ocean Grove and other Methodist meetings having largely taken its place. But a whole batch of rescued men from the famous old Jerry McAuley Mission in New York, headed by that Gideon of rescue-workers, himself plucked from the brink of hell, Mr. Sam Hadley, made the old trees re-echo with the old-time Methodist fervour, and the straw up at the altar got filled as of old with kneeling men and women crying for the power of God, and the infilling of the Holy Ghost.

WINONA.

About ninety miles from Chicago, by a beautiful lake, the mirror of some of the finest sunsets we have ever seen, the Presbyterians gather under the directorship of that leader of aggressive evangelism in the United States, Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, who recently resigned his charge in New York to devote himself wholly to this evangelistic movement. Winona is rapidly becoming the greatest convention in America, remarkable for the number of ministers that attend. Though Presbyterian in its colour—and in these days of the dull drab of doctrinal defection, what brighter, better hue than the old true-blue of "Christ's Crown and Covenant"?—it is inter-denominational, and there must have been 2,000 ministers who sat before us in the Tabernacle that Lord's Day evening, when we tried simply to tell "The Old, Old Story" to "those who know it best."

Next week we sail for the old homeland by Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse. Our work in the big city on the Clyde has been transferred from the City Hall of Glasgow—now in occupation of the Salvation Army—to St. Andrew's Hall. We much need a word for us to the King from those that have the pass to Him; might we have it from you, kindly readers? "Jean," said the Huguenot mother in the days of the "dragonnades," as she despatched her boy with the warning to the heights where the conventicle of the hunted saints had gathered, "Jean, run now, for the safety of God's elect depends upon thy speed!" If ever there was a day when the King's business of the proclamation of the Gospel to a perishing world required haste, it is now. John Robertson.

India's Secret Disciples.

A BOOKLET bearing this title gives particulars of the Industrial Evangelistic Mission, which is the outcome of the labours of Rev. J. C. and Mrs. Lawson, who have spent twenty-two years of their life in active and fruitful service in a needy corner of our Indian Empire. The Mission has established headquarters in Pilibhit, a native city some 110 miles north of Lucknow, and near the foot of the Himalayas. While the primary object of the Mission is to be a centre for spiritual and evangelistic work, other serious problems which confront the messengers of the Gospel in India are to receive timely and practical attention, and industry is to be pressed into service as a means to this end.

The Indian natives, for whose spiritual and bodily needs the Mission will provide, may be divided into three classes—(1) widows and orphans rendered helpless by the oft-repeated ravages of famine and other causes; (2) secret disciples who are prevented from coming out openly for Christ owing to the certainty of losing their employment; (3) the constantly increasing army of converts who roam the country helpless and hopeless, shunned by their former heathen employers, and for whose bodily necessities the missions responsible for their knowledge of salvation are totally unable to provide.

Already a good beginning has been made. Two excellent estates of twenty-five and twenty-three acres respectively have been secured, and buildings and workshops are being erected. At least 150 orphan boys rescued from the last famine are now busily occupied under the direction of the missionaries and some two dozen native helpers, in carpentry, shoemaking, printing, tailoring, gardening, &c. There is urgent need for liberal help in providing for the feeding, clothing, and sheltering of this little colony, and for providing the necessary machinery and tools. Information can be had from the secretary, Mr. Charles W. Cotton, 30, Norfolk Street, W.C.

A Call to Tongaland.

READERS of The Christian will doubtless remember the account of the sad death of our missionary, Mr. Lindfield, who was killed by a crocodile while crossing Lake St. Lucia in the early part of last year. His dying message to the writer was, "Tell Mr. Gale it is my last wish that he should finish the work in Tongaland."

We (my wife and I) were at home on furlough when this touching and almost sacred message reached us. Hitherto our work for God has been in Natal and Swazieland; but after much waiting upon Him for guidance, we believe He is calling us to go to Tongaland, which is about 50 miles from north to south, and 40 miles from east to west. The population is not exactly known, but it is believed to be many thousands.

The paramount chief has asked our Mission to send missionaries, saying, "We have long dwelt in darkness"; and all over the country his people are asking for the Gospel. This is a wonderfully "open door," which we feel must be entered at once in our Lord's name. We hope to build our station about the centre of the country, and, using this as a base of operations, by means of itinerating to evangelize the whole country during the dry season.

For this purpose we are urgently in need of a waggon, oxen, and tent, without which our work will necessarily be much limited, The cost of the waggon and oxen would be £250, and the tent £10. Dr. Hertslet, who sailed for South Africa last August, will be our fellow worker in Tongaland. Geo. F. Gale

Pioneering in Argentina.

AFTER six years' continuous labour in Argentina, Mr. and Mrs. F. Lister Newton have been resting for a little time in England. On going out to South America they were led to establish a mission at Tandil, a town of ten or twelve thousand inhabitants among whom there was not a single Christian worker. Although Roman Catholic, the people welcomed the ministrations of these missionaries, and willingly accepted the printed matter offered them. Those showing a desire to know more of the Gospel were invited to the meetings held at that time in Mr. Newton's house. Numbers of conversions were the result. After proving faithful in the face of persecution and trial the converts formed themselves into a little church.

As opportunity offered itself Mr. Newton made trips on horseback into the surrounding country with Bibles and tracts. Thus was the Seed sown, and a testimony given for God where the Gospel had not been preached before. Three years ago Mr. Newton opened a day school, where the children received a sound education and Bible training. This is a powerful agency for the spread of the Gospel, and can be utilized to great advantage, as parents are willing to send their children to receive the acknowledged benefits of an English education. Mr. Wilson Tedeschi is now carrying on the work at Tandil, and is much encouraged by the prospects.

On returning to South America, Mr. Newton hopes to be able to meet the suggestion made by several of the brethren in Argentina, and commence in a town (probably Ayacucho) where nothing is at present being done for the spiritual welfare of the people on Gospel lines. He hopes to support himself by help from friends at home and by means of a day school. The latter will afford an invaluable opportunity for influencing for Christ the coming men and women of the country; but for its thorough equipment several requisites are necessary, such as maps, illustrations, and seats which will serve both for the school and the meetings.

This pioneering in its initial stages will, of course, entail considerable outlay, as premises for the school and mission will have to be rented, when the cost of outfit and passage has been raised. Mr. Newton's address is: The Limes, 50, Truro Road, Wood Green, N.

John Huss and Jerome of Prague.

By Rev. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS, D.D.

THE traveller who ascends the Rhine from Cologne to Coblence, from Coblence to Mayence, and from Mayence to Basle, finds that the course of this noble river makes at the last named place a sudden turn from flowing in a northerly to flowing in a westerly direction. Continuing to ascend the Rhine the traveller reaches the beautiful falls of Neuhausen, near Schaffhausen, where, in thundering showers, the river rushes down a steep descent to the green depths of its lower course. Ascending still further, the traveller reaches the spot where the river issues in a broad swift flood from the Lake of Constance, which forms its vast Alpine reservoir.

The old town of Constance stands at the point where the Rhine issues from the lake. Here the celebrated Council of Constance was held in 1415, at which John Huss and Jerome of Prague, the Bohemian reformers, were tried and condemned to be burned at the stake. The hall in which the Council met 500 years ago still stands, its quaint columns and low wooden ceiling being in excellent preservation. Here and in the neighbouring Cathedral the martyrs witnessed a good confession.

A venerable house is shown in the Hussenstrasse, from which John Huss was led to the neighbouring Dominican convent to be immured in a deep, damp dungeon. Here he lay as a prisoner, in a sick and suffering state, for eighty-nine days. This famous monastery stands on a small island connected by a bridge with the mainland, close to the spot where the Rhine issues from the lake. The Dominican monks were banished from the monastery during the French Revolution, and, by a remarkable providence, the building, with the surrounding grounds, passed into the hands of a descendant of a French Huguenot family exiled at the time of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. It is now used as a hotel, and is one of the strangest and most interesting hotels in Europe. While staying there we entered the dungeon in which John Huss had been imprisoned, and went to see the place of his martyrdom. It is indicated by a large boulder-stone just outside the town, which bears inscribed on it the names of both these Bohemian martyrs.

The writings of John Huss are still extant, and fill a large folio volume, and the story of the Council of Constance occupies more than one quarto. I remembered having seen the house of Jerome in the town of Prague, and visiting there the prison in which twenty-seven Bohemian martyrs were confined together the night before their execution. In the persecution which followed the martyrdom of Huss and Jerome were thrown into deep mine pits; and in the succeeding war of extermination the Hussite reformation was completely crushed. But from the ashes of these martyrs sprang the Moravians, whose devoted labours have carried the Gospel to the darkest and most distant parts of the world.

Standing by the great ivy-mantled stone which marks the spot where the martyrdom of John Huss took place, we could not but remember his remarkable prophecy that in a hundred years after his decease the slain witnesses of the Gospel should, as it were, rise again from the dead in the persons of their successors, and cause their testimony to be heard throughout the world. How marvellously was this prophecy fulfilled! John Huss was burned in 1415, while Luther commenced his career as a Reformer in 1517.

How vain is human opposition to Divine truth! Its martyred witnesses rise from the dead in their successors, and the truth of God triumphs over every effort to arrest its progress and silence its testimony. The opposition of man is brought to nought, and "the word of the Lord abideth for ever."

A CHRISTIAN "PARTY" FOR PARLIAMENT.

DEAR SIR,—A week or two ago you referred to the disquieting signs of the present time in our country, and urged that these were a distinct call to renewed earnest prayer. I am far from being a pessimist, or alarmist, but it is impossible to regard with complacency the present state of things either in the religious, or political, or social world. In the nature of the case Christian work is bound to suffer, whilst bitter animosities are daily engendered in the breasts of Christian people—largely owing to the working of the Education Act. And social life must continue to suffer while some of its chief enemies are allowed, by the apathy of the Government, to work their own way unmolested.

The first duty of a Christian is to pray for his country. God, who is King of kings, and Lord of lords, must be acknowledged as the Supreme Master, and the case of the country must be laid before Him. But next to this, and as a result of it, there must be action, and the most pressing question just now is, What can Christian people do to remedy the existing state of things? Rev. Silvester Horne is advocating the return to Parliament at the next election of a Nonconformist party, and his advocacy has already gained the assent of a number of leading Free Churchmen. We doubt the efficacy of such a movement. It is too partial—too restricted. Yet we have no sympathy with secular criticisms which have been passed upon it urging that religion and politics must be rigidly separated.

A Christian man's politics must be Christian politics, for a true disciple of Jesus Christ regards the world in the light of God. We hope there will never again be, in this country, the shameful spectacle of Church members sending to Parliament a person of the Bradlaugh type. In that election there was the most complete separation between religion and politics to the disgrace of all concerned.

Having said this, we go on to say that the country needs—badly needs—not simply a fuller Nonconformist representation in Parliament, but a distinctly Christian majority, and by that we mean a Protestant Christian majority. The two great things which demand an immediate handling are, the question of education and the question of strong drink, and they need handling by men who are determined that in the one case Rome shall not be truckled to, and in the other that a vile trade shall not longer dominate this country. The Free Churches, strong as they are, are not strong enough alone to undertake this tremendous work. But we believe that Evangelical Christians of the Free and Anglican Churches could carry it through if they would. Are there not sufficient Protestant Christians in all the churches of this land who are one in their abhorrence both of sacerdotalism and drink to send to Parliament men who will put these questions before all others?

The doctrinal and liturgical differences between Evangelical Churchmen and Free Churchmen are trivial in comparison with the burning questions which demand an immediate solution in the interests of our country. If the power of Rome and the power of the publican are to be checked, there must be real and practical union at the polling booth between all who put great moral questions before party politics. We must be firm on these two great things, and insist that our candidate shall put them first. When he has pledged himself to them, then, every other question aside, it is the duty of Christians to send that man to St. Stephens. It is a duty to God and to man. All the pleasant exchanges of Christian fraternity at Mildmay and Keswick, and all the lamentations over the growth of priestism and drunkenness, are simply useless unless they are followed by action at the polling booth.

We plead with Christian men and women to sink all party differences and to unite upon the essential things for the good of the country. Let there be no more childish talk about this or that political party; let the Kingdom of God and His righteousness come first. And let there be no abstinence from the solemn duty of sending the right men to Parliament. In the present state of things it is an imperative obligation for every Christian to aid his country in the only way he can. We plead for a Protestant Christian "party" in Parliament. A General Election will soon be here. Can we not prepare for it, and strike when the hour comes? S. C. F.

GOD SPEAKING IN JUDGMENT.

SIR,—I have been pained by a remark made in my hearing as to this season's unfavourable weather—"that it is 'too cruel' when everyone wants holiday, and the farmers want the harvest secured." May we not ask—Has the Almighty Giver of all His people's blessings no right to expect His voice to be heard when He speaks in judgment? The past two years have been marked ones for war, earthquakes, famine, sad accidents, &c. (many of the latter caused by inattention to God's laws, and, I may add, in defiance of them), and now that He speaks to our nation by unprecedented floods and storms, and, it may be, a poor harvest, it is not well for us to be indifferent.

As we think of how God has blessed our Empire, and view the return He is getting from us as a nation—increasing indifference as to the observance of His day, given in mercy for renewal of physical as well as spiritual health, the marked absence from His house of the many, gross immorality in the highest society (and equal, as our papers testify, to that which brought God's judgment on Sodom), pleasure seeking to satiety; the very Written Word criticized till our young men are made to question the existence of a Divine Being, as well as the necessity of His humbling Himself in the person of Jesus Christ for us men and for our salvation; our godless colleges, our demoralizing literature and entertainments—these things and many others too numerous to mention are far below what should be expected on our part to One who might say to us, "Thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting," only "His mercy endureth for ever."—Yours, &c., An Observer.

AN APPEAL FOR PRAYER.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me a little space to ask your readers, in every place, to unite, in the Spirit of our Lord Jesus, in very earnest intercessory prayer on the following subjects:—

1. That some way, consistent with truth and love, may be discovered for dealing with the Education controversy, that the present unhappy conflict may be equitably settled.

2. That the awful sufferings of the Christian populations of the Turkish Empire may be brought to an end, and that peace and prosperity may come to those ravaged districts, now the scene of such heartrending suffering.

3. That the repatriation of the people to their lands, the re-building of their homesteads, and the re-stocking of their farms, should be hastened throughout the Transvaal and Orange River Colony, and that unity may be restored among our fellow-subjects in South Africa.

4. That the Church of God in our land may be strengthened to overcome, by the word of her testimony and the Blood of the Lamb, the three-fold evils of strong drink, impurity and gambling.

My heart is nigh broken with all the sin and sorrow, the division and conflict into which we seem to be drifting—in some cases, because we are following what we believe to be righteousness and truth; and I am desiring, more and more, to discover and unite myself with the mind and Spirit of Christ in intercessory prayer.

May I plead with God's children to unite in these four counts, not forgetting the need for a great revival of religion.

We may differ in many points of creed and policy, but we can unite in prayer. Shall it not be in the morning hour?—Yours sincerely,

F. B. Meyer.

Diligent for the Lord.

The Late Mr. WM. RAWLINSON.

THE apostolic injunction to be "not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord," was literally obeyed by the subject of this sketch, Mr. Wm. Rawlinson, of Taunton, who recently passed away at the advanced age of ninety.

Mr. Rawlinson was born in London on Christmas Day, 1812. His father was a lace manufacturer in the neighbourhood of Leicester, from which place he was obliged to remove soon after his son's birth, in consequence of the riots and machinery-breaking which prevailed at that time in the Midlands. The family removed to Tiverton, in Devonshire, where, at the famous Blundell's School, and also at Ottery-St.-Mary, the lad was educated. On attaining his majority, William was placed by his father in full charge of the lace factory which had been built in Taunton, where his business faculty soon manifested itself, and his long life spent there has been an inestimable blessing to many who have cause to thank God for his having been brought to Taunton.

When between sixteen and eighteen years of age Mr. Rawlinson became the subject of deep religious conviction, which changed all his life. He was led to look to the Bible for help and guidance, which he heard Christians say they found there; and in it he found the way to heaven by the One who is Himself "the Way, the Truth, and the Life." He at once began Christian work, and identified himself with an Evangelical church in Taunton—St. James'. The Oxford movement caused him later to sever his connection with the Established Church, and for a short time he joined the Brethren; but his wide sympathies did not find sufficient scope, and he became a member of North Street Congregational Church, where the remainder of his active Christian life of nearly fifty years was spent.

From the time of his conversion onward he was emphatically a man of prayer, frequently rising at five in the morning that he might have time to read and pray before the business of the day began. He always spent two hours in prayer and reading before he faced his daily duties, and this habit he kept up until he was laid aside by increasing weakness some six years ago, when he was eighty-four years old. North Street Sunday-school was noted for its adult members. There seemed no reason why growing up should make any difference to the scholars. They married, but still came, bringing their children with them. At one time there were four generations represented in the school, the senior, aged ninety-three, being in Mr. Rawlinson's class, while his great-grandson of seven was among the juveniles! All the classes meet in the large schoolroom for the opening service; then dispersing, one by one, to their class-rooms, of which there are twenty-two, Mr. Rawlinson's, which he was enabled to conduct for fifty years, being the first to file out, followed by their teacher. To see these forty or more men take their places—at one time there were a hundred—was one of the sights to any stranger interested in Sunday-school work. He was one of the itinerant preachers, and generally took the Sunday evening service at one of the village chapels, being also regular in his attendance at the Monday prayer meeting, which the deacons conducted in turn. His addresses were always full of power and rich in interest, his reading and exposition of the Scriptures being very helpful.

Mr. Rawlinson was a man of a pleasing and attractive personality, full of sympathy, fired with a deep concern for the souls of others. It was often said his face spoke for him, the soul looking through the eyes. His voice was another great gift—so full and so tender in tone that only a very hard heart could hear him plead unmoved. He was a great believer in the giving of good books and in the distribution of tracts, and only the Great Day will declare how many have been led to God in this way. From the time of his conversion Mr. Rawlinson gave up mere light reading, lest it should take away his relish for the Word of God, in which he delighted. To him it was truly the Sword of the Spirit, and in his hands broke down many a stronghold of sin.

Though the head of a large and important business, and with his hands full of threads of various matters, Mr. Rawlinson's own office was well known to many wanting help of different kinds. The business man became the ready advisor, or almoner if it were a deserving, needy case which was brought before him. Nothing was too much trouble for him. He delighted in personal service, and the interest shown has been the means of encouraging again and again those who were on the brink of despair. If reproof had to be administered, it was done in such a way that no one could feel hurt, while some who did not mind severity have been won by his smile which came from a heart full of love for his fellow creatures.

The leading institutions of the town lose a warm friend in him. Especially is this true of the hospital, where he visited the sick and dying regularly, praying and reading with them. The Town Mission also had his active support; and indeed it was a great marvel how he could find the time for so much outside his large business. The secret was in the early morning hours spent alone with his heavenly Father, so that the wheels of his daily life never dragged.

THE LATE MR. W. RAWLINSON.
From Photograph by Mr. John Chaffer and Sons, Taunton.

To one so active the weakness of advancing years, which confined him to the house for nearly six years, must have been a great trial; but Christian grace enabled him to bear all with patience. He became more a man of prayer than ever, and only a short time before he passed away he said to a friend "that prayer was the easiest language for him now it was so natural for him to talk to his heavenly Father. Many requests for prayer came to him, and were laid by him before the throne of grace, where, as he told the same friend, he laid his own concerns, "and left them there." Hence his serenity. Would that all Christians might have this precious possession, too!

Mr. Rawlinson left a son and two daughters to mourn his loss, his wife having died some years ago. His own home call came on June 22, when he entered into "the joy of his Lord." The funeral attested the esteem in which he was held, as well as the wide range of his sympathies; and the touching tribute paid by his pastor of many years, Rev. Samuel Wilkinson, found an echo in many hearts. Mr. Rawlinson has gone, but his influence remains as a great blessing to numbers. It may truly be said of him—

For years beyond our ken,
The light he leaves behind him lies
Upon the paths of men;
And so the interrupted breath
Inspires a thousand lives.

*Some Indian Saints.

By Miss AMY WILSON-CARMICHAEL.

GOD has His saints in India. There was one—he has joined the company of Indian saints in Glory now—the poet of the Mission, and our friend. One so true in all his ways that a Hindu lad observing him with critical schoolboy eyes, saw in him, as in a mirror, something of the holiness of God, and, won by that look, became a Christian, and a winner of souls. Some of the noblest converts of our Mission are the direct result of that Tamil poet's life. There is another, he is old, and all through his many years he has been known as the one-word man, the man of changeless truth. He is a village pastor, whom all the people love. Go into his cottage any time, any day, and you will find one and another with him, and you will see the old man with his loving face, and almost quite blind eyes, bending patiently to catch every word of the story they are telling, and then you will hear him advising, and comforting, as a father would his child. For miles round that countryside the people know him, and he is honoured by Hindus and by Christians as India honours saints.

I remember once seeing the poet and the pastor together. They belonged to widely different castes, but that was forgotten now. The two old white heads were bent over the same letter, a letter telling of the defection of a young convert each had loved as a son, and they were weeping over him. It was the ancient East living its life before us: "O my son Absalom! my son, my son Absalom! Would God I had died for thee! O Absalom my son, my son!" But what made it a thing to remember in this land of caste divisions, even among Christians, was the overflowing of the love that made those two men one.

There are others—money, the place it holds in a man's affections is supposed to be a fair test of character—we could tell of a lawyer who is losing money to-day rather than touch unrighteous gains; of a doctor who gives to his church till he feels, and travels any distance to help the poor who cannot pay; of a peasant who risks a certain amount of injury to his palms, rather than climb them on Sunday; and in many an old world town and village, dotted about on the wide red plain, we have simple, humble, holy people, of whom the world knows nothing—pastors in lonely outstations, teachers, and workers, and just ordinary Christians, who do the day's work, and shine as they do it. We think of such men and women when we hear the critic's cry, and we wish he could know them as they are.

It is these men and women who ask us to tell it out clearly how sorely our Indian Church needs your prayers. They have no desire to hide things. They speak straighter than we do, and far more strongly, and they believe, as we do, that if you know more you will pray more.

* Miss Wilson-Carmichael's remarkable book Things as They Are: Mission Work in Southern India (6s. Morgan & Scott), has aroused a keen interest in her observations and writings. The accompanying narratives present a glorious side of mission work in our great Eastern Dependency.

"In the Same Night in which He was Betrayed."

Stamped with the brand of His deepest love,
He gave us His tenderest gift;
Do we think of this as the bread we take,
Or the cup of blessing lift?

The night that to Him brought anguish sore
Brought us the feast and the song;
But the throb of the suffering Saviour's heart
Beats on through the ages long.

Oh let us pause till we feel it still,
Till His love our love awake;
Till service is gladness, and e'en the cross
Is sweet for the Master's sake.

And then—may some likeness faint of His
Shine forth from our hours of pain;
Some tender act, some abiding word,
That shall be another's gain.

THE OPEN DOOR OF MERCY.

"He delighteth in mercy." "The Lord taketh pleasure in them that hope in His mercy." "Let us come boldly to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need." "Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out." "Behold I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it."

MERCY is the exercise of pardoning love to the guilty. All God's creatures need His lovingkindness, but only the guilty need His mercy. It was sin that created this necessity, and where there is sin, mercy alone can meet the case. A guilty creature cannot justify himself by his innocence. He cannot undo the past, nor can he repair the damage of sin. He can only confess his sin, and implore the mercy of God, in whose sight no flesh living can be justified by its own righteousness. "Being justified freely by His grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus," is God's way of salvation, and there is no other.

The consciousness of guilt, and what it involves, is one of the most painful experiences of the soul. To see sin as the rebellion against the just, wise, and benevolent authority of God; to see that it involves a breach in the moral order of the universe, opening the floodgates to a deluge of disorders, degradation, and misery; to understand its deadly nature, and what it would do if it were as mighty as it is malignant; to realize it as separation from God, and exposing the soul to just condemnation and punishment; to feel it as a moral poison and disorder within, producing a strife in our own being and a lifelong bleeding of the soul, which no human hand can staunch; to long for peace and to seek it in vain from all human resources; this is the deadly sting of sin, which makes death the king of terrors, and the grave the gateway to a future which fills the soul with unspeakable dismay and dread.

It is then the soul welcomes the mercy of God, and throws itself into His arms with the prayer, "Have mercy upon me, O God, according to Thy lovingkindness, according to the multitude of Thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions." It is then Christ becomes most precious as God's way of peace, through whom He is just and the Justifier of the ungodly. "Being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." A new song is put into the believer's lips as he says, "Blessed is the man whose transgression is forgiven, and whose sin is covered."

Happy the sick chamber where the pardoning love of God is felt, and no cloud of guilt hides the face and smile of God. But often under the weakness of the body the mind is brought into bondage. We are made to possess the sins of our youth, and past transgressions pain our eyes. Our daily imperfections and indwelling sin distress us. Satan chooses these moments to wound us with his fiery darts, tipped with the remembrance of our own transgressions.

It is then we rejoice in the open door of mercy, which no man can shut. Within the circle of His covenant love—that new covenant sealed with the precious blood of Christ shed for the remission of sins—there is no condemnation. In the holy triumph of his soul, the believer can say, "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect, it is God that justifieth; who is he that condemneth, it is Christ that died; yea rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God for us."

Just as I am, without one plea,
But that Thy blood was shed for me,
And that Thou bidst me come to Thee,
O Lamb of God, I come.

Just as I am, Thy love unknown,
Has broken every barrier down;
Now to be Thine, yea, Thine alone,
O Lamb of God, I come.

A Well-spent Life.

THE LATE MRS. FRANCES MOLINA GREGG.

A YEAR ago this beloved Christian lady passed to her everlasting rest, after a life spent in happy service for her Master. Frances Molina Gregg was the eldest daughter of the late General Sir Edward Warde, K.C.B., Royal Artillery. She was born at Deal Rectory, the residence of her maternal grandfather, the late Canon Lane. Her youth was spent in Malta and at Woolwich. At the latter place she gave herself to Christian work, her favourite sphere being at the women's hospital, which was just outside her father's garden, where her sweet ministrations soothed many a passing spirit. So constantly was she called upon that a little wicket gate was cut through the garden wall.

On Sir Edward retiring from the command at Woolwich, the family moved to Brighton, Miss Warde leaving a marked influence behind her, and being remembered as "the good little angel of Woolwich." In the new home she met Mr. R. C. Gregg, then an officer in the 19th Hussars, to whom she was married in 1873. In 1875 Mr. Gregg left the army, and they lived in turn in the Isle of Wight, at Reigate, Kingston Hill, and Hurstpierpoint. At the last-named place, where Mr. and Mrs. Gregg resided for twelve years, a mission work among the people was started by them. Though never very strong, Mrs. Gregg frequently spoke at the meetings, and was especially fond of witnessing for her Master in the open air. Many a soul in this village, as in other places, too, where she lived, will have reason to thank God for the words spoken by His faithful servant.

FRANCES MOLINA GREGG.
From Photograph by W. & A. H. Fry, 68, East Street, Brighton.

In 1897, on moving to Bournemouth, though not so strong as before, Mrs. Gregg continually held meetings for the coastguards and their wives, for members of the police force of the town, and for young ladies in a large business house. One of her chief delights was to distribute from her chair flower-letters and tracts to those walking on the sea-front, especially on Sunday afternoons. In 1900, being advised to winter in the south of France, she distributed quantities of flower-letters and leaflets there and in Italy—the former being even eagerly asked for by all classes—renewing her efforts on two later journeys to France. During holiday seasons spent in different parts of the home lands she also witnessed faithfully for the Master. While on a visit to Llandrindod Wells she was much occupied in distributing Gospel messages. A tract was given to a gentleman, "What mean ye by this service?" Two or three days later, he came and said, "I cannot get those words out of my head. 'When I see the blood I will pass over you.'" The way of life was lovingly explained.

"It is only hereafter," said one, in writing of her life, "that we shall realize the marvellous effect of her loving words and example." Another friend wrote:—"It was wonderful to see what love to her Master enabled her to accomplish with such a fragile body as she had. She was an inspiration to everyone she came in contact with."

Hers was, indeed, a life lived close to the Saviour, and she was never so happy as when talking of "the things above," or of praying with others, as may be seen from the two following extracts from letters to her family:—"I had a most delightful talk with her on that occasion, extending over about two hours, and I felt she was indeed one of God's choice ones, so happy was she in talking over the things of God. I can picture her now, as I was speaking, saying again and again, 'Let me just think over that again.'" "I seem to see her sweet face and hear her gentle voice as she said, 'Oh, do let us have a little prayer before you go.'"

A subject in which Mrs. Gregg took especial interest was that of the Lord's Second Coming, about which she was never tired of talking with His people. She had a great knowledge of the Scriptures, and her fondness for hymns was very marked, for she was never weary of singing them, whether alone or with others.

On her return from a visit to France last summer, Mrs. Gregg's health, which for some time had been failing, gradually became worse, and ten days after her return to Bournemouth she entered into her happy rest, on August 27, 1902—leaving behind to mourn her irreparable loss a husband and three sons.

Suppression of Sunday Trains

WHEN presenting recently a heavy memorial from Great Western shareholders against the company's Sunday traffic in the carriage of goods and amusement companies, Rev. J. M. Pollock took occasion to say that he was in possession of statistics, which had been twice verified in Geneva, showing that the increase in the tonnage of goods carried and in receipts had been, in each case, 26 per cent., since the Swiss Sunday goods traffic had been restricted. This could not be due to any great lengthening of the lines, as the increase of mileage was under 3 per cent. It was a sign of the increased prosperity which accompanied Sunday restriction. Mr. Pollock held in his hand official papers from the Brussels Ministry of Railroads, consisting of carefully prepared tables of the accidents occurrent upon the State lines of Belgium during the last fourteen years. These showed that since Sunday restriction of goods trains had taken place the casualties had diminished 43 per cent. if passengers and goods service were taken together, but 53 per cent. if goods trains were taken alone. On July 28, Rev. E. Poole Connor brought these statistics before the Great Eastern Company; and on August 14, notwithstanding the dissensions prevalent in the London and North-Western half-yearly meeting, Mr. R. J. Horneck laid them before the directors. The chairmen of these great railways ignored the statements made by the speakers, who represented the remonstrant shareholders.

"Peace, be Still."

"Peace, be still," 'tis a comforting thought,
And sets all sorrows and pain at nought;
When parting comes with its bitter pain,
How blessed to feel we shall meet again!

"Peace, be still," when the world grows cold,
And the weary heart feels sad and old;
To know there is One who loves us still,
And meekly bow to His holy will.

"Peace, be still," when fierce winds blow,
And earth seems nought but pain and woe;
To sit and muse on our Father's will,
And hear His voice say "Peace, be still."

Torrey-Alexander Mission.

BIRKENHEAD AND LIVERPOOL.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

LAST week we chronicled the arrival of Messrs. Torrey and Alexander in this country for the autumn and winter campaign. Their first engagement was for a brief mission in Birkenhead. For some weeks previous preparation had been made by united prayer and earnest work for the visit of the evangelists. As only four days could be given to Birkenhead before commencing the Liverpool mission, a great deal of work was crowded into a short space of time.

CONVERTS ON THE OPENING DAY.

The mission commenced on Tuesday with an address to workers in the afternoon by Dr. Torrey, which was preceded by a singing lesson in which Mr. Alexander quickly laid hold of the sympathies of his audience.

In the evening the Y.M.C.A. Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, and arrangements had been made for an overflow meeting in the Gymnasium which was attended by quite 1,000 people. Dr. Torrey's address in the Hall on "What it costs not to be a Christian," was listened to with profound attention, and it was soon evident that a power other than human was directing the Word to the hearts of the hearers.

Dr. Torrey does not usually begin after-meetings on the opening day of a mission, but he remarked to the writer that he had never visited a place so "ripe unto harvest" as Birkenhead, and on this first night quite a number yielded themselves to Christ.

Notwithstanding the very inclement weather, Wednesday afternoon saw a great gathering waiting the arrival of the evangelist. Mr. Alexander at once led off with "At Calvary," in the singing of which the audience joined with telling effect. Following the song he held a review to find out what parts of Dr. Torrey's address on the previous afternoon had been most helpful to those that heard it; and from all parts of the hall came the crisp sentences so characteristic of the doctor's addresses, such as "Don't be a caricature of what God intended you to be," "Pray through," and "Prayer can do what God can do," showing how the hearts of the people had been touched.

Dr. Torrey's address was based on the release of Peter from prison, from which it was shown "how to pray so as to get what you ask for." The instructions were "pray to God," "pray without ceasing," and "pray in the Spirit"—in these is the secret of prevailing prayer.

TWO OVERFLOW MEETINGS.

In the evening, long before eight o'clock, both Hall and Gymnasium were crowded, and the neighbouring Baptist Church was requisitioned for a second overflow meeting, at all of which Mr. Alexander sang, assisted by Miss Towner, of New York. Dr. Torrey spoke in the Hall and Gymnasium on "What shall I do with Jesus?" his clear, logical argument and appeal being followed by the coming out of a large number of men and women anxious to be saved. Among these were two brothers of eighteen and twenty, of whose conversion their mother wrote afterwards saying that their home was completely transformed.

On Thursday afternoon Dr. Torrey's address on "Hindrances to Prayer" created a profound impression, as he dealt with the prevailing habits of card-playing, theatre-going, dancing, and smoking. A great deal of heart-searching was going on, and more than one Christian told the doctor that they were thankful for his faithful words. Thursday evening saw still larger crowds seeking admission, all the workers regretting that no available building was capable of accommodating the people.

Dr. Torrey's address was based on Acts xxii. 16: "Now, why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." To this question he pressed for an immediate answer, and dealt with the various stumbling-blocks in the way of men coming to Christ, closing with an earnest appeal for immediate decision, as it would never be easier to break away from the world and follow Christ. At the after meeting a large number of people professed faith in the Lord.

A DAY OF GREAT POWER.

The closing day of the all too short Birkenhead Mission (Friday) was one of great power. Dr. Torrey had promised to teach the people in the afternoon "How to convert Birkenhead to Christ," and a great many Christians came to learn the secret. Personal work in winning souls was the means by which it must be accomplished. "Get right with God." "Pray and work." These are the conditions of a mighty triumph over the forces of evil. The evening address to a crowded congregation, on "Excuses for Not Coming to Christ," produced a profound impression. Excuse after excuse was shown to be worthless and hollow. An appeal to cast away excuses, and consecrate heart and life to Christ, followed by Mr. Alexander's solo, "I am coming home," was responded to by a still larger number coming out on the Lord's side.

The brief mission has left a deep mark on Birkenhead, one of the most important results being the rousing of Christians to their responsibility for the souls of men and an expressed determination to labour for their salvation.

Preparedness at Liverpool.

The Liverpool mission, for which great preparation has been made with much prayer, opened on Sunday with a large meeting of Christian workers, held in the Gymnasium, which has been specially fitted up for the purposes of the mission. Dr. Torrey's address on "The Privilege, Duty, and Advantage of Personal Work for Christ," was both heart-searching and inspiring.

The afternoon meeting was held in the Philharmonic Hall, which was filled when Mr. Alexander took his place on the platform. A choir numbering 1,200 voices has been formed for the mission, under the leadership of Mr. F. J. Foxley, with which Mr. Alexander was able at once to get into touch with the "Glory Song." Dr. Torrey's opening address on "The Wisdom of Soul Winning," appealed specially to Christians in the audience.

Long before the time announced to commence the evening meeting, the hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, a great overflow meeting being held in the Gymnasium, conducted by Mr. W. Trowell, and addressed by local ministers. In the Hall Mr. Alexander conducted a forty-minutes' service of song, including the "Glory Song," with several older pieces. Dr. Torrey's address on "The Love of God, its Fulness and Freshness, and the Sin of Rejecting it," was made a message of life to many in the audience, and his appeal to anxious inquirers to come to the front in token of their willingness to accept the Lord Jesus Christ was responded to by quite a number of people of all ages.

The opening of this mission has given joy to the Lord's people, who for a long time have been praying and are expecting a great outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

MONDAY NIGHT'S MEETING.

The first week-night meeting in Liverpool has proved a memorable time. An hour before 8 p.m. the Philharmonic Hall was crammed. Dr. S. R. Macphail, moderator of the Presbyterian Church of England, took the overflow service in the Gymnasium. The singing was excellent. Dr. Torrey spoke with great vigour and directness. The three thousand in the hall listened with intentness as he employed more than one telling illustration which would appeal to those living in a great port. After his holiday he seemed to be endowed with a double power of the Spirit to bring home the call to Christ. The ministers on the platform were struck with the clear-cut definiteness of the address. Mr. Alexander's solo rang through the hall with a force and sweetness which evidently deepened the influence of the address. All are hoping and praying that Liverpool may be stirred to its heart by these meetings. So many prayers cannot be unanswered.

Am I my Brother's Keeper?

IN the Spectator of August 20 appeared an important article, "One Way of Saving Macedonia." This has called forth a letter from Mr. Nowell Smith, of Ryde. We make a few striking extracts:—

"Yours is the only paper, so far as I know, which, while taking in general a sober and conservative line in politics, has not banished every political principle, except political economy, to Saturn. I obtain my information about the horrors which are now happening in European Turkey from The Times. The Times is justly proud of the range and accuracy of its foreign news. It cannot be merely for the purpose of harrowing our feelings, or of tickling the curiosity of the lower part of human nature, that it allows its correspondents to describe, with a sobriety of language far more horrible than the most florid eloquence, so many villages destroyed with their whole population of old men, women, and children, so many prisoners murdered by their escort, so many women violated with circumstances of indescribable cruelty. . . .

"A few years ago similar scenes were enacted in Armenia, with this difference, that the Armenians were more or less passive victims. Massacre and lust were described in the newspapers with equal power, and without result. . . The Turkish Government was then glutted with blood and rapine. It has now slept off that debauch, and its appetite is as vigorous as ever. This is the third of these cannibal feasts, not to mention occasional stimulants taken between meals, which the Sick Man of Europe has enjoyed during the lifetime of the present generation. . . .

"'Why,' asks the highly-intellectual Turkophile at his club in Pall Mall, 'why will the unruly devils rebel?' The answer is not far to seek. But granted that Turkish rule does not justify rebellion—which is false—and granted that the individual Turk is a fine soldier and a man, in some circumstances, of fine character—which is true—still, all this does not make the Turkish method of suppression less of an outrage against God and man. Gentlemen who airily express the wish that all Jews, Armenians, Greeks, and now Macedonians, might be extirpated like vermin, may plume themselves as men of the world, as superior to old-fashioned ideas of humanitarianism; but let not the rest of us, less afraid of ridicule, be enamoured of their polished cynicism.

"At the present day one has to be careful how one advocates any cause which is tainted with those unpatriotic notions of liberty and philanthropy. Liberty is a mere dream; philanthropy is sickly sentiment. Imperialism based on no illusory ties of blood or religion or civilization, but on hard cash, which is the genuine and only summum bonum! I have no doubt what the people of this Empire would really think if once they could be roused into thinking at all. And surely the people of other countries, of America, of France, of Germany, Austria, and Italy, of all countries where public opinion exists, would be at one in saying, 'Turkish tyranny must cease,' if only their Governments could lay aside their mutual distrusts in a cause which would be for the benefit and honour of all alike. . . . It can be done, and it will be done, if even one or two Governments can be stirred by the public opinion behind them to take the risks of interference.

"Our generation has seen a steady reaction from the humanitarian ideals of the last century. Material success and the pursuit of pleasure have become more and more the avowed objects of public policy, of private energy, even of education. No empire can stand the stress of storm on such foundations. If the cry of the slaughtered children and violated women can rouse no more than a shrug of the shoulders, and an "Am I my brother's keeper?" heaven help us when our pinch comes! For the purely selfish can never help themselves."

A Saturday-Night Prayer Meeting.

IN common with many churches and chapels in the Metropolis, the Westbourne Grove Baptists anticipate the services of the Sabbath by holding a prayer meeting on Saturday evening. The gathering is regarded as one of the most important of the week, and it says much for the deep spirituality which underlies the work of the church that several hundreds of the congregation should withdraw themselves from their domestic duties at an hour when such claims are numerous, to wait together upon God.

During the pastor's vacation, the meeting has not been allowed to languish, and on Saturday evening last Rev. George Freeman was greatly cheered to find so large and warm-hearted a company awaiting his return. Scarcely a seat in the spacious lecture-hall was unoccupied, and visitors must have been impressed by the earnestness with which the proceedings were entered into. Such animation is too often lacking in modern Church prayer-meetings. The spirit of true supplication possessed the meeting, and it was felt to be a season of soul-refreshing. It was encouraging to notice the large proportion of young people present, a fact which augurs well for the future of the church.

A feature which gave additional interest to the meeting on Saturday evening was a brief address by Dr. B. L. Whitman, of Philadelphia, who spoke on "Prayer-Meeting Life in America." The best results, he considered, were experienced when the week-night gathering was a meeting for conference and prayer. He described the methods followed by churches in his own country. The first quarter of an hour would be spent in praise. After several prayers the pastor gives a ten-minutes' address, and the meeting is then open for testimony and prayer, any of the congregation being free to take part. While the forms of service might differ somewhat in the two countries, the purpose is the same, viz., how to get a more sure hold of God, and avoid the deep abyss of hopelessness into which there is a danger of falling. In England and America the church has the same problem to wrestle with—how can we live worthy of the vocation to which God has called us?

Another speaker was Mr. Mudie-Smith, who gathered up the lessons of the recent Church Census, which revealed the fact that eighty out of every 100 failed to attend places of worship. The necessity of organizing open-air campaigns for reaching the non-church-going crowds was emphasized, and stress was laid on the need for the most powerful preachers in the churches undertaking the work, for the man in the street is suffering from soul atrophy, and needs a spiritual specialist. The speaker also dwelt upon the severities of the overcrowding evil, and pleaded the cause of the thousands of children who, brought up under these conditions, are deprived of all chance of living pure and noble lives.

Further praise was followed by a few words of greeting from the pastor, and an inspiring meeting closed with prayer, led by Rev. Dr. Cameron, of Boston, U.S.A.

Church Missionary Society.—The annual report of the Church Missionary Society, just published, forms a missionary book of the highest value. Speakers, teachers, and Christian workers generally will find that the pages abound with facts and illustrations of the deepest interest. Grounds for praise to God are brought from all the fields of labour; and those who wait much upon the Lord will have their hearts touched also by the statements of causes for anxiety. The work of the year has led to an expenditure of £350,000. Though forty-six names were removed from the list of missionaries during the year through death and other causes, 100 were added, making a net increase of fifty-four, and bringing the total number of European labourers up to 1,330. The brief history of each branch of the work, from its foundation, has a wide and permanent interest. The Short Annual Report is admirably adapted for general circulation. It is profusely illustrated, and has many other attractive features.

Emigration of Irish Boys.

DEAR SIR,—There is a strong feeling in Ireland against the emigration of her young people, and this feeling has increased since the land has begun to change owners; nevertheless we see no other way of saving some of the boys and girls we are working to rescue than that of sending them far away from their early associations, and from the influence of degraded parents. This year we have sent out two small parties of boys to Canada; all the lads are happily situated, in circumstances far beyond comparison with those of their former lives. Little Dan's letter to his father is an index to both sides of his life:—

I was very glad to hear that you were all right and well. After you had stopped coming to see me I did not know where you had gone to, but one of Mrs. D.'s daughters told me that you had gone to prison for two years. I wanted to go to Canada while I was in the Home, and so I am in Canada to-day. I like the place where I live. We have four horses and a colt, and four cows and nineteen head of cattle, calves and all. Mr. R—— (his master) is a musician, and I am learning to play the organ. I went to school five months last winter. I am in the fourth reader now; the school is harder over here. We are haying now, and the crops look fine. I like Canada very much; it is not like Ireland, where you have to go round the town and stand by the corners of public-houses, thinking to get work there.

Another boy, who has been longer away, writes:—

I guess you will think it is pretty near time for me to drop you a line, seeing you wrote to me last winter, but times are so busy that I hardly ever think of writing letters. I am working my own farm this year, and I have ten acres in crop, and I will have forty acres ready for next year. This country has boomed up this last year or two, so that land is pretty hard to get, nowadays, but I think I can get along on the land I have for a while. If everything goes right, I intend to see you all once more before I settle down, so don't be surprised if you see me walking into your house some day in a year or so.

These little accounts of their circumstances, taken from letters full of expressions of affection and gratitude to their friends who sent them forth into the new world, give us every encouragement to persevere in our efforts to put our boys within reach of healthy, honest, and hopeful lives, where they will have the prospect of independence to cheer them through their toils. We have a thousand children in the Dublin Mission Homes and Schools, seven hundred being boarders in the Homes, who look to us to start them out in life, and as there is always a proportion whose success in their own country is unlikely, we earnestly hope that this door will be kept open for them by the continued sympathy and support of our friends.—Yours sincerely, Ellen and Annie Smyly.

102, Lower Baggot Street, Dublin.

"Trusted and Tried."

SOME of your older readers will remember the self-denying and arduous labours in Spitalfields of Mr. W. J. Lewis, in days when Gospel effort in that district was more difficult and less popular than at the present time.

Our friend and brother, esteemed for his work's sake, has long been laid aside by the infirmities of increasing years, but the fruits of his faithful service have been many. We earnestly bespeak the prayers and sympathy of our readers on his behalf, in the painful afflictions it has pleased the Lord to lay upon him. Writing recently to a friend, he says:—

"I am thankful to be able to use a pencil, and to have the use of my right hand. I have been in bed for just over a week, almost helpless, and suffering much at times.

"I have recently had a stroke for the third time. It is chiefly the left side, and I fear the left leg will be useless in future.

"The doctor says I must try and keep it stretched down straight, or the leg will be drawn up. The left arm and the spine are affected.

"My brain is sadly so that my memory fails me greatly. I am indeed a poor old cripple now. Well, it is all in the Lord's hands."

Any of Mr. Lewis's friends whose hearts may be moved to write him a word of cheer, may address it to our care.

Farnborough Gospel Church.

THE urgent need for Evangelical services in the district, as well as a desire to reach the working-people who attended no place of worship, led to the founding an undenominational mission at Farnborough about seven years ago. Blessing rested on the effort from the outset; and last year Mr. W. H. Rawlings accepted the charge and oversight of the work as pastor.

A brass band of converted men goes out to adjacent villages—such as Ash, Ash Vale, and Frimley Green—where the Gospel is preached in the open-air, and cottage meetings are held as opportunity is afforded. Already eighty young people are under regular Biblical instruction. A weekly Bible study conducted at Aldershot is well attended by soldiers and civilians, as well as similar gatherings at Farnborough and Tongham. From time to time new converts have been received, till the company of forty-two has grown in twelve months to seventy-five, every member being an active worker. Farnborough is becoming increasingly a centre for Roman Catholic activity. To counteract this, weekly Protestant lectures are given; and the distribution of Gospel literature has included over 25,000 pamphlets and other publications of a Protestant character. Mr. Alfred Marshall takes charge of "Streams of Gladness," a Christian monthly magazine which is being used of God to stir up inquiry regarding ritualism, as well as to point the way of salvation and life.

There is a well-equipped hall in one of the finest positions in the town, burdened, however, with a debt of £450. It became necessary—to prevent the site being shut in by the erection of a public-house, as well as with a view to the extension demanded by the overcrowded state of the hall—to purchase an adjoining corner plot of land. The people have themselves paid off the £80 which this cost; and if they are enabled to wipe off the debt, they will be in a self-supporting position, and able to prosecute more vigorously the work in the villages. Pastor Rawlings may be addressed at Rock House, South Farnborough, Hants.

Welsh Notes.

UNTIL very recently it was feared that the "Dean Howell Memorial Fund" would not attain to the required amount. Now through the generosity of an anonymous donor the required sum of £300 has been made up. A fact which demonstrates the popularity of the late Dean among the poor, as well as the rich, is that over £40 of the amount subscribed comes from the working-men of Wrexham.

The appointment of Canon Roberts of Llandaff to the Deanery of Bangor is one which is certain to be received with favour in the principality. He is a native of the diocese, and the whole of his clerical life has been spent in the land of his birth. He possesses the reputation of being an acceptable preacher. For years he has had ample scope for the exercise of his gifts as a preacher in his capacity of missioner for the diocese of Llandaff.

The Bishop of Liverpool was the special preacher upon the occasion of the formal re-opening of the chancel of Bangor Cathedral on Thursday. In the course of his sermon Dr. Chavasse said that Bangor represented the oldest form of Christianity known in these islands. Long before St. Augustine landed in Kent Jesus Christ was known and preached at Bangor. Bangor also had a bishopric long before St. Augustine ruled in Canterbury. Later on in his sermon the Bishop declared that the Church of England would never reach the masses until church people laid aside all haughtiness and self-assertiveness and conceit.

The August Quarterly Association of the North Wales Calvinistic Methodists was held this year at Pwllheli. Among the most important of the matters discussed was the annual report of the Protestant schools of Flintshire. These have been founded and carried on by the Calvinistic Methodists of North Wales, in order to counteract the pernicious influence of the educational institutions established by the Roman Catholics in the county. The report was, on the whole, a cheering one. Fifteen years ago the scholars numbered 370; they now number 600. The grants then reached the sum of £248; they now amount to £628.

"Tussles with Sceptics."

By Rev. JOHN TUCKWELL.

SINCE my last report of "Tussles with Sceptics," I have had a memorable encounter, to which only a brief reference has been made. A favourite basis of attack on the part of the opponents of our faith is the scientific, and it need scarcely be said that Haeckel's "Riddle of the Universe" is one of the armouries whence their weapons are drawn. Only a very few, however, of those who so use it have sufficient preliminary scientific training to discriminate between its facts and its fallacies. A unique combination of special providences has enabled me to devote no little attention to this form of scepticism. When, therefore, on a recent occasion an opportunity presented itself of repelling an attack on this ground, I selected the first chapter of Genesis, and threw down a challenge to all the world to discover a single scientific mistake in it.

My challenge was promptly taken up, and a day and hour fixed for the debate. A champion was forthcoming to oppose me, and the place, as on former occasions, was "the Hyde Park Forum." It was arranged that the first half hour should be allowed to the opener, the second to his opponent, after which each should have a quarter of an hour, so far as the time would permit and the chairman should think fit. My affirmation was: "That the first chapter of Genesis is in strict agreement with the accredited facts of modern science." This, of course, left me free from any obligation to accept all the mere theorizings of scientific men, whether great or small, and obliged me to recognise only what could be regarded as unquestionable facts—a precaution just as well as necessary.

I claimed that allowance should be made also for mere modes of expression, in order that the facts recorded in the chapter should be compared with the facts known to modern science. My affirmation was acknowledged by the chairman, and by my opponents, to be clear and to the purpose. During my half hour, therefore, I endeavoured to show the perfect agreement for which I contended in the first part of the chapter, going just so far as my time permitted. I treated the story as a straightforward matter-of-fact account of what actually took place in the course of the creation of our world, related in language well fitted to describe it, and with due regard to the order in which these facts occurred. My opponent then assailed my contentions. He made some unsuccessful attempts to deal with the introduction of light to the lightless world; endeavoured to dispute the dominant power of the sun over the seasons, but apparently without a very clear conception of the astronomical and other laws which govern these changes; blundered over the succession of the geological strata by putting the Permian at the beginning instead of at the close of the Palæozoic Age, finally taking refuge in the proclamation of himself as an "atheist," and in demanding that I should prove before all else the existence of a God. But as this would have required the whole time allotted to the debate, and would have precluded the possibility of comparing the facts recorded in the chapter with the facts known to science, I felt entitled to question the justice of his demand. Thus, I need hardly add, the first chapter of Genesis stood at the close of our debate just where it was at the beginning.

THE LESSON OF SUCH INCIDENTS.

The proceedings lasted two hours and a quarter. The quietness and order which prevailed were on the whole most exemplary, and the chairman acted with unimpeachable fairness. A great crowd had assembled before we commenced, and very few moved from the spot until all was over. Votes of thanks to the chairman and speakers were heartily accorded.

Surely there is something to be learned from this experience. Here were hundreds of men, some of them in the grime of their day's work, standing the whole time in perfect stillness, and listening with the deepest attention! What held them thus, but a sense of the profound importance of the questions at issue? Can nothing be done to appeal further to this sense? Many of them probably never enter a place of worship, and are kept away by doubt concerning the truth and trustworthiness of Scripture. What is needed besides preachers of the Gospel, it seems to me, is not half-educated smatterers of science, but men who know their Bibles, and can deal fairly and efficiently with the alleged difficulties to faith presented by the sceptic. There is a vast sphere for labour among the seventy or eighty per cent. of our population which is non-Church-going, and a large amount of equipment which a little judicious critical—not "higher" critical—study of Scripture might yield. I say not "higher critical," for the higher criticism is used and gloried over by the other side, but a reading of Scripture which is devout and mentally alert, and not listless and unintellectual, undertaken with a special view to meet objections.

On several occasions after the above encounter I went back to the field, but the atheistical platform was not there; then, unfortunately for want of co-workers to follow up the advantage gained, the ground was occupied by a band of professed Christians who had departed from the faith, and were seeking to lead others astray. Now, however, the atheists have returned. We must not despair even of their salvation. But can nothing be done in the direction I have indicated to restore the faith of the great unbelieving multitude, in the sacred Volume as a true and trustworthy revelation of the mind and will of God? Would it not be possible to hold a meeting somewhere once a week for men who can reason, and for the study of Scripture on these lines?

An Echo of Keswick.

THE following are points from two sermons by Rev. G. C. Grubb:—

MORNING.

The tokens of the possession of real Christianity are these:—

1. Conversion (Acts ix. 1-9).

2. Definite reception of the Holy Spirit (Acts ix. 17-22).

3. Not conferring with flesh and blood, but getting away from man and alone with God (Gal. i. 16, 17).

4. Having no confidence in the flesh (Phil. iii. 1-21).

5. Standing fast in the Lord against every kind of opposition (1 Cor. xvi. 13; Gal. v. 1; Phil. i. 27, iv. 1; 1 Thes. iii. 8; 2 Thes. ii. 15).

EVENING.

The powers of the Kingdom of God.

At Pentecost four things came into existence which were never known before:—

1. The perpetual vision of Jesus in His glory. "The world seeth Me no more, but ye see Me" (John xiv. 19).

2. Christ dwelling in the heart by faith (Eph. iii. 17; Col. i. 27).

3. Prayer in the name of Jesus (John xiv. 13; xvi. 23, 24).

4. Glorying in the Cross (Gal. vi. 14).

Some truths which came from deeper depths of Scripture, and went down into deeper depths of God's claims upon the believer, and into the effects of the Gospel of God upon those who obey Him, than any other utterances during the Convention, were told without reserve in these addresses.

The passages quoted are commended to the studious meditation of other of God's witnesses.

Scripture Texts and Travellers.—The twentieth year of the London Tramcar and Omnibus Scripture Text Mission demonstrates the growing interest with which the work is being followed. One friend who subscribes liberally to the work has placed forty texts in the lifts of the electric railway, and is engaging sandwich-men (twelve in the day time and six at night) to carry texts of Scripture through the streets of the West End during the London season. The texts displayed at night will be illuminated with electric light. The prayers of God's people are asked on behalf of this special effort. The address of the Mission is 28, Charterhouse Square, E.C., Miss Baily being the secretary.

New Homes for the R.S.U.

"TO him that hath shall be given." The usefulness of the Ragged School Union's existing Holiday Homes at Margate, Southend, Brenchley, Bognor, and Bournemouth has led the trustees of the late Louisa Lady Ashburton (whose daughter married the Marquis of Northampton) to hand over to the R.S.U. three beautifully situated cottages on her ladyship's estate at Addiscombe, near the Shirley Hills. The gift is absolute, and includes several acres of land, which as lawn, flower bed, and garden surround the detached villas, and make the scene one of tempting beauty. Near the public roadway is a small neat hall, used for public religious services.

The first of these houses was built in 1883, by Louisa Lady Ashburton, as an adjunct to George Holland's Mission—a "nest" for children; next year was added a second, for older folk; and in 1886 the late Duchess of Teck opened the third: providing a total accommodation of sixty beds. These are now being refitted and renovated, and already crippled boys are tenanting one house, the matron in charge, Miss Sutherland, having had long experience of the "Rob Roy" Home at Margate.

Our columns have often testified to the physical benefit conferred upon London child-sufferers by a few weeks' stay in such health-giving neighbourhoods, and to this must be added the religious surroundings, teaching obedience, reverence, and love. There is, of course, a financial limit to the Ragged School Union's power of using and maintaining such institutions—a limit which well-wishers can easily enlarge.

The other day the Ashburton Homes served a further purpose, for a company of teachers and workers connected with the Nelson Street Mission and Ragged School, Camberwell, drove down in waggonettes and spent an enjoyable afternoon. Mr. John Kirk, besides being secretary of the Ragged School Union, is the superintendent of this mission, and explained the scope and objects of the new gift. With the cordial assent of the Marquis of Northampton, the property will henceforth be designated "The Ashburton Homes."

Dumb.

Oh, who could sing,
With grief the heart o'erflowing?
Or spread the wing,
Life's bitter conflicts knowing?
Bowed by His hand, the sweetest harpist must Lay by his harp, awe mingling with his trust.

I cannot sing,
Yet would I not deny Him;
He is my King,
Oh, may I not decry Him!
I may not see the good of what has come;
But since He did it I would sit quite dumb.

Oh, not to sing!
Ye angels, show me pity,
Ye of the spring
Eternal, from the city
On high, behold me lacking grateful song!
Behold a bruised soul with silent tongue!

Yet shall I sing,
Though now in silence dwelling;
Yet shall I ring
Love's bells, His goodness telling;
And with the praising choirs of heaven shout,
Through grace, my soul's full triumph over doubt.

Tyndal Bible School.—The correspondence classes of the Tyndal Bible School will re-commence for the autumn term on September 19. A special course on the Book of Exodus will be conducted by Rev. C. H. Waller, D.D. The other classes include a senior course for young Christians, a junior course for children, and a post-card class for all whose time is very limited. Testimonies are continually being received to the helpfulness of this means of united study by postal correspondence. All particulars will be sent upon receipt of stamp. Home Mission Week.

RESCUED FROM MISERY.

Sacred Songs and Solos, No. 17.

LAST week Uncle Tom spoke to you about trying to help others. This week I will take you on an imaginary visit with me to the East End of London to a home for children where a great deal is being done to assist those who are weak and in need of aid. I mean the home founded by Dr. Stephenson many years ago, and which is now situated in Bonner Road, E.

What a big family this Home shelters! There are at present 300 boys and girls within its walls. All this big family has to be fed and clothed and educated until the members are sufficiently grown up to earn their own living and help themselves. How many pennies each week do you think are required for this? Ask your parents how much it costs to keep any one of you, and multiply it by 300.

School was just ending for the day when I arrived at the Home, and the boys and girls were trooping out to play. Some were quite tiny mites, some nearing the end of their school-days. It was hard to realize as one looked at them that these were, many of them, children of the slums, once despised and outcast.

A Sister kindly showed me round the premises, which form quite a little town. In order to make it seem like a home rather than an institution, about twenty children live in each house, under the care of a "mother," if they are girls, or a "mother" and "father" if they are boys (I suppose the boys require a double amount of supervision!). So good are these kind friends to the children, that many forget that they do not know the love of a real father and mother. The way in which the little faces lit up with pleasure when "Sister" came in sight showed that love was the ruling element of the Home.

Upstairs and downstairs we went, peeping into dormitories and dining-rooms, kitchens and cupboards. I was informed that the children did all the house-work themselves under the instruction of their teachers. They learn to scrub, sew, wash, iron, cook, dust, and many other things which will make them self-reliant, useful men and women by and by. Think of the pairs of stockings to be darned, the clothes to be washed, and the bread to be baked each week for 300 children! Yet it is all done, and plenty of time left for play, because each one takes his or her share. Ah, if everyone took their rightful share in the work of the world, things would go far more easily, would they not? I wonder if you always do your part of the common task cheerfully, or whether your feet lag, and your faces become clouded when asked to help.

After a tour round the houses, we passed to the boys' workshops, where engineering, carpentering, painting, plumbing, printing, and other trades are taught. The boys print their Home magazine, and other literature, paint and repair the school buildings, while the girls employ themselves in the no less useful task of repairing the clothes!

One day there came to the school a ragged urchin who was described as the "boy dog." He had been found by a gentleman wandering about the fields, and it was discovered that his father had trained him to perform like a dog, and had taken him from village to village to the fairs. His mother had died when he was a baby, and his father had now deserted him. He had no idea of manners, he had no education. He was taken into the Home, and after patient training and care he became an earnest Christian, and to-day is a thoroughly reliable workman.

This is only one instance of many a life which has been rescued from misery, and perhaps crime. Instead of sinking lower and lower, by the aid of friendly hands these children have been lifted up out of poverty and distress, they have been saved to serve. Instead of spending their early lives in the workhouse, and possibly their later ones in prison, they have been trained in a Christian Home, and taught the way of true happiness. To-day many are filling positions of importance, several are ministers of the Gospel, others have prospered in business, and are now able to help their widowed mothers and younger brothers and sisters. One is a sanitary inspector under the Local Government Board, one controls a large printing business, another is the head master of a school in Cambridge, while many hundreds who have not risen to the top of the ladder are nevertheless filling humbler positions faithfully, and have become useful, instead of useless, citizens.

Last of all I was shown over the Children's Home Hospital. Here the little ones are tended in their hours of sickness. It is made such a bright, beautiful place by the kind Sister in charge. Some come within its walls for a brief time, then leave it strong and well. Others enter only to leave it for a brighter and better world above. There was one girl there who looked about ten years old, but who in reality is fifteen. For many a long day her sufferings have been great, and it is feared there is no remedy in her case. Yet she is so patient, and her smile so bright. Instead of spending her last days in her poverty-stricken home, she is surrounded by loving friends who do all they can to help this little sufferer, and make the rough places plain. We cannot realize what a Home like this must mean to such children.

There are other branches of the Children's Home in different parts of the country, and special departments for crippled and afflicted children, and perhaps I shall be able to tell you more about these another time. But for now I must stop.

My visit was ended. I turned to look at the children playing their happy games. I saw them surrounded by kind friends. I pictured them in years to come as Christian men and women. I saw the pain on suffering little faces removed as the Sister bent over them in pity and love. Then I turned into the busy streets, with their rush and turmoil, and there passed before me want, squalor, disease, and misery; children whose faces were no longer young, children who already know of the struggle for existence. As I looked I heard a voice saying, "It is not the will of your Father, which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish," and "Whosoever shall receive one such little child in My name receiveth Me."

Will you not help the children, the little outcast band?
Is it not worth an effort to lend them a helping hand?
There are hundreds and hundreds of children who need your help and care,
For it is but our simple duty others burdens to bear.

A Word to My Young Friends.

"I will never leave thee nor forsake thee" (Heb. xiii. 5).

A sweet remembrance fills my soul,
As musing o'er the past,
When He, who wounded, made me whole,
And peace was known at last.

Yes; at the Cross, and there alone,
I found the Saviour near,
And heard His voice, in sweetest tone,
Say, "Trust, and never fear."

Oh, can I e'er forget the joy
Of that sweet meeting place,—
The gift divine, sent from on high,
God's saving, wond'rous grace?

Since then the years have rolled along,
The eye is growing dim,
But "Calvary's Cross" is still my song,
"Salvation" still my theme.

Earth fades; but heavenly joys expand.
The soul is still sustained,
And still by heavenly zephyrs fanned,
Shall never be ashamed.

Oh, taste and see what bliss supreme
From heavenly fountains flow;
Salvation's sweet, refreshing stream
No blighted hopes can know.

Still at the Cross I love to be,
Its glories ne'er grow dim;
My Lord, my Life, my All, I see
As gazing upon Him.

And when amid the radiant throng,
In glory I shall be,
"The Cross! the Cross!" shall be my song
Of endless victory!

Age then no more shall dim the eye,
Or days of weakness tell;
My tribute to the Lord shall be—
"He has done all things well!"

Feasting that Emaciates (Psa. lxxviii. 17-31).

THIS is always the cry of unbelief, Can God? whilst the triumphant assertion of faith is: God can. What a difference is wrought by the collocation of words! Can God prepare a table in the wilderness? God can spread a table even in the wilderness, and in the presence of our enemies. Can He give bread also? He can satisfy the desire of every living thing, by the opening of His hand. Canst Thou do anything for us, our child is grievously possessed of the devil? If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth. The wanderings of the forty years were due to men looking at their difficulties and questioning if God could overcome them, whilst Caleb and Joshua looked away from the Canaanites and their fortified cities to Him who had brought them where they were, and was pledged to extricate them. Some men speak of Giants with a capital G and god with a small g, what wonder that they account themselves as grasshoppers! Others spell God in capitals, look at the giants through a reversed telescope, and never more speak of themselves in depreciating terms. They are sons, joint-heirs with Christ, heirs of God. (Compare Num. xiii. 33 and Rom. viii. 17.)

The sin of Israel was aggravated, because God had already done such wonders on their behalf. He had already given water from the smitten rock. Surely this was a sufficient indication of the Divine purpose and power. Look back on the past; see what God has done for you; remember how deeply pledged He is to finish what He has begun. If He gave water, He can certainly give bread. Nothing hurts God so much as unbelief. I believe that even our sin is less grievous to Him than the unbelief which hesitates to go to Him at once with repentance and confession. As long as we can trust Him, He can and will do anything in us and for us. The one question is, "Believest thou that I am able to do this?"

But (23) notwithstanding the pain and grief that Israel's unbelief caused to God, He commanded the skies to rain manna, and caused the winds to blow to their camp innumerable multitudes of quails. The story of this remarkable miracle is told in Num. xi. 31. There we learn that the quails flew at the height of two cubits above the ground. It has been alleged by infidels that the solid piles of quails rose to that height, and great ridicule has been thrown on the wanton waste of so great a provision; but we are simply told that their flight being so low rendered them easily accessible to the clubs of the Israelites, and the least successful gathered ten homers full.

In thankless passion they gorged themselves with food, so that they excited the grave displeasure of God, who smote them with a very great plague, and they were buried in the graves of lust (Num. xi. 34, 35).

We are all exposed to the same peril. When we are poor and needy, we are inclined to humble prayer and lowly thanksgiving. Then all that God sends us is accepted out of full hearts, and acknowledged with grateful thanks. But it may be that suddenly our lot is changed. Where there had been poverty, there is now abundance, where hunger, satiety. How often there is an immediate change in our demeanour. God recedes from view. We pamper ourselves with indulgence; and are forgetful of the needs of the world. Instead of considering ourselves as still God's pensioners, we magnify ourselves as though we were exclusive owners. We relax restraint, and give ourselves to self-indulgence.

These are the reasons why God is compelled to keep some of us poor; and probably no greater temptation could befall us than to find ourselves suddenly enriched. This is the way in which God answers the daily prayer, "Lead us not into temptation." The old minister was right when he prayed God graciously to succour the youth who had suddenly come into a fortune. F. B. M.

Distressed Jews at Jerusalem.—The effect of the terrible Kischineff massacres has been felt at Jerusalem, as well as in other places. Some forty to fifty of the survivors succeeded in escaping to Palestine, where their brethren are doing what they can to help them. One of these, with wife and three children, got away after hiding in a cellar, with just enough money to pay for the journey to Jerusalem, where they arrived destitute. We are glad to say that the father is now employed at Abraham's Vineyard (where we now have seventy-two men in constant work). We also have on our relief register 1,500 families of the feeble, sick and blind, who are relieved as far as possible by gifts of food and clothing. Drinking water is now given daily to great numbers. It is distressing to have to refuse many every morning who come to beg for work and have to go sorrowing back to their hungry children.—E. A. Abstinence from Evil (1 Pet. iv. 1-11).

Golden Text—Eph. v. 18.

THE persecutions at Rome by the Emperor Nero had roused the enemies of the Truth in the provinces. Reports of the sufferings of Christians in Asia Minor had reached the Apostle Peter, and for their comfort and teaching under trial and suffering he wrote the Epistle from which the present lesson is selected. The Bible history of St. Peter closes with his attendance and speech at the Jerusalem Conference. John xxi. 19 prophesies his death by martyrdom, and St. Paul mentions him in connection with Antioch and Corinth (Gal. ii. 11; 1 Cor. i. 12). Beyond this, tradition only.

The people whom Peter addressed had hard times to bear. Converted from idolatry and still living in the midst of debasing heathenism, they were peculiarly tempted to return to the abominations from which they had been called; also fiery persecution raged around them (iv. 12) and continued with unabated violence for nearly 300 years, until the Roman Emperor Constantine became a Christian.

Peter advises the only armour which cannot fail us in temptation or suffering. The mind of Christ (Phil. ii. 5; Eph. iii. 17).

1. Jesus came to earth to do His Father's will with set purpose and steadfast aim (John iv. 34).

2. Jesus resisted every form of temptation, in the wilderness (Matt. iv. 1-11); Cæsarea-Philippi (Matt. xvi. 23); Gethsemane (Matt. xxvi. 38-42). "In all points like as we are" (Heb. iv. 15).

3. Jesus "resisted unto blood" (Heb. xii. 4; Phil. ii. 8).

4. Jesus obtained the victory for us (1 Cor. xv. 57).

5. Jesus' aim, "the glory of God" (Phil. ii. 11). His joy in prospect (John xvii. 24; Heb. xii. 2). To His followers He has promised His Spirit, "kept by the power of God" (and Peter had learned he could not keep himself). "I in them" "keep them from the evil," and so He prays for us now as He did for Peter (Heb. vii. 25).

Separate to God. In, not of the world (2, 3); to do His will in life's business, pleasures, sorrows, and joys (6); to endure bravely and meekly (Heb. xii. 3. Note 1 Peter ii. 20), even to suffering. "Resist the devil and he will flee from you." Better suffer the taunts of companions now for well-doing, than the judgment of God hereafter for evil-doing (iii. 17).

What has a young Christian of the twentieth century to watch to abstain from? (1) Sins of the spirit and thoughts and wishes as well as sins of the body and actions (Psa. cxxxix. 23, 2). Neither Eve nor Adam would have sinned if the wish had been "nipped in the bud." "Up with thy heart to Jesus!" (2) Sins of the tongue, any word tainted with profanity, impurity, untruthfulness, exaggeration, mean excuses, slander, back-biting, tale-bearing, "evil communications." (3) Sins of action. Dishonesty in time that belongs to an employer, at lessons, or play. Idleness, unreality, pretending to be what I am not. Cruelty to dumb animals and the weaker one. (4) Companions who are not helping me to live nearer to the Lord. (5) Occupations or amusements which may lead me to dishonour God. Always to try and remember "The Lord is at hand."

Special Points.

Sin has been sin in all ages. God's standard has always been, "Be ye holy, for I am holy." "Holiness without which no man shall see the Lord" (Heb. xii. 14). His will, our sanctification through Christ (Heb. x. 10). His remedy (Heb. ix. 22; x. 17). "The blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, cleanseth from all sin" (1 John i. 7)

Peter could speak as a witness. He had seen the Lord suffer on Calvary, had seen Him ascend into heaven, had heard His own voice say, "I will come again" (John xiv. 3).

FILLED WITH THE SPIRIT.

When George Fox, the founder of the Society of Friends, was a lad, he spent his time in tending sheep. While alone with nature and his own soul, he received from God that "inner light" which to him was a special revelation from above. He then determined to go forth and fight against the mere outward forms of religion as represented in the churches or "steeple-houses" as he called them. Though he was counted singular at the time, George Fox was undoubtedly "filled with the Spirit" (Golden Text) and the spiritual work he inaugurated has stood the test of time. The Quakers have proved themselves a mighty power for good in the land, and among them have been some of the worthiest saints of the nation.

FALSE LIGHTS.

A yachtsman has lately warned his fellow-skippers of certain misleading lights to be seen at various ports around the coast. He explains that a travelling circus has recently displayed powerful electric lights at night, and yachtsmen have often been puzzled at the unexpected appearance. The writer of the warning remarks that on one occasion at least he has been placed in a difficulty, and if the night had been thick he would have fared badly in making for the port. In our lesson, the lust, excess of wine, revellings and banquetings, the will of the Gentiles (v. 3) are as the false lights to the mariner. They lead to destruction if followed. "The Light of the world is Jesus."

THE BEAUTY OF CHARITY.

Rev. James Neil has written that the orchids to be found in tropical forests draw their nourishment from the impure vapours of the district. They live on trunks of huge decaying trees, which if left alone, would fill the air with poisonous gases. The orchid swings in rich festoons over the rotting boughs, and covering the deformity with its own loveliness, absorbs the foul exhalations, and turns them into the perfume of its own sweet flowers. Charity is like a beautiful orchid, covering human frailty; clearing away harsh and cruel slanders; and breathing forth mercy and compassionate sympathy. Above all things, have fervent charity among yourselves; for charity shall cover the multitude of sins (v. 8).

LED BY GOD TO SERVICE.

Thirty-five years ago a promising youth employed in the offices of a well-known shipping firm in Hull persisted in offering himself for the Methodist ministry. "You are a fool," said his employer. To-day that "fool" is the President of the Wesleyan Conference, and has proved in his ministerial career that he possesses the "gift" of preaching. God bestows varied gifts and talents to be used in His service. "If any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth; that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ." Happy are they who know God's will concerning them, and knowing it, dare to perform that will.

The Y.M.C.A.

READING ASSOCIATION is able to record gratifying progress in its 1902-1903 report. The numerous agencies are fulfilling their purpose, and the interest shown in Bible study and Christian service afford much encouragement to the workers. The social, educational, and recreative agencies are taken full advantage of. The Seaside Homes have proved as popular as ever, and severe cross-examination has failed to elicit any complaint as to their uniform good management. The membership now stands at 792, exclusive of hon. subscribers.

A beautifully got up and well illustrated booklet embodies the programme for the ensuing season of the Hackney Association. A special feature is its foreign missionary work; seventeen of its members have entered the field, and three are at present in training. Three conversational Bible classes are conducted each Wednesday evening, a Sunday-school teachers' training class on Fridays, an "At home" or a rally for prayer and praise on Saturday evening; while the services of the Sabbath include a morning Bible-class for young men, in the afternoon "Straight talks to men" and P.S.A. for boys, and an open-air evangelistic meeting in the evening.

Sunday Cargo Work.—The Missions to Seamen Society has issued a useful pamphlet, entitled, "Sunday on Shipboard," which treats of worship afloat versus unnecessary work on Sundays on British ships of war and merchant ships. The pamphlet is a strong plea for mercy to seamen from their employers in the matter of united worship on board ships, the greatest hindrance to which is unnecessary cargo work in foreign ports and Crown colonies. It puts a stop to united worship on board, and causes much ill-feeling between employers and employed, captains and crew, and is a fruitful cause of much other evil on board. In Great Britain cargo working on Sundays is not frequent, being prevented by the simple expedient of closing the Custom Houses. In some of the self-governing colonies the laws against Sunday cargo work are very stringent. But in our Indian possessions, and in Crown colonies, there is often little or no rest for officers and crews on the day of rest. Great relief was experienced at Boulogne, not only in the harbour, but in the offices ashore, when the Missions to Seamen Society obtained a Sunday cargo-working ordinance compelling a "permit" to be paid before cargoes, not perishable, could be embarked or discharged. In foreign ports, British ships are conspicuous for their disregard of the Sabbath, there being no worship on board, the cargo winches being frequently at work all day.

The Heritage of Faith.

By the Late Dr. LANDELLS.

CHRISTIANITY makes us sons of God. Producing in you filial feelings, it would invest you with all the privileges of sonship. If you pay homage to the scions of nobility and of royalty, be it so; I do not quarrel with you on that account. But for my part, I am bound to respect far more that workman in the street, however mean his appearance, who has the grace of God in his heart. In all that entitles to honour, he is the superior of the two. Wonder not if, with all his poverty, independence is stamped on his manly brow, if he bears himself with dignity in the presence of the rich and noble, and sometimes treats their distinctions with contempt, conscious that "he is rich in a more precious treasure, noble by the right of an earlier creation," and the bearer of an infinitely more honourable name!

Christianity would bring you into the position in which it becomes true of you, that all the events which transpire here are conducive to your welfare. What Macaulay says so eloquently of the Puritans may be applied to himself by the poorest Christian—"Before the heavens and the earth were created," he may say, "I was chosen by God to a felicity which shall last when these have passed away," and all things that have taken place in the earth have been subsidiary to the fulfilment of His eternal purpose. "Events which short-sighted politicians ascribe to earthly causes, have been ordained on my account. For my sake empires have risen and flourished, and decayed. For me the Almighty has proclaimed His will by the pen of the Evangelist and the harp of the Prophet. For me the sun has been darkened; for me the rocks were rent; for me the dead have risen, and all nature shuddered at the sufferings of her expiring God." My welfare was kept in view in creation; the dispensations of Providence have relation to me; God will take care of me when the earth is wrapt in flames. Why should my poverty disturb my peace or awaken my concern? "Although the fig tree should not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labour of the olive shall fail, and the field shall yield no meat; the flocks shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stall; yet will I rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation."

Once more, Christianity would make you the heir of everlasting life. Poor as you may be, you might stand up in the midst of your poverty and lay claim to an inheritance with which all the kingdoms of the world and all the glory of them will bear no comparison. What does it matter to me, you might say, whether I am poor or rich when I have such an inheritance awaiting me? Seest thou the possessions of my wealthy neighbour? Fair as they are, I covet them not. The event which must separate him from his inheritance will introduce me to mine. I shall be enjoying my portion when his house has crumbled into ruins—when his fair fields have passed away—when his gold has melted in the final conflagration. Seest thou those worlds that roll through the vault of night? I, now standing under them—I, so poor and despised—I that must toil from morning till night, as if the end of my existence were to procure food to eat and raiment to clothe me—I shall live when those worlds have grown old. My joy shall be undiminished when their light has become dim. When the heavens shall have rolled together as a parchment-scroll, and another and fairer creation has sprung from the hand of God, I shall be only in the infancy of my being—in the youth of my immortality—in the springtide of my year—in the dawn of my eternal day. Oh, what does it matter to me whether I am poor and needy, or have a right to call the world my own—I am but a little hour here, and then I bid farewell to all my privations, and enter on the glory and the riches that are to come—eternally to come!

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

KING'S LYNN.

THE mission of Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones, at King's Lynn, under the auspices of the Norfolk United Temperance Council, is proving a season of inspiration to many. Mr. G. Allen writes:—"It will give a great impetus to our work, and will bring teetotalers who have been comparatively indifferent to rally for forward effort. It has also brought out many non-abstainers on to the side of temperance; so we thank God that we can write 'success' upon our labours.

"The visit has marked an era in temperance life in King's Lynn. The amount of exertion put forth to organize the mission has more than brought its reward. After being dormant for some time, temperance work in the town has received renewed energy. Greater courage and zeal have come to the workers, whose ranks are enlarged, and all are united in the great struggle against the drink traffic. At the first meeting a leading Churchman, Rev. Gordon Roe, presided, and at the second, Councillor Alfred Jermyn, J.P., a prominent Nonconformist. Good audiences have attended. All have been aroused by the fiery eloquence of Dr. Henry. The singing of Mr. Jones made its way into many a heart. The grandest meeting of the mission was the large gathering of children. The capacious music-hall was crowded, and many signed the pledge, while eighty-three took pledge books to obtain signatures outside the meetings. Many Bands of Hope are enlarging their ranks in consequence. At one church, where the Band of Hope and temperance work generally were at a low ebb, they have redoubled their energies, and hope to have many bright victories in store. A special feature was a procession through the streets of 600 Band of Hope children, with banners, previous to the meeting.

"On Thursday last a meeting for women was held, Miss Burlingham presiding. On the Sabbath, two great gatherings were held, working men forming a considerable proportion of the audiences. In the afternoon Mr. C. W. Perry occupied the chair, and Dr. Henry's words upon the working-man abetting the traffic by his vote, made a deep impression.

"At night, Councillor Savage presided. The solo, 'I shall know Him by the print of the nails in His hands,' came after a magnificent sermon by Dr. Henry, which hushed the whole assembly into silent devotion. Many pledges were taken, and several took Christ as their Saviour. Up till Monday night no fewer than 400 pledges had been taken. A great wave of interest is passing over the town. We can all praise God for the great work of Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones. They have rendered us an immense service. The Lynn temperance friends will pray, 'God speed their labours.' Prior to the mission, a very large body of workers canvassed the whole town."

Obituary.

MR. WILLIAM ERNEST SEARS, BROMLEY.

ON Monday of last week, Mr. William Ernest Sears passed away at his residence at Bromley, Kent, after a protracted and painful illness. For many years he had devoted his spare hours to the advancement of the temperance cause among the young, and was widely known as a lecturer in connection with the Band of Hope Union. He was always sure of a cordial welcome from the various societies visited. At the funeral on Friday at Nunhead, many friends paid their tribute of esteem to the departed worker. Among the mourners were Messrs. J. T. and J. E. Sears, and Mr. Frederick Smith, of the Band of Hope Union.

MR. WM. E. DODGE, NEW YORK.

American papers report the death, in his seventy-second year, of Mr. William Earl Dodge, one of the noblest types of merchant, philanthropist, and Christian worker that New York City has produced. He was born there, lived there, contributed vast sums of money and years of time and toil to its betterment in various ways, and cherished a civic and Christian devotion to the city. As one of the firm of Phelps, Dodge and Company, wholesale metal merchants, he had a high rank in the financial world; his gifts to public institutions have been large and manifold; he stood in the forefront in connection with the Evangelical Alliance, holding the presidency for years; he was actively and intimately identified with the larger plans of the Young Men's Christian Association, and as a layman in the Presbyterian Church was closely connected with the work of that denomination, at home and abroad. As an example of civic virtue, patriotic devotion, financial acumen, and philanthropic benevolence, America has given to the world few men so distinguished. He was one of the founders of the Union League, an organization to which President Lincoln looked for some of his strongest and most efficient supporters. Mr. Dodge held that every wealthy man should set apart a portion of his income annually for the church, declaring that many men spent five times as much on horses as on the uplifting of their fellow men. He sometimes called the pastors and congregations of the wealthier churches to account for what he thought was a want of regard for the poorer classes, and for their display of wealth and fashion.

Rev. Dr. G. Campbell Morgan.

DR. MORGAN arrived at Liverpool for a brief visit to this country on Wednesday morning of last week. He was accompanied by his father and Rev. S. Chadwick (of Leeds), the latter having had a brief spell of illness, which delayed his return. Dr. Morgan is in good health, and is anticipating some useful work on this side during his short stay. His engagements will be found on page 31.

Dr. Morgan spoke very encouragingly of his labours in America in connection with Mr. Moody's work. Asked as to the progress of "modern thought" tendencies in the United States, he replied, "We are in the thick of the battle there. With you on this side it is nearly over." As an exponent of Evangelical truth Dr. Morgan's ministry in America is greatly valued. He expressed his satisfaction at the settlement of the New Court pastorate.

Japanese Sailors in England. — Miss McLean, of the Japanese Christian Institute, has had to change her headquarters to 10, Dock Street, North Woolwich, E., owing to the Nippon Yusen Kaisha (or Japan Mail Ship Company) having transferred their line of twelve vessels to the Royal Albert Dock, which is fifteen miles higher up the river than the Tilbury Dock. Although the new address is nearly a mile from the berths occupied by the Japanese ships, Miss McLean hopes it will not prove too far off for the work, which is full of interest, and held in ever-increasing esteem by the Japanese Imperial authorities as well as the sailors themselves.

About Books.

SCIENCE AND FAITH.

We extend a cordial welcome to a translation, by Edmund K. Simpson, of the seventh edition of Professor Bettex's Naturstudium und Christentum. The continued demand for the work in German is a well-merited testimony to its value. Under the English title, Modern Science and Christianity (3s. 6d. Marshall Bros.), a useful addition has been made to the popular literature of a discussion on which we cannot afford to be ignorant. Some Christians are conscious of an unexpressed dread of scientific scepticism, the chief terror of which lies in the fact that they do not understand it, but which they imagine may at any moment burst forth with disastrous results. Parents and guardians, too, have often a shrinking fear that their sons will find out that which will unsettle Christian faith.

The only safe course when questions have been raised, though it is by no means necessary that they should, is to let all the truth be known. If the rising generation discard the faith of their fathers in favour of a scientific unbelief, it is not on account of any balance of evidence, but because of personal inclination, more than all because "the offence of the Cross" has not ceased. We can never submit our faith to the test of science, because spiritual things must be spiritually discerned; but even at the best scientific men are yet only groping in the twilight, and are continually abandoning positions formerly held.

"This work is the outcome of a conviction, born of long-standing acquaintance both with nature and modern scientific literature, that it is more than ever needful to exhort many educated Christian people, whose minds have been troubled, and their faith perplexed, by the alleged conflict between nature and revelation, faith and science, not to suffer themselves to be thus alarmed." If we knew more we should have more peaceful minds. Literature like this will do much to banish unrest and to strengthen faith, in those whose position is much stronger logically than they know.

A bright racy story—Ralph Sinclair's Atonement, by Antony Sargent—has been added to "The Endeavour Library." (2s. Sunday School Union.)

St. Aldhelm's, by L. N. Hyder (5s. net. A. H. Stockwell) is an interesting story, illustrating many of the ups and downs of life, and marked by shrewd insight with regard to the needs of the slums in respect to Christian effort.

Some of the evils to soul and body of the drink traffic are vividly portrayed in The Oak and Ivy, by Florence A. Markham. (2s. 6d. Marshall Bros.) Such literature cannot fail to nourish a healthy sentiment towards sinful indulgence.

Christ's Cure for Care. By Mark Guy Pearse. (2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton). Ten choice homilies in the vein which we properly expect from their distinguished author. The careful should read with care the words of Gospel direction and consolation presented in this handsome little book.

In his folded card, entitled, Christ and the Critics, Mr. Alfred Lambert, Ipswich Y.M.C.A., examines and sets forth in thoughtful fashion the Lord's treatment of these portions of the Scripture which are being frequently mistrusted and abused in our day. It will serve a useful purpose if widely circulated.

The current issue of Bits for Boys is replete with timely counsels and admonitions for youth. Its distinctive appeal is made in sympathy and affection. To peruse its pages is to find the word of enlightenment on matters of vital importance to lads of all ages. (1d. 37, Chambers Street, Edinburgh.)

How David Hill Followed Christ. A Biography. By Jane Elizabeth Hellier (Sister Elizabeth, West London Mission.) (2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) The story of a saintly man, told in a way that should specially attract young readers. Such biographies are a great blessing, and we sincerely trust this will be widely circulated.

The latest "Twentieth Century Paper" is Bible Accuracy, as shown by monuments. By Colonel C. R. Conder, LL.D., R.E., &c. (1s. Shaw.) A marvel of multum in parvo. Those who are strangers to Biblical Archæology may begin here; while advanced students along this special line will read the summary to profit, as being supplied by a past master in the work of Oriental research as relating to the confirmation and illustration of Holy Scriptures.

William White: A Brother of Men. By Oliver Morland. (Headley Bros.) A capital piece of biography. The deeds of William White live after him, and long will his memory be fragrant. The story of the Adult School movement is well told round this worthy's name. There are portraits and other engravings, all of them highly finished.

Chambers' Etymological Dictionary of the English Language is an old friend. Edited by Dr. Andrew Findlater, with pronouncing, explanatory, and etymological features admirably combined, it is a singularly useful book. In order to make it still more popular, the publishers have now issued a "People's Edition" at the low price of 1s. net. (W. and R Chambers.)

Handfuls on Purpose. These volumes of suggestive outlines for Christian workers and Bible students, prepared by Pastor James Smith, of Coalsnaughton, have proved of great service to many. In all, three series have been issued, and we now welcome a new edition of the First Series. (2s. 6d. Bagster & Sons.) The pages are rich in expository and illustrative matter, and so shaped and presented as to be ready for the immediate use of hard-pressed workers.

That there was still something to be said about the great Scottish divine has been amply proved in Principal Cairns (Famous Scots Series). Coming from the pen of a nephew, also John Cairns, we have a view from within the family circle. The work is well done, and the book has a distinct value as a contribution to recent Church history. At the same time, it has that living touch which will inspire the reader with nobler ideals (1s. 6d. net. Oliphant.)

The Ancient Cubit and our Weights and Measures, By Lieut.-General Sir Charles Warren, G.C., M.G., &c. (Subscribers 3s. 6d.; non-subscribers 5s. 6d. Palestine Exploration Fund.) A little book of great erudition. The subject is not everyone's concern; but the earnest antiquarian along this line will here find the latest word, expressed with every regard for technical precision, on a topic of peculiar interest and importance in some departments of archæological research.

The problems of the poor and weak, the disabled and worn-out, how they are dealt with, and how much better they might be treated for their own sakes and the good of the community at large, is discussed in Britain's Next Campaign, by Julie Sutter. (1s. net. R. Brimley Johnson.) Canon Scott Holland and Sir John McDougall write prefaces commending the book to earnest attention. Of course, the great question of intemperance and the rights of the young and helpless comes within view.

The Harmony of the Prophetic Word: A Key to Old Testament Prophecy concerning Things to Come. By Arno C. Gaebelein, editor of Our Hope. (3s. New York: F. E. Fitch, 47, Broad Street.) The author takes up great epochs and events, and presents the general body of prophetic testimony regarding them. Apart from questions of interpretation, the book impresses one with the marvellous precision with which "the sure word" sets forth "things that must shortly come to pass." Dr. C. I. Scofield, of Northfield, Mass., writes a commendatory preface.

In the Land of the Oil Rivers. The story of the Qua Iboe Mission. By Robert L. M'Keown. (1s. net. Marshall Bros.) A narrative of the rise and development of an "all-round" mission—evangelistic, educational, industrial, with things in their right place and relation. Those who are interested in Southern Nigeria should read this book for information regarding the land and the people. Those who are concerned for the progress of the Kingdom of God in a dark land will also find much to encourage and stimulate them in these well-illustrated pages.

Holidays in the Eastern Counties. Edited by Percy Lindley. (6d.) With such beautiful places as are here described by pen and pencil, it ought to be easy to make holidays at once pleasant and profitable. An interesting feature is the list of boarding establishments and house agents. Another timely publication is Holidays in North Germany and the Harz Mountains. (1d.) Greatly increased facilities now exist for visiting Berlin and the interesting old towns of Brunswick, Hanover, Hildesheim, &c., combined with the picturesque and little known Harz Mountains District. (Office: 30, Fleet Street, E.C.)

Report of the Fourth Decennial Indian Missionary Conference, held in Madras, December 11-18, 1902. (3s. net. Christian Literature Society, 9, Duke Street, Adelphi.) Matters of great importance were discussed at the Conference, and in this compact volume the resolutions are given in full. These occupy nearly 200 pages; and then there are valuable appendices running to about 150 pages more. These give statistical tables, chapters on movements in various parts, the progress of women's work, the Arya Samaj, Mohammedanism, &c. Great care has been taken to give the latest and most reliable information on these subjects.

The variety of treatment in The Sermon on the Mount: A Practical Exposition of St. Matthew vi. 16—vii. 27 is highly instructive, and throws light from many directions on the passage treated. The volume contains twenty sermons by Revs. J. G. Greenhough T. G. Selby, Dr. Goodrich, Principal Stewart, G. Milligan, W. B. Selbie, J. Morgan Gibbon, Dr. Rowland, and Principal Rowlands. It is one of a series which will form a useful and helpful commentary on the Sermon on the Mount, though necessarily somewhat lacking in unity, and at times expressing divergent views.

God's Way of Electing Souls to Eternal Life, as Revealed in His Word. Glad Tidings for Everyone. By M.S.B. (1s. Partridge.) A simple little book. The author's view is thus expressed in few words: "The Scriptures teach us that God, instead of electing souls 'to' faith, elects them 'by' faith in Christ; that His loving Spirit, instead of 'passing by' the majority of those to whom the Gospel is sent, and only 'striving' with a few, strives with every soul who hears and knows the 'good news' of God's love to him in Jesus, and urges each soul to be 'made accepted in the Beloved' by believing in Jesus as his Saviour, and thus become one of God's elect 'children' 'by faith in Christ Jesus.' We learn from Scripture that God withholds nothing that is necessary to enable man to accept His gracious offer, but on the contrary urges it upon his acceptance by every means short of actual compulsion; and when He declares with an oath, 'As I live, saith the Lord, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked should turn from his way and live'; and that 'He is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance,' we may be quite certain that He literally means what He solemnly declares (Eph. i. 6; Gal. iii. 26; Ezek. xxxiii. 11; 2 Pet. iii. 9)."

Mr. T. H. Engall (Newcourt, Churchfield Road, Acton, W.) has a number of copies of Rev. James Neil's Musical Service: Is It Right? He will be glad to forward one to friends interested in choirs.

Rev. George Coates, Western House, Willington, Durham, offers a copy of his devotional compilation The Morning Watch for the Soldiers of the King (published at 5s.) for 3s. 6d., post free, to any minister, lay preacher, evangelist, and active Christian worker.

In connection with the Union of Students for Work among School Girls, A Bible Study of the Epistle of Paul to the Philippians, by M. Harris, has been issued in booklet form. (3d. Y.W.C.A., Book Stall, 26, George Street, Hanover Square, W.) The pages will prove of special interest to those who would derive spiritual profit for personal life from a prayerful examination of the Epistle.

Although the fig tree shall not bloom,
Though blight shall strike the tender vine,
And worldlings' faces gather gloom,
A child of God shall not repine.
Of every other joy bereft,
I know that Jesus still is left.

Although the olive's labour fail,
Though fields, once fertile, yield no grain,
And all the land, through hill and dale,
Be brought beneath gaunt famine's reign.
When every other joy has flown,
I may rejoice in Christ alone.

The husbandman may sadly view
The empty barn—the herdless stall;
Man's earthly comforts are so few,
In one short hour he loses all.
The bond that binds God's love to me,
Is lasting as eternity.

And as the cares of life will fall
On me, as others, while I dwell
In this dark world, I give them all
To Thee, who doest all things well.
Then whoso faints beneath Thy rod,
My soul shall still rejoice in God.

Deacon Abraham's Orphanage.—In acknowledging the interest of readers of The Christian in the work of Deacon Abraham, Miss Barclay, hon. sec. (9, Tranton Road, Bermondsey) writes: "We have been emigrating some of the orphan boys to Canada, where they are doing well. Money for their passage was lent to them, which they have soon repayed. Another orphan boy from Deacon Abraham's is now in a Church Army Labour Home waiting till there are sufficient funds to send him to Canada. The orphanage is in good working order. Through the death of two sons, the deacon has six orphan grandchildren to support."

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Tent Work in Scotland.

NOTWITHSTANDING the inclemency of the season through the well-nigh incessant rain, attended at times by violent gales which in some cases have played havoc with the canvas, tent work has been, and is still being, prosecuted in different parts with untiring vigour, and fruit is being gathered unto life eternal.

A mission, which it is intended to continue for a month, was begun in one of the tents of the Evangelization Society on Sabbath, August 30, off the New City Road, Glasgow, near to St. George's Cross. In the evening, when the rain had somewhat subsided, the tent was quite full. The special mission is having the practical and prayerful support of Pastor D. J. Findlay and a large band of St. George's Cross Tabernacle workers, many of whom have long since graduated in the noble art of soul-winning. The Gospel is proving itself to be the power of God unto salvation. Mr. Harry Young is the preacher for the first fortnight.

In the tent at Anniesland, at the extreme west of the city, Mr. James Macfarlane has been the preacher for the last two weeks, and his labours have been crowned with blessing.

Mr. W. D. Dunn, having finished at Govan, went on to Aberdeen to conduct meetings there in the large tent of the Gordon Evangelistic Mission. Meetings in the tent have been going on for some time, Mr. William Hill and Mr. Samuel McKenzie having been the preachers for six weeks previous, and while the gathering in has not been great, good work has been done.

A series of large and hearty meetings is in progress in Hamilton, in one of the tents of the Lanarkshire Christian Union. Mr. Nicholson, the preacher, has but recently entered the field, having finished his two years' course in the Bible Training Institute in Glasgow at the end of June. Blessing is attending the effort, and greater things are being looked for.

In Ardrossan, on the Ayrshire seaboard, the tent of the County Union has been located for three weeks, and Messrs. Fairley and Batters have been diligently and zealously pointing men and women to the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world, with hopeful signs following. J. C.

During the last four weeks a tent mission has been conducted at Insch by Messrs. John G. Smith and William Shand, of the Gordon Evangelistic Mission, Aberdeen. From the beginning, deep interest was manifested, and latterly the tent was filled night after night. The way had been prepared and interest awakened by a series of open-air services on Sunday evenings during the summer, originated by the Congregational Christian Endeavour Society. A week of meetings for special prayer had been held immediately before the opening of the mission. The prayers of God's people have been graciously answered, as no such movement, it is believed, has been witnessed in this village since the memorable awakening of 1859-60. Such, at least, is the testimony of Christians who have lived in the village since that time.

A remarkable feature of the movement is the number of young men and lads who have professed conversion. A number of young women have also professed to give themselves to the Lord. It is premature to speak of permanent results; but there cannot fail to be a rich blessing to the community, as well as to many individual souls, as the fruit of the mission. The public hall has been engaged for a united weekly prayer-meeting, and it is proposed, for a time at least, to have a joint service in the hall on Sunday evenings, specially for the benefit of the young converts.

The closing meeting was held on Sunday evening, August 30, and proved a testing time. A violent storm of wind and rain prevailed, but did not prevent the tent being filled, several coming from a distance. In the course of this service an opportunity was given to those who had avowed themselves on the Lord's side, to signify the fact. We prefer not to mention numbers, but it was sufficient to gladden the heart of every lover of Christ and of souls to witness the number that responded. "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." L. W.

An esteemed correspondent writes: — An enthusiastic gathering was held in Grove Street Institute, Glasgow, on Monday, August 24, at the close of a blessed seven-weeks' tent mission conducted by Mr. J. W. Moodie, of the Evangelization Society. Addresses were given to young converts by several well-known evangelists. Mr. A. Malcolm (superintendent of the Institute) said that from January right on much prayer had gone up to God for this aggressive effort. Every week-night a meeting is held in the Institute. Numbers avail themselves of these gatherings, and not a few are living changed lives. At a small meeting the other night, Mr. Malcolm had asked all the saved drunkards to stand and twelve had done so, nearly all recently converted.

As the light evenings came round the difficulty of getting the poor classes to come indoors was felt, and the workers began to pray for a tent. Step by step the way was opened up in answer to prayer, and the workers felt they were being "guided by the skilfulness of His hands" in the smallest details,

On the opening night the tent was crowded out. The audiences were large all through, even during the Fair holidays, and the last week the tent (which is seated for 450) was crowded out, so the closing meetings were held in the institute.

Not a night passed without souls seeking and finding the Lord—people from all ranks, from the shrewd business-man to the drunkard in the gutter.

Mr Moodie did not spare himself, but put his whole heart and soul into his message. The fearless, straightforward way in which he appealed to the sinner arrested the unsaved.

Mr. W. D. Dunn's mission in the Shaw Street tent, Govan, has been well followed up by Mr. J. J. Sims. Of the opening meeting, the Govan Press says: "Much interest was manifested in the proceedings, and the evangelist received a hearty welcome from the workers, who are representative of all denominations. On Sunday, August 30, he addressed Christians in the afternoon, and in the evening a largely-attended meeting was held in the New Town Hall, about 1,800 being present, when Mr. Sims spoke with great power on 'Four Impossibilities.' Mrs. R. Miller, formerly evangelist in connection with the Lanarkshire Christian Union, was present, and sang a couple of solos, which made a very deep impression, while Mr. L. Macmillan also sang, and the King Street Male-Voice Choir gave assistance. The meeting was preceded by a large open-air service and march from the Govan Cross, and at the close two marches were organised which attracted a great deal of attention.

"On Monday evening, in the tent, Mr. Sims spoke on the parable of "The Sower," and followed up this subject on Tuesday and Wednesday with "The Wheat" and "The Tares," each of the addresses being blessed in the conversion of souls."

Children's Services at Lytham.

This pretty Lancashire watering-place has just witnessed some wonderful answers to prayer. Many Christians have been praying for a blessing on the twentieth series of seaside services, held by Mr. G. R. Kirlew and friends. The Evangelization Society's tent, where the children were allowed to meet when out-of-door work was impossible, had its safety threatened by a strong gale one night, but it stood firm. "Of course," said the children, "didn't we pray for it?"

Several young hearts were definitely given to the Lord during this fortnight, and other "little friends of Jesus" had their faith and love brightened. The eager, listening spirit among the little ones was very encouraging, and their love blossomed into acts in the form of many gifts of flowers for crippled children, helped by the Band of Kindness in Manchester, and a box of dolls for Arab girls in North Africa.

On Margate Sands.

Mr. Newton Jones (evangelist of the S.S. Union) has just completed his summer work—having paid his sixteenth visit to the sea-coast. This year's work has been attended with very much blessing, both in the villages and on the Margate Sands, the hidden toilers in the former places having derived great srrength and cheer. The seaside services at Margate during August surpassed all previous years for attendances, interest, and spiritual power, and numerous have been the testimonies of blessing received. Each morning at 10.45 the children gathered to sing choruses, and at 11 o'clock to hear a "Chalk Talk" —a blackboard measuring 10 feet by 3 being used.

On four mornings a week this was followed by an adult Bible-school gathering, at which over eighty used to sit down with their Bibles, making and taking notes.

The "Limelight Talks" on the sands attracted crowds, and afforded a grand opportunity of preaching the Gospel through ear and eye gates. Several workers were the results of past years labours on the same spot. The one week of Gospel temperance effort bore grand fruit. Mr. Cooke, of Derby, and Mr. Charles Harvey, of the Kent Band of Hope Union, assisted Mr. Newton Jones.

The closing day's services in the Foresters' Hall will long be remembered. Some eighty-three attended the afternoon Bible Reading, and at night the place was full to hear Mr. Jones relate his "Life Story," which was owned, together with the singing of Mr. Spencer Johnson, to the decision of several. "To God be the glory, great things He hath done!"

Mr. Varley in Norway.

Mr. Henry Varley is experiencing much encouragement in his evangelistic tour in Norway. Writing from Bergen a few days ago he says: "Many are becoming deeply interested in the Word preached, and a goodly number have confessed Christ at the meetings. Our chief confidence is in His effectual working who said, 'Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the age.' One thing is very precious to behold, viz., the union in spirit which exists. The people can only understand me through an interpreter, but they tell of such blessing received. . . . The interest in our visit and addresses increases in many directions. It was 10.30 the past two nights before we closed, and then the people were quite unwilling to leave. The enthusiasm was intense, and at one meeting I should say 200 at least rose to confess Christ as their Saviour, and to say, with Thomas, 'My Lord and my God.' I have tried to make the way of Life as simple as possible; short sentences readily translated. This is good discipline. It is a famous way for the exercise of faith and trust in the Holy Ghost's ministry, His conviction of sin, and His revelation of Christ to those who crowd the buildings. Any confidence you may have in yourself as to the effective character of your working is sure to go. 'Lord, help me, undertake for me.' These short cries of the heart are born of your own impotence, and do you much good. The promise comes with sweetness indeed. 'Our sufficiency is of God; Who also hath made us able ministers of the New Testament; not of the letter but of the Spirit: for the letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life.'"

In a later communication from Christiansand Mr. Varley tells with deep gratitude of the continuance and spread of the interest evoked by the mission:—"It has been evident in three days that an unseen but mighty energy was amongst us. Many were weeping —some for joy because of the refreshing that came upon them, others by reason of a deep conviction of sin. It was wonderful to note the effect produced by the Word of God. Though speaking in a tongue unknown to the great majority, our hearts were stirred and knit together in manner and measure such as I have seldom known or seen.

"Each day yielded marked extension of interest, and though but nine days were given to Bergen, the second Sunday was, indeed, a memorable day. We were bound to leave (Pastor Hubert and myself) on Monday, 31st. Upon the wharf stood a great crowd awaiting our departure. Certainly 1,200 were there amid every possible expression of gratitude, sorrow, and joy to bid us God speed and farewell. Nine days since I was a stranger to all, and here is proof of hundreds of friendships born of the Spirit of Christ.

"The rendering of two of their Norwegian songs of praise were full of pathos, and amidst waving of handkerchiefs, lifting of hats, and every possible manifestation of loving interest, the steamer quietly glided from the wharf, and the darkness of night hid from view a sight I shall never forget."

Gospel Tent Work in Somerset and Wilts.

This is my thirtieth summer of precious Gospel testimony under canvas. On June 12 we erected our tent at Bath, in which successful services were held for three weeks. Special meetings were conducted for the young, Bible readings for adults, and every evening the Word of Life was proclaimed, resulting in the conversion of many souls, several of them being striking cases. On Monday, July 6, we closed the mission with a fellowship tea, when about 200 of the friends and converts assembled.

On July 8 we removed to Corsham, where a small assembly of believers had been holding their meetings in a kitchen for the want of a more suitable place. This being crowded out they had resorted to the open air with the Gospel. From the first meeting after the tent was pitched the power of God was experienced in the salvation of sinners, and upbuilding of believers. After sustaining the various services for five weeks among themselves with hearts all aglow with love to God and the perishing, I arranged to conduct an eight days' closing campaign.

On Saturday, August 15, on reaching Corsham Station, I was informed that the tent had been blown down by the gale. We hastened to the field (a mile distant), and to our delight found the women with needles and thread and the men with wax-ends doing their level best to repair the rents.

After working for eight hours, exposed to wind and rain, we had the joy of seeing the tent once more erected at nine p.m. Under its cover the toilers gathered with other Christians, and held a right hearty meeting. Three services were held each

Lord's Day and every evening of the week, which were well attended and blessed to the salvation of sinners. On Monday, the 24th, we closed the campaign, after six weeks of happy, fruitful work.

A very suitable piece of ground has been secured, and there is every prospect of a Gospel hall being erected forthwith for the furtherance of the good work begun. JAS. A. VICARY.

Ashley Road, Bristol,

Children's Special Service Mission.

During August an interesting and successful mission was conducted at Worthing by Mr. HERBERT B. CLAXTON (C.M.S.), assisted by local and other friends, nearly all the Worthing clergy taking some part in the meetings. The daily programme consisted of an early prayer meeting, a morning service on the beach, and Bible classes in the evening. A most convenient house in Marine Parade was kindly lent for the indoor meetings, and Beach House Park secured for the children's games. There were also lantern services and object-lessons, including a missionary address on a carefully-designed map of India made of seaweed on the beach. The Bible Society and the South African General Mission also had their field-day. The mission closed with a service of praise in the Bedford Hall.

Much blessing has been the result, the direct answers to prayer being in several cases very remarkable. Mr. Claxton's self-denying zeal and earnestness won for him the hearty co-operation of other Christian workers. The meetings for boys would seem to have been specially useful, and many, we trust, will have reason to thank God for this season's seaside services at Worthing. JOHN B. BARRACLOUGH.

A note from Mr. Claxton says:—"On Thursday, August 20, in a heavy storm of wind and rain, a little band of workers met in the room "where prayer was wont to be made," to wait upon God for favourable weather, that the map of India might be made on the sands (then covered with seaweed) and a lantern lecture be given in the evening. The meeting over, the workers separated, leaving all to God. The morning broke calm and still, the sun shone, and on going to Splash Point at 11 a.m., the tons of seaweed that were there the night before had disappeared, save as much as was required for the Himalaya Mountains outline! "Wind and storm fulfilling His Word," cleared away the seaweed, cleansed the sand, and so prepared the place for the willing workers who seized the opportunity to make the map. The lecture was attentively listened to by hundreds standing round."

Mr. WILLIAM FORBES recently held a second meeting for theatrical women at Morecambe. The Mayor and Mayoress of Morecambe took part, with Mr. N. W. Helme, M.P., and Mrs. Helme.

In the absence of Mr. J. H. Putterill, General Secretary, during August, the Sunday afternoon services of the Central Y.M.C.A. at Exeter Hall have been carried on by Mr. J. B. WOOKEY. The addresses given have been greatly appreciated, as evidenced by the numbers attending being well maintained, although a number of regular attendants have been away on holiday.

In connection with the Society of Friends an effective tent mission has been conducted by ROBERT G. BASS at Drumgold, Ireland. Children's meetings were held two and three times each week, which were interesting and instructive to the young people. The gatherings, which were well attended, were times of blessing to many, and we believe the Lord has done a good work amongst Friends and others in the neighbourhood.

The tent mission services conducted by Mr. FRANK PENFOLD, which commenced at High Wycombe about a week ago are, under God's blessing, showing marked signs of encouragement. The tent, which at first was but very thinly attended, was full last Sabbath evening, and crowds of listeners were standing outside. Already over forty persons, young and old, have professed to find Christ as their Saviour, and there are signs of a much needed revival, in this thickly populated town, of a desire for the simple Gospel. That blessing may accompany copies of booklets translated into the Yoruba language, to be distributed by Bishop Tugwell during missions at Lagos, West Africa, during September.

For a lady, in England, inclined to leave the Roman Catholic Church, but very uninstructed in the Scriptures, that the reading of these may be blessed to her deliverance from popery.

Covering Sin.—There are two ways of covering sin—man's way and God's way. You cover your sins, and they will have a resurrection some time; let God cover them, and neither devil nor man can find them. There are four expressions in the Bible with regard to where God puts sins. He puts them "behind His back." If God has forgiven me, who shall bring a charge against me? "He has blotted them out as a thick cloud." You see a cloud to-night, and to-morrow there isn't a cloud to be seen. "He casts them into the depths of the sea." The greatest blessing that ever comes to me this side of heaven is when God forgives me. The fourth expression is that He removes them "as far as the east is from the west." "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."—D. L. Moody.

North London Convention, Sept. 28-Oct. 2. The list of speakers includes Revs. F. S. Webster, E. W. Moore, W. D. Moffat (Edinburgh), and Francis Paynter. The meetings are to take place (as in former years) in St. Peter's Church, Islington, N.

Total Abstinence and the Churches.—Mr. Tennyson Smith during his recent temperance campaign in Wrexham issued a new form of declaration for signature by members of churches as follows:—"I am in favour of making total abstinence a condition of church membership for all new members. I am a member of the following church ——." This declaration was signed on its first introduction by 200 persons.

The Cyclone in Jamaica.

SINCE the first intimation of the cyclone in Jamaica was received, fuller details have come to hand showing the terrible devastation of property that resulted. Many of the inhabitants who were in circumstances of comparative affluence a few days ago, while others have lost for years to come the sources of their incomes. Large numbers of the peasantry are homeless, while not a few of the houses of the wealthier classes have been destroyed.

News of the cyclone had excited the fears of missionary societies represented in the island, but none were prepared for such tidings as have now reached us. Rev. P. Williams, Bethel Town, P.O., Jamaica, secretary of the Jamaica Baptist Union, cabled:—"Devastation, destitution terrible, many chapels down; help urgently needed." It now appears that at least twenty Baptist churches were demolished in the force of the hurricane. Many of the London Missionary Society stations, some of which were founded in response to the pathetic cry of emancipated negroes, have also suffered.

Rev. Burford Hooke has received news from missionaries, telling of wide devastation. Rev. G. H. Lea, writing from Jackson Town, says:—"My churches have suffered badly; in fact, I have only part of one church left. At Dry Harbour the roof was lifted off the whole length of the building, and we are having to keep day school in a wharf-shed. Runaway Bay is even in a worse plight. Not only is the roof off the building, but the side and end are down, and every seat and bench in the place is broken to pieces. The Mission House has the roof and one side gone entirely, and all the outhouses are down.

"The Catechist and his family had to be helped out of the ruins in their night clothes and get what shelter was possible until the storm abated. They had a terrible time, have lost everything, and have to dress now in borrowed clothes. A brother minister told me that he will have to take his children away from school because the pimento on which he was depending to pay their fees is gone, and will be for years, as the trees are all uprooted. I cannot tell you a tithe of the havoc that has been wrought, and the problem before us for the next few weeks will be the feeding of the people. The rebuilding of churches will have to wait, and we must worship in booths or the open air."

Eight years or so ago the supervision of the work in these churches and stations passed to the Colonial Missionary Society, their financial position having become very critical. Happily an improvement set in, and it seemed that brighter days had dawned. It will be easily understood that these hopes have been almost shattered. Help is needed at once. The address of the Colonial Missionary Association is 22, Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, E.C.

Rev. Marshall Hartley, President of the Wesleyan Conference, has received a cable to the effect that the destruction of their chapels and ministers' houses on the island has been enormous. Only a few weeks ago the Conference at Camborne took up heavy responsibilities in connection with the work in the West Indies, involving the raising of £60,000.

The King's "Health."—A very important fact has been notified in the service paper, that His Majesty the King, in kind consideration of his numerous abstaining subjects in the Navy and Army, has signified his approval of the drinking of his health in water, and has also stated that such a form of toasting will be thoroughly in accordance with his wishes. Miss Weston, anxious to secure an authoritative statement, wrote to Captain G. F. King Hall, R.N., President of the "Royal Naval Temperance Society." He in his turn inquired from the highest source, and received a reply authoritatively stating that it was His Majesty's pleasure that total abstainers should drink his health in water. Thus the custom of drinking the King's health in wine, which has long been a difficulty to total abstainers, has been swept away by the royal approval of water in lieu of wine. This act of kingly courtesy will be warmly welcomed by a large and increasing body of officers and men in the services, whose loyalty and devotion to their King is second to none.

The Needs of Hungary.

WE have received a touching letter from Professor A. Szabo, of the Reformed Theological Academy, Budapest, who is also president of the Bethania Association. He is anxious to press on the hearts of British Christians the spiritual needs of Budapest:—

"Souls are perishing who might be saved, if we could get a little help just at the moment when we are passing through a grave crisis, when they would become not only Protestants, but Evangelical Christians, surrendering themselves absolutely to their Divine Saviour.

"We cannot make much progress unless we build at least a modest building, and we cannot now get much in Hungary, because there are very few who know what decision for the Lord is. What we get is absorbed in rent.

"We have founded with a few friends the Bethania Association, which carries on a very blessed Sunday-school and Christian Endeavour work, and has now a salaried lady-secretary and an agent, a young man who sells Bibles and tracts, and propagates Evangelical papers. We have also prayer-meetings and meetings for the deepening of the Christian life. All this blessed work is threatened with extinction, if our brethren do not come to our aid.

"If we had headquarters in Budapest, we believe the Lord would send His Spirit; and Hungary, which begins already to move, will be won for Jesus. Then we shall pay out your help to other nationalities. Also, in this respect, we have made a small beginning. We have done something for the Finns; we educate Armenian orphans, and we have two Magyar missionary pupils, one in Basel, the other in Liebensell, under the care of the German branch of the China Inland Mission."

Professor A. Szabo's address is 48, Varosmajor, Budapest.

The Blind of North India.

THE numerous friends of the late Miss Annie Sharp will be interested to learn that her lamented death has caused no interregnum in the management of the North India Missionary Institute for the Blind. She had worked for many years at Amritsar with her sister and Miss Hewlett. The latter lady was with Miss Sharp when she died, and, without delay, has taken control of the work, and is now resident at Rajpur.

One of the latest efforts of the departed worker was to draft a letter to THE CHRISTIAN, giving details of progress in the adaptation of the Braille type for the blind. At the close of the letter she says: "I cannot sufficiently thank my faithful band of Braille writers and other helpers, and I would ask them and others to note these four facts: (1) On our shelves today are some seventy English books, also the whole Urdú Bible almost triplicated, and many copies of the Gospels and Psalms; also a few good Urdú story books. (2) At Rajpur we shall number (excluding Europeans) over seventy souls. About five of these will be sighted boys and women-helpers; the rest are, for all practical purposes, blind, and seven of them mentally defective. (3) We have sent out nine workers—two Bible-women, two preachers, and five teachers of the blind. (4) There is not one pupil (except the sick ones) who does not work according to his or her ability."

Miss Emily Sharp, The Grange, Redhill, Surrey, will be glad of opportunities for furnishing friends with fuller information.

The Good Shepherd.—The Hebrews must have been familiar with the Twenty-third Psalm, and so might well ponder the Saviour's words when He proclaims Himself the Good Shepherd. And oh, how thankful we should be, wandering, weak, dependent as we are, that we have such a Shepherd who knows us, cares for us, and who guards and provides for us here and hereafter! Let us hear His voice, follow Him, and not any stranger; and let us think much of the one fold. We are in one company, with Christ for leader, to be gathered into the one fold above. Let us maintain brotherly love.—Dr. John Hall.

The Churches.

Church of England.

On the occasion of the formal re-opening of the chancel of Bangor Cathedral on Thursday last, a thanksgiving service took place, the sermon being delivered by the Bishop of Liverpool.

"Smoking strictly forbidden" is the notice to be observed in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, as one enters by the west door. It appears that many foreigners have been sharply rebuked by the officials for smoking cigarettes in the cathedral.

The last monthly report of the Police Court and Prisongate Mission of the Liverpool diocesan branch of the C.E.T.S. shows that the missionaries visited twenty-six police and petty sessional courts in Liverpool and Southwest Lancashire. During 249 visits to these courts they conversed with 1,247 persons in the cells and court-rooms, of whom 514 were subsequently visited in their abodes. Seventy-one women, girls, and boys were taken to Homes, restored to relations and friends, and provided with employment.

Congregational.

The fifty-third anniversary of the Bar Church, Scarborough, has been celebrated. Rev. Principal Forsyth preached to large congregations morning and evening, and his discourses were much appreciated.

Rev. Stanley Rogers resumed his ministry at Westminster Road, Liverpool, on Sunday evening last. Before the close of the year the church has undertaken to raise a fund of 1,000 guineas, a portion of which will be used to complete the payment of a debt on the new Chalmers Mission Hall.

After a few years of earnest preparatory work the Congregationalists of Bramhall, Cheshire, have felt themselves strong enough to undertake the erection of a place of worship. For this purpose they have secured a plot of land, and on Saturday week they laid the commemoration-stone of a new "school church."

Knot Mill Congregational Chapel, Deansgate (now known as Knot Hill Mission Hall), one of the six active centres of social and evangelical efforts carried on by the Manchester, Salford, and District Congregational Mission Board, is about to celebrate its jubilee. It is now fifty years since the building was opened for public worship by the late Revs. Dr. Raffles, of Liverpool, and James Parsons, of York. It will be remembered that this was the scene of the ministerial labours for nearly thirty-years of late Rev. John Rawlinson.

Baptist.

At the re-opening of Myrtle Street Chapel, Liverpool, on Lord's Day last, the services were conducted by Rev. John Thomas. There were large congregations. During the five or six weeks that the chapel has been closed a scheme of re-decoration has been carried out.

The Baptist Missionary Society has decided to entrust the task of providing the proposed new Congo steamer to the Christian Endeavour and other young people's societies connected with the Baptist denomination. With a view to identify the vessel with the young folk it is to be called Endeavour.

Capital attendances and earnest addresses have, so far, marked the services in the capacious tent which the Church at Rye Lane, S.E., has secured for a month. At a service at which Rev. F. S. Webster spoke, about a thousand persons assembled. Mr. Webster gave a striking address on the question, "Are you a New Testament Christian?" Convention meetings continued throughout last week. Saturday was "Christian Endeavour day," when Revs. Albert Swift, Percy Gaster, and J. W. Ewing took part. This week an evangelistic mission is being held.

Pastor S. Levermore undertook the ministry of Oaklands Church, Surbiton, during the absence, for rest, of Rev. E. H. Brown. Good congregations assembled each Sabbath. Many Christians have had cause for gratitude in a deepening of spiritual life, and a number of the unconverted were led to the Saviour. The Thursday evenings were devoted to a series of Old Testament studies, which proved very helpful. On September 3 Mr. Levermore gave an interesting lecture on his mission work in Normandy.

Resignation.—Rev. F. A. Hogbin, Lymington, Hants.

Methodist.

On Sunday last, Rev. H. Howard May opened his ministry in connection with the West London Mission. He conducted the morning service at St. James's Hall.

The Wesleyan Missionary secretaries and staff have arranged to take possession of the new premises on September 29. On that day the business will be transferred from the temporary offices at Coleman Street, and once more Bishopsgate Street will be the headquarters.

Rev. Thomas Cook intimates that the negotiations for the purchase of Cliff College in Derbyshire, a building admirably adapted for the purposes of the Joyful News Home, are nearly completed, and that the removal from Rochdale will probably take place within three weeks. The Home will be employed to train three classes of workers: (1) Young men "called to preach," but without educational advantages; (2) Evangelists for Gospel cars and Home Mission work; (3) local preachers, who will be invited to stay at the Home for one, two, or three months' training.

A vivid sidelight on slum life is given by a worker of the Wesleyan East London Mission, who says: "In one of our worst streets live a husband and wife and seven children. They occupy two dark cellars. The only ray of light comes in through the low grating, and the rest is obtained by means of a reeking old lamp. The eldest boy earns, or should earn, a few shillings a week; the rest of the children have to be kept. The wife walks about three miles a day trying to earn a little by scrubbing. The husband is a shoemaker working at home; his wife helps him when she returns. They make shoes almost throughout at terribly sweating prices. They are very grateful to anyone who is kind to them. They are saving up to give a pair of shoes to a nurse in the London Hospital who nursed the husband through an illness. They do not go to any place of worship, and are busy all day on Sunday. We are patiently waiting for some visible results to our visits, and trust that God's message may enter their hearts."

Presbyterian.

Rev. J. Idloes Edwards has undertaken the charge of the English mining settlement in North Borneo.

Principal Cavan, of Toronto, will preside over the meetings of the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance, to be held in Liverpool next year. The inaugural sermon will be preached by Dr. John Watson.

Rev. Andrew M. Kelly, assistant to Rev. J. M'Ewen, Sydney Place Church, Glasgow, has been appointed to the pastorate of St. George's Presbyterian Church, Stockton, in succession to Rev. Andrew Ross. He will be inducted on October 8.

At a representative meeting of lay members of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Connexion held at Rhyl, it was resolved to raise £7,000 before the end of this year so as to complete the Century Fund of £100,000. The sum of £1,000 was contributed at the meeting.

Society of Friends.

Abraham Fisher, after visiting a number of meetings in Ireland and some in England, has sailed from Liverpool on his way home to the United States.

Fielden and Amy Jane Thorpe have visited Bradford meeting. They also addressed a gathering of veterans of the Temperance movement in the Temperance Hall.

Alexander Dunlop, of Ardrossan, has been a few weeks within the compass of Ulster Quarterly Meeting. He held a mission in Brookfield and other places, besides visiting meetings in Hillsborough, Belfast, and Lurgan. Many came long distances night after night, eagerly watching after the deeper things of the Kingdom of God. Decisions appear to have been made in many hearts, that may bud and bloom to the glory and praise of the Master.

A sphere of work is offered in an Essex hamlet, where there is no other place of worship. A retired minister, with means of his own, in exchange for work may have residence (rent free) in a furnished bungalow. Particulars from Mrs. Engall, Newcourt, Churchfield Road, Acton, W.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. EDWIN CLARKE, pastor of the Congregational Church at Farley Hill, Matlock. Mr. Clarke founded the cause at Farley Hill eleven years ago, and has laboured with devotion and zeal in the building up of the community there. Mr. Clarke had also been for nearly thirty years chaplain at Smedley's Hydropathic Establishment.—Mrs. CELIA WALKER, of Leeds, an elder of the Society of Friends. Her good judgment and business-like habits, combined with a gracious dignity of manner, won the respect and confidence of all who knew her.—The death of Mr. WILLIAM AUSTIN, of Liverpool, has deprived St. Augustine's Church, in Shaw Street (says the Bishop in his Diocesan Notes) of one of its leading workers, and the diocese of Liverpool of one of its most devoted sons. Mr. WILLIAM EMERSON, of Dublin, who preached Christ in the Metropolitan Hall and Gilford's Hall and at Williamstown with much acceptance and blessing; his godly, consistent life as much as his preaching spoke to many, and he will be greatly missed.—Rev. WILLIAM WHALE, a leading Baptist minister in Queensland. He had been pastor of the Brisbane City Tabernacle since 1885, and was president for the year 1902-3 of the Queensland Baptist Association.—At Bromley, Kent, on August 27, after terrible suffering, Mrs. FOOKS, for the last eight years a total invalid, but previous to that an earnest worker for souls. Mrs. Fooks was a sister of the late Mrs. Grattan Guinness. Her last words were, amid her pain, "I am His and He is mine, for ever and for ever."

Onion Lake, Saskatchewan.—Anxious to share in the times of blessing which were being experienced in other parts of the world, Rev. J. R. Matheson arranged some time ago for a two-weeks series of evangelistic meetings at Onion Lake, Saskatchewan. The large congregations were composed of Indians, half-breeds, and whites, Romanists and heathens alike coming. Much good work was done, and several "added to the Church." Above all, it was a time of rich blessing to all the workers, and gave an impetus to every branch of service. One of the most useful helpers was a son of "Big Bear," (famous in the 1885 Rebellion). Master of his own tongue, he is a natural orator, and unquestionably "filled with the Spirit."

"What the Bible is to Me."

THE Bible is my Church. It is always open, and there is my High Priest ever waiting to receive me. There, too, I have my thanksgiving, my praise, and a field of promises; in short, all I can want there I find; and a congregation of whom the world is not worthy—prophets, martyrs, and confessors.—Charlotte Elliott.

How delightful this Bible looks to me when I see the blood of Christ sprinkled upon it! Every leaf would have flashed with Sinai's lightnings, and every verse would have rolled with the thunders of Horeb, if it had not been for Calvary's Cross. Now as you look you see on every page your Saviour's name. He loved you and gave Himself for you, and now you who are sprinkled with that blood, and have by faith rested in Him, can take that precious book and find it to be green pastures and still waters to your souls.—Spurgeon.

I have seen much of this world, but I never knew how to live till now. All the comfort I have, and that is more than the whole world can give, is, the feeling of the Good Spirit in my heart, and reading in this good book, the Bible. You are now in the prime of your age and vigour, and in great favour and business; but all this may leave you, and you may one day better understand and relish what I say to you, and then you will find that there is more wisdom, truth, comfort, and pleasure in retiring and turning your heart from the world to the Good Spirit of God, and in reading the Bible, than in all the Courts and the favours of Princes.—Oxenstiern, Chancellor of Sweden.

The Tragedy of the East. The horror of the Eastern situation deepens every day, and the worst feature of the case is the seeming apathy of every European Government, our own included, in face of the unspeakable atrocities inflicted by the Turks on the Christian population of Macedonia. If only the chief Powers were to combine in defence of the helpless women and children who are being swept out of existence in whole villages and towns, the tragedy would speedily come to an end; and yet nothing, so far, has been done. The fear of putting a spark to the mine that runs beneath the Turkish Government, and so of precipitating a general European conflict, is probably at the root of this apparent callousness. It seems incredible, however, that such a state of things should be capable of existing in the most civilized continent on the earth's surface.

"Lo, Mine Eye hath Seen!" Mr. Meyer might well feel himself "unmanned," as he said at Oxford. It is enough to take the nerve out of anyone to be compelled to learn of these frightful massacres and to be helpless to stop them. The Sultan must add to his knavery an unexampled folly if he imagines that Europe will believe that reputable newspaper correspondents have conspired to lie and to invent these stories of atrocity. Europe knows now with absolute certainty, that the horrors of 1876 and of 1896 are being repeated, and that the Turk is slowly exterminating the Christian population. And all we do as a nation is to "advise" Turkey, and to protest against massacre. As a leader in an influential provincial newspaper puts it:—

> The protests against massacre are merely hypocritical so long as the only European policy is that of forming a ring while Turkey and the insurgents fight it out. . . . The Powers are really inciting the Turks to massacre.

The Church can only pray and protest, but the great Judge will have something to say to those cowardly Powers who permit these abominations of murder and rapine.

Hope for India. Professor Armitage's thoughtful and well-informed paper in the current Contemporary Review is, doubtless, one of the most powerful contributions which have yet been made to the burning subject of Indian missions. Under personal knowledge of the land and the people, the Professor recognises the difficulty of presenting the Christian religion to thinking and serious Hindus, and he urges that the wider study of non-Christian religions is a necessary movement in connection with mission work. As a matter of fact, that study has been taken up so largely that India to-day is receiving from Christian students, rather than giving to them, a critical knowledge of the texts and tenets of its own "saints and philosophers." It almost goes without saying that Dr. Oldfield's grave misjudgments are not repeated in this article on "The Indian Missionary," for Professor Armitage quotes at length, with approval, Sir William Hunter's eulogistic testimony to those who are proclaiming the Gospel of Christ in the great Dependency; and he says, hopefully enough:—

> The conflict is as yet far from over, and men will inevitably forecast the issue differently. But if ever the day comes when the Christian missionary must be pronounced to have failed in India, it will only be after England has failed there in all her nobler purposes before him, and after she has abandoned the hope of ever commending her rule to the trust and affection of the Indian people.

"Things as They Are." On some hands the opinion has been expressed that Miss Amy Wilson-Carmichael draws too sad a picture in her remarkable volume, "Things as They Are in Southern India." Against this fear it is right to place the following testimony by a veteran American missionary:—

> I could duplicate nearly every incident in the book; so I know it is a true picture, not alone because I believe your word, but because my experience has been so similar to yours. Many times while reading it, the memory of the old heart-break has been so vivid that I have had to lay the book down and look round the familiar room, in order to convince myself that it was you and not I that was agonizing over one of the King's own children who was being crowded back into darkness and hurled down to destruction, because Satan's wrath is great as he realizes that his time is short. I wish the book might be read by all the Christians in the homeland.

Alas, that the story should be so true! Alas, that India should still be in the grip of the enemy of souls, though nineteen centuries ago the Saviour came "to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, to set at liberty them that are bound!"

"Modern Thought" and Missions. The proof of principles is found in practice, and the relative value or danger of Modern Criticism finds its test in heathen lands. At the recent Y.M.C.A. Conference in Japan it was found necessary to "eliminate destructive teaching," for, as our correspondent, Mr. Loomis, says (p. 14):—

> Theories that are being tolerated in the homeland are ruinous to an alarming extent, when introduced into a land where Christianity is only beginning to be established.

The Ministers' Conference. We give some notes of this Conference on p. 21. In such a gathering, representing divers shades of thought, it was not surprising to hear many views expressed with which we are far from being in agreement. But the mutual Christian courtesy with which they were discussed added much to the profit of the meetings, which, on the whole, were times of spiritual and intellectual quickening. It was a little startling to hear the use of notes in prayer advocated by Dr. Forsyth, and we cannot but be alive to the danger involved in Rev. R. J. Campbell's view that the standard of Biblical Inspiration is the "Christian consciousness," which, as Rev. Edward Isaac very rightly pointed out, varies in different individuals, and is, therefore, an unreliable and uncertain quantity. The most hopeful aspect of such an assembly is the contact of the "broader" men with those who are more distinctively Evangelical, since experience shows that the votaries of "modern thought" are lamentably unfamiliar with what is to be said on the other side.

The Note of Authority. One of the most important addresses was Professor Adeney's, in dealing with the minister's relation to his Lord, its chief feature being the insistence upon the note of authority in preaching. Professor Adeney does not exaggerate when he declares that this is largely lacking to-day. For one thing, the "Higher Criticism" has done much, with younger men at least, in the creating of uncertainty, and nebulous beliefs can never produce authoritative teaching. Our Lord impressed everybody with the "authority by which He spake"—so different from the wearisome guesses of the Scribes and Pharisees—but then He spake "that which He knew." And the man who preaches Christ to-day must preach Him, not tentatively, but with full assurance; with assurance born of actual knowledge and experience. Much of the unbelief which prevails in our time is simply the natural turning away of men from the uncertain tone which too many professed teachers have employed.

"Rome's Gospel." Some weeks ago we inserted a letter calling attention to the issue of an edition of the Gospels and Acts, in Italian, by the "St. Jerome Society for the Circulation of the Holy Gospels," with the authority of the Vatican. Later, we gave a letter from Mr. J. S. Anderson, of Florence, pointing out the unsatisfactory nature of this translation, and especially of the notes and restrictions with which it is hedged about. A lady worker in Florence having criticized the position taken by Mr. Anderson, we wrote to Rev. James Campbell Wall, of Rome, as likely to be well informed on the subject. We commend to the attention of our readers his exceedingly well-balanced article which appears on p. 14.

A Word in Season. The death at an early age, in Paris a few days ago, of Bernard Lazare, a notable freethinker, who had done much on behalf of the suffering Jews in Roumania and Russia, gives ground for regret that so far as has yet been stated, the gifted writer had not been able to shake off the heavy burden of the philosophical doubts which kept him from the liberty with which Christ makes free all those who accept the Gospel. That he could recognise the power and influence of pure Christianity is evidenced in more than one of his writings, and in one of these references there are some words which England would do well to take to heart to-day when so many surreptitious and underhand attempts are being made to abrogate the freedom which she owes to her Protestantism. M. Lazare wrote:—

> France missed her great opportunity three centuries ago when she failed to embrace the Reformation. An opportunity like that does not come twice.

Even the school-boy knows what depths of mental and spiritual slavery the French nation would have been saved from, if the other road had been taken.

The Trade of War. In the recent report of a large industrial company there are some words of regret, as an apology to the shareholders, that there are at present no signs of another large war, and that the manufacture of engines of destruction must therefore be set aside for that of other things less murderous, and possibly less profitable. Recent movements of thought in Germany and France, as well as in this country, certainly point to the fact that the Hague Conference has not failed; and it is well that it should be so, for history shows that it is as true of nations as of individuals, "All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword" (Matt. xxvi. 52). Too long the nations of the world have beaten the plowshares into swords and their pruning-hooks into spears (Joel iii. 10), and it is for every Christian to pray for the hastening of that glad time when "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more" (Isa. ii. 4).

Brains versus Swords. Sir Norman Lockyer made a noble use of a great opportunity when, as president of the British Association, he emphasized as a condition of future prosperity the importance of better education in this country rather than of greater efficiency of the army and navy. We have not yet learnt that it is the duty of the State to organize its forces for peace as for war, and that universities and other teaching centres are as essential as battleships and big battalions. The future belongs to those nations that can develop the mental resources of its citizens, and set their feet in the path of progress. Trade no longer follows the flag; it follows the brains. This is a practical way of putting the fact that we are rapidly passing out of the era of war into the industrial era—a form of competition in which not strength but skill and industry tell.

The Church and the University. There is, however, something more to be said as to the conditions of final survival and supremacy among the nations. Knowledge is power, especially the kind of knowledge which is so rapidly being organized under the banner of the practical sciences. But power needs to be regulated, controlled, and directed to the highest uses, if it is to be an unmixed boon. Power, insight, skill, apart from character, may work for a nation's ruin instead of its salvation. Science, in other words, must become the handmaid of religion, so that with the increase of material resources there may be a corresponding capacity to use them in the interests of the soul. Without this, even education cannot do its perfect work, or fulfil its ideal function. The University of Man should be an annexe to the Church of Christ.

The Goal of Education. We have read with pleasure the noble address of Professor Dixon, delivered at the annual meeting of the Library Association at Leeds last week. We are accustomed to the cry, "Educate, educate!" but it is not often that our public men speak in the strain of Professor Dixon, who enunciated the great need of the day as—

> Some resolute person to stand across our path and inquire of us what it is that as a community we have really at heart—what it is towards which in our national life we are striving. . . . We seem as a community to be inclined to surrender ourselves to that view of education which conceives for it simply as technical equipment whereby a man might serve himself at the expense of his neighbours and mount to greater heights of fortune or of power.

This is the exact truth of the situation, and it helps to explain why, with the immense increase of knowledge, the moral standard is lower rather than higher with very many. So long as a man makes himself the goal of all things—whether he be educated or illiterate—he misses the end for which he was created. To imagine that education will save society, is to be victimized by the strangest of follies. Man's heart needs curing first—he needs to be regenerated by the Spirit of God, and then education will become a weapon, not simply for the defence of himself, but for the purposes of the Kingdom of God.

"Rice Christians." This name is given in China to converts who make a public confession of Christianity, not from conviction, but because of some personal or social advantage to be thereby gained. A writer in The Pilot criticises some of our home mission methods as tending to manufacture a similar kind of religion in this country, and strongly condemns the soup-kitchens, ladies' sewing societies, Sunday-school and mothers' meeting, treats, &c. We do not endorse this too sweeping criticism. At the same time, Christian workers would do well to guard against abuse of such methods, especially as it is said that one reason why strong-minded working-men refuse to attend mission-meetings is because they fear to be "tarred" as disciples of the loaves and fishes.

Religion and Philanthropy. It is easy to find fault with the exaggeration of good intentions. Philanthropy, if degenerate and unthinking, may become a spiritual snare; but wisely regulated, it has always been one of the most useful and consistent auxiliaries of religious work. Our Lord Himself was the Prince of philanthropists. He often reached a man's soul through ministering to the needs of his body; and He never refused a physical benefit except when it was sought under the pretence of a higher quest. All Christian workers amongst the poor and outcast know well that kindness is one of the surest weapons wherewith to break down opposition, and open the heart to religious influences. This is a matter in which zeal should be tempered by discretion; but the discretion should regulate and not kill the zeal.

The True Leaders. The great influence which Mr. Arthur Chamberlain has suddenly developed in the life of the country, is one of the most hopeful signs of the times. Standing aside from the strife of party politics, he is devoting his strength to dealing with those fundamental questions concerning the people's good, which partisans, in their party warfare, omit from their programme. In this he has set forth the type of the true patriot, and we wish that his like might be multiplied. The Manchester Guardian publishes a long interview with him, in which the following passage occurs:—

> We know what Cromwell said of another parliament, and this is what I want to hear said of this. I wish to see in Parliament a spirit of peace, a spirit of retrenchment, a spirit of efficiency, and I hope it wont be thought laughable if I say a spirit of earnestness. What was it Cromwell said of his army? He didn't want serving men and tapsters to fight the national battles, but men of religion. The battles of the nation can never be fought by tapsters and serving men.

These are noble words — rare enough amongst politicians; public men would do well to ponder them. Mr. Arthur Chamberlain has himself rendered magnificent service in checkmating the moves of "tapsters and serving men." It will be a happy thing for us when all our leaders will follow suit.

THE UNVEILING.

EXPOSITION OF SYMBOLS.

COMMUNICATIONS received during the past fortnight show that there are still some who lovingly, reverently, and intelligently read the Bible, even to its last chapter, the book of visions to which the promise of blessing is attached. For every book of Scripture is as a chapter in a volume which is one organic whole; and they who read the Bible thus will feel and understand that as the pyramid would be incomplete without the topstone, so the Book of God would be unfinished without the visions at its close. For as the topstone of the pyramid is itself a pyramid, so the Apocalypse is itself a Bible, the summary, the issue, the outcome, the consummation of the whole previous revelation.

Therefore to anyone who asks to be informed of the best book in explanation of the Revelation, the reply is, the Bible itself. A meditative, prayerful, and continuous reading of the previous books should convince the reader that the Apocalyptic visions are the natural and necessary conclusion of the Scriptures of truth. And familiarity with Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalms, the Gospels, the Acts and the Epistles, will have prepared him to recognize the Scriptural symbolism of the Patmos visions.

The germ of everything is in Genesis, the fruit and flower in Revelation. The whole Bible is marvellously contained in it as regards man fallen in the first Adam, and his possibilities by virtue of his relation to the Second Man, the Lord from Heaven.

The Bible is a book of joy and sorrow; of despair and hope; of heaven and hell; of the true King and the false usurper; of eternal blessedness and eternal perdition; of the Holy God and the Evil One; of the Son who was obedient unto death, and the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience. And all this is made manifest in the visions of God in Patmos.

Signs of His Coming.

THE Lord's Return is one of the great truths of the New Testament revelation. It is set before the Church as a mighty hope, purifying in its influence upon those whose life is hid with Christ in God. Prophets and wise men of generations long past, "searched what time or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did point unto when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ AND THE GLORIES THAT SHOULD FOLLOW" (1 Pet. i. 11, R.V.) The words of our blessed Lord Himself implanted an undying expectation in the breasts of early believers; and in the writings of Evangelists and Apostles mysteries were unfolded, and a waiting Church was taught to lift eyes to heaven with the prayer—"COME, LORD JESUS."

None of the mistaken calculations of men, nor all of them put together, should be allowed to obscure from view the sure word of prophecy in this particular. The closing passage of the Apocalypse contains the solemn words: "He which testifieth these things saith, SURELY I COME QUICKLY." What if young men have seen visions and old men have dreamed dreams, leading them to look at God's purpose from a standpoint which fails to do justice to the proportion of faith? What if theories and schemes have been discredited and the anticipations of masters of exposition have failed? Just this—we fall back upon "the word of prophecy made more sure; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed in your hearts, as unto a light shining in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day-star arise" (2 Pet. i. 19).

As Scripture is greater than all commentary, so prophecy is greater than every interpretation. Let us praise God for the Inspired Word on which He has caused us to hope, and for the many converging lines of prediction in Holy Scripture which throw light upon the majestic promise given by the Lord to his distressed disciples: "If I go away, I WILL COME AGAIN AND RECEIVE YOU UNTO MYSELF." And shall we not place alongside these converging lines of prediction the ever-accumulating volume of indications on the horizon of time which point to the coming of the Day of God? After nineteen centuries we may quote with special emphasis the words of the Apostle: "The earnest expectation of the creation WAITETH for the revealing of the sons of God, . . and . . even we ourselves groan within ourselves, WAITING FOR OUR ADOPTION, TO WIT, THE REDEMPTION OF OUR BODY" (Rom. viii. 19, 23, R.V.).

What does the Blessed Hope mean to us to-day—in our testimony and patience, in the trials of our Christian faith and the sorrows of humanity as a whole? In view of social unrest and religious distraction, of refinements of sin and materialistic selfishness, of "distress of nations with perplexity . . . men's hearts failing them for fear"—is it not consoling, and above all else satisfying to heart and soul, to heed the Master's voice when He says: "WATCH YE AT EVERY SEASON, MAKING SUPPLICATION, that ye may prevail to escape all those things that shall come to pass, and TO STAND BEFORE THE SON OF MAN"? In the midst of events and circumstances that manifest the spirit of Anti-Christ, may it be ours to be occupied with the Christ of God, and to be engaged in His holy service "TILL HE COME."

And once more, the contradictions of sin and the abounding indications that "the mystery of iniquity already works," synchronise with complications in the East of Europe. The Turk and his murderous hordes, followers of the False Prophet, have resumed their wanton endeavours to obliterate the name of Christ from territories which for centuries have been the scene of tyranny and misrule, corruption and impurity. Many thousands of innocent people—men, women, and children—have been slain with every demonstration of villany and cruelty; and it would seem as if the more enlightened Powers of the West are either unable or unwilling to stretch a hand whereby to arrest the wicked work of "the Great Assassin." The future of the Land of Promise is once more coming into view, and there is likelihood of that region soon becoming something more than a mere geographical expression. This occurs, moreover, at the very time when the fateful people of the Jews are being enrolled as Zionists, and sending one another pictorial post-cards bearing the words, "If I forget Thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning"!

Assuredly, the present outlook is full of interest to the instructed and reflecting disciple of Christ. With the Lord's Word "hid in his heart," he sees in the various commotions of earth so many signs of the Coming of the Son of Man. The sorrowing soul cries, "Lord, how long?" And the reassuring response is, "THE LORD IS AT HAND!"

Come then, and added to Thy many crowns,
Receive yet one, the crown of all the earth,
For Thou alone art worthy! It was Thine
By ancient covenant ere Nature's birth,
And Thou hast made it Thine by purchase since,
And overpaid its value with Thy blood.
Thy saints proclaim Thee King; and Thy delay
Gives courage to their foes, who, could they see,
The dawn of Thy last Advent, long-desired,
Would creep into the bowels of the hills,
And flee for safety to the falling rocks.
The very spirit of the world is tired
Of its own taunting question, asked so long,
"Where is the promise of your Lord's approach?"

The Macedonian Cry.

FROM day to day the reports from the Balkans have become more and more replete with horrors such as the Turk knows how to perpetrate when Christian blood is within his reach. On Sunday last many preachers called attention to the atrocities of recent weeks, and Monday's Times contained important letters from the Bishops of Durham, Hereford, Worcester, and Gibraltar.

Dr. MOULE (Durham) writes:—

I am one of very many, of all political opinions, who are anxiously hoping, if the phrase may be borne, that England may take prompt and serious action towards the arrest of the sanguinary miseries of Macedonia. We have not so forgotten the noblest of our national traditions, surely, as to take it quietly while a great European province, of whatever empire, is the daily scene, now beyond doubt, of massacre and outrage; newspaper correspondents being, with ominous firmness, ordered off the scene. The matter is infinitely above party politics. Men of all parties remember the responsibility of England for that action of the Congress of Berlin, which left Macedonia to the Sultan, with the meaning, of course, that his rule there should be "reformed." If I understand at all aright, England has an opportunity now as well as a responsibility. Her initiative in protest and appeal may be even welcomed by powers willing to support the cause of humanity but less free to initiate. Will not the world expect England to use her opportunity, and "to herself be true"?

ENGLAND TO BLAME.

Dr. GORE (Worcester) says:

There are moments when silence becomes almost unbearable. We are watching the tragedy of the Balkans. It must be lying as a crushing burden upon every Christian conscience. But no one seems to speak. At least, it seems to me, Englishmen must not at this moment be allowed to forget that twenty-five years ago the armies of Russia were marching victorious over the Balkans on their way to Constantinople, and that the end of the Turkish tyranny over Christians in Europe would have come but for the intervention of England. The responsibility which we then took upon ourselves for the protection of the Christian populations, by refusing to let Russia go to Constantinople, cannot well be over-estimated. Do we remember this to-day? Are we who care for these things making the Government understand that we are restless and miserable—that we want to be assured that everything possible is being done to obtain, for instance, the effective co-operation of England and France to procure some combined action of the Powers? If the secrets of diplomacy cannot be told us, at least let our rulers know the sense of humiliation and pain which is possessing us. Have we no great Englishman with a voice to speak with?

A STATE OF MORAL CATALEPSY.

Among thoughtful communications in The Spectator, is one from Canon MALCOLM MACCOLL, who inquires whether Europe has cast off its Christianity in all but the name. As to England, he says it is in a state of moral catalepsy, with no leader to rouse it from its perilous torpor. The Canon reads a timely lesson to the people and rulers of Great Britain in the following sentences:—

And of all the Powers England is in one sense the most guilty. For when the Macedonians were liberated in 1877 it was England in particular that forced them back under the Turkish yoke. The British Government, it is true, sought to mitigate that crime by pledging the nation, separately and in union with the other Powers, to see that the Sultan fulfilled his treaty obligations to carry out the prescribed reforms in Macedonia and Armenia. But from that day to this no British Government, Tory or Liberal, has taken a single effective step to redeem its pledge. It is related in a Book in which the Christian Powers still profess to believe that "the Lord looked unto the host of the Egyptians through the pillar of fire and of the cloud, and troubled the host of the Egyptians, and took off their chariot wheels, that they drave them heavily."

There are more ways than one of troubling armies and taking off their chariot wheels, and the blunders and muddle and mess which paralysed a mighty British host in face of a comparatively puny foe may have been due, as its primary cause, to that righteous retribution which invariably dogs, and eventually overtakes, national apostasy. Drilled battalions and lines of battleships are of no avail for the protection of a nation that has repudiated the law of righteousness and forsaken its God. A nation that has gone over to the worship of Mammon, that has set its heart on making money, seeking pleasure, thirsting for the excitement of gambling, and cares not for the law of righteousness, is on the down grade that leads to ruin, and no reform of administration or change of fiscal policy can save it. And our betrayal of the Armenians and Macedonians was so entirely unnecessary. The Sultan is, of all Sovereigns, the easiest to manage if the right method is adopted. All that was necessary was the apparition of a few ironclads—an ironclad for each of the great Powers—before Smyrna or Salonica, with a peremptory order to carry out the provisions of the Treaty of Berlin, and it would have been done without the need of firing a shot.

A CALL TO PRAYER.

DEAR SIR,—When history records its judgment of these times; when we shall give an account of ourselves to God; I fear we shall be charged with being as callous and as indifferent as the world to the horrors now staining the East with the blood of innocence and outrage. The Turk is again carrying out the Moslem programme of ages, by exasperating beyond all human endurance, beyond all that lieth in man, his Christian subjects; and then he arises to the work of horrible massacre of men, women, and children, and of still worse wrongs, impossible to describe, of dreadful outrages which cannot be mentioned among Christians. All hope of help from men, from the world-powers and nations, is vain; the call that now comes to us is from God. We pray to Him on account of our own griefs; shall we not pray to Him on account of the unspeakable sorrows of others? And if we are truly in earnest, shall we not unite together definitely in a concert of prayer, that God may arise and stay the shedding of innocent blood, and cruel wrongs now visited upon those upon whom the name of our Lord Jesus Christ has been named?—I remain, yours faithfully,

The Second Mile.

IT is the second mile that tests our character. About the first there is no controversy. We must traverse it whether we will or not. Our Lord refers to the usage of the East in the transmission of royal messages. Each village or township was bound to forward the message to the next, and the first man happened on, however pressing his own business, was obliged to afford the use of his horses or mules, and go forward with the royal courier.

In the same way emergencies are continually happening to us all. We leave our homes in the morning not expecting any demand for help or any other circumstance to interfere with the regular routine of the day's engagements; and then, all suddenly and unexpectedly, there are the sounds of horses' hoofs. A great demand has burst in on our lives, and we are obliged to go off in a direction which we never contemplated. We have no option. We are compelled to go one mile, and then the question will arise: Now you have performed what you were bound to perform, and given what any other man would have given, what are you going to do? The next mile is of prime necessity, it is in your option to go or not to go, and your action will determine whether or not you have entered into the inner heart of Christ, and are His disciple, not in word only but "in deed and in truth."

What as to the left cheek? That the right should have been struck is an incident which has happened to you altogether apart from your choice. It does not reveal your character in one way or the other, but your behaviour with respect to the left cheek will show immediately what you are.

What as to your cloak? Apparently your creditor can claim your tunic, and there is no merit in giving this up—any must have done as much—but what when that is gone? This is the test of what you really are.

Many saintly souls have yielded a literal obedience to these precepts. It is recorded of the eccentric but devoted Billy Bray, that on going down into the pit, shortly after his remarkable conversion, an old companion gave him a stinging blow on the cheek. "Take that," he said, "for turning Methodist." In former times such an insult would never have been attempted, for the whole country knew that Billy Bray was an inveterate pugilist. All the answer that he gave, however, was, "The Lord forgive thee, lad, as I do, and bring thee to a better mind; I'll pray for thee." Three or four days after, his assailant came to him under the deepest conviction of sin and asked his forgiveness.

The head of the constabulary in a great district in India told me that when he became a Christian he found it necessary to withdraw from the Gymkana (which is the European club and society rendezvous in most Indian cities), and his action in this matter aroused very strong feeling against him among his former associates. One day as he was driving on the high road, a well-known society-man, driving past him in the other direction, rose up in his dog-cart and cut at him a tremendous blow with his whip, saying as he swore, "Take that you . . . ." My friend, who is a very powerful man, and of commanding presence, took it quietly, waited his opportunity of doing this man a kindness, and I believe it was the means of his conversion also.

In connection with a missionary society working among the tribes on the Congo, in which I am deeply interested, one of the missionaries resolved that he would teach a literal obedience to these words of our Lord, lest any evasion of them might lessen their authority over the hearts and lives of His people. His hearers were greatly interested and excited, and were not slow in putting the missionary to the test. On one memorable day they gathered around his house, and began asking for the articles which excited their cupidity, and which he had brought at such cost from home. In an hour or two his house was literally stripped, and his wife and he betook themselves to prayer, for, of course, it is impossible for Europeans to live in that climate without many accessories which are needless for the natives. But, in the evening, under the shadow of the night, one after another stole back bringing the article which he had taken away, and confessing that it was impossible to retain it in his possession, because of the burden which had come upon his heart.

But even if to be taken literally there must be some reserves. For instance, when our Lord says, Resist not evil, it is impossible to apply his words universally. Clearly our Lord only forbids us to strike for purposes of private retaliation and revenge, we are not to be avengers in our personal quarrels, we are to guard against taking the law into our own hands lest our passion should drift us outside the warm zone of the love of God.

It is the personal element in the resistance of wrong that our Lord forbids; but He would surely never arrest the soldier, policeman, or even the private citizen, from stopping, so far as possible, deeds of wrong and acts of criminal assault. When wrong has been done, as our Lord teaches us by His own behaviour, we may reprimand and remonstrate and appeal to the conscience and heart. When one of the officers of the court struck Jesus with his hand, Jesus answered him, "If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil, but if well, why smitest thou Me?" But there we must stop. We must not say in our heart, "I will be even with thee, and give thee as much as thou hast given me."

It is equally our duty, as it seems to me, to take measures to arrest and punish the wrongdoer. Supposing that a man has wronged you, and that you have good reason to believe that he is systematically wronging others; if you have an opportunity of having him punished, you are absolutely obliged, as it seems to me, to take such action against him as will make it impossible for him to pursue his career of depredation. If your lot should be cast in a mining-camp in the Far West, which was dominated by some swaggering ruffian, and he assaulted you, I do not think that you would be contravening the law of Christ if you were to give him so strong a handling that his power for evil would be arrested from that hour. It being clearly understood that you put out of your heart all private revenge, all personal malice, and are living in a land where it is impossible to bring the wrong-doer before judge or jury, you may be compelled to act in a judicial capacity, doing for society what society could not do through its legalized officers and methods.

The question next arises: Can we literally obey the Lord's injunction to give to every one that asks? Does God give to all who ask Him? Does He not often turn aside from the borrower? He knows what will hurt or help us; knows that to many an entreaty His kindest answer is a rebuff; knows that if He were to give us all we ask we should repent of having asked so soon as we awoke in the light of eternity. So when the drunkard or the drone asks me for money I stedfastly refuse. It is even our duty not to give money indiscriminately, and without full acquaintance with the applicant and his circumstances, for we may be giving him the means of forging more tightly the fetters by which he is bound to his sins. A piece of bread is the most we may bestow upon the mendicant, until we have some knowledge of his character, his mode of life, and his real intentions. If only Christian people would resist the impulse to give money to beggars of all kinds, and reserve themselves for the modest poor who suffer without making appeals, much evil and sorrow would be remedied!

What then does the Lord require of us? (1) Do not take the law into your own hands. In the old Mosaic legislation it was enacted that as a man had done, so it should be done to him. "An eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth"—"hand for hand, foot for foot, burning for burning, wound for wound, strife for strife" (Ex. xxi. 24, 25). But in the time of our Lord this had been interpreted as conferring on a man the right to retaliation and revenge, ignoring Lev. xix. 17, 18, which expressly forbade private infliction of punishment.

When we are wronged we must refer the wrong to the great organized society of which we are part. Society will lay its hand on the wrongdoer. The judge who sits on the bench is not an individual, but the embodiment of society, the representative of law and order, and if he condemns a fellow creature to penal servitude for life there is no kind of malice or vindictive feeling in his breast.

(2) Turn retaliation into redemption. When struck on the cheek the instant impulse of the natural man is to strike back on the cheek of the smiter. There should be a second blow. But the Master says if there be a second blow, let it fall on your other cheek. Instead of inflicting it, suffer a second blow, in the hope that you may effect your opponent's redemption. The first blow was of his malice, the second blow will be of your love, and this will set new looms at work within his heart, weaving the fabric of a new life. Thus the wrongs that men have done to God led Him to present the other cheek to them, when He sent them His only-begotten Son, who, when He was reviled, reviled not again, when He suffered, He threatened not, but committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously.

(3). Be large-hearted. "Freely ye have received, freely give." Do not be stingy and niggard in your behaviour towards men. You are obliged to yield the coat, give the cloak; you are compelled to go for one mile at least, now, out of sincere desire to serve the purposes of the commonwealth, go another. The law compels you to pay your debts, but if you have incurred them, and they are rightfully due, pay them without haggling. There are certain duties in the home which fall to our lot to be performed; do them with a smile; that is the second mile. The husband must give the needed money to his wife for household expenditure, let him do it without grudging; that is his second mile. The employé must render certain services to his employer. If he renders these with a grudging spirit, doing only what he is paid to do, not entering into the spirit of his work, or doing it to the utmost of his power, he is like an impressed labourer, carrying the messages against his will; but as soon as he does his duty with alacrity and eagerness, even staying overtime to finish a piece of necessary service, that is his second mile.

(4) The Master insists that we should cultivate an ungrudging, unstinting, and generous spirit. "God loveth a cheerful giver." Think of God in His incessant giving. Giving His sun and His rain; giving to the churl and the miser, the thankless and heartless, equally as to the loving and prayerful. That is to be our great model. Always giving love and help to this thankless and needy world, because so sure that as we give, we shall get; as we break our barley loaves and small fishes, our hands will be filled and filled again out of the storehouses of God. Freely ye have received, freely give; and in what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.

I want to add my testimony to the literal truth of these words. In my life I have found repeatedly that in proportion as I have given I have gotten, and that men have given into my bosom, according to heaven's own measure, pressed down, heaped up, and running over.

For all this we need to have a new baptism of love. The love of God must be poured into our hearts by the Holy Spirit, who is given unto us. We must learn to unite ourselves with our Father's redemptive purpose, looking at the wrong done to us, not so much from our standpoint but from that of the wrongdoer, with an infinite pity for all the poisonous passion which is filling his heart, and an infinite desire to deliver and save him. One thought for his welfare will thus overmaster all desire for our personal revenge, and we shall heap on his head the hot coals of our love, to melt his heart and save him from himself.

SUNDAY, September 20. Psalm cxxv.
The Song of the Steadfast Soul.

THE stability of those who trust in Jehovah (1-3) is described in two striking images: (1) They are like the glorious city of Jerusalem, seated on her mountain throne, and wedded to the mighty rocks, with which her walls are inextricably associated. O Rock of Ages, it is thus that we, the limpets of the ocean water, would derive permanence from union with Thee, clinging to Thee when storms sweep earth and heaven! (2) But this steadfastness would be impossible apart from the encircling defence of Jehovah's power. The mountain city was encircled by mountains. Babylon needed to have her mighty walls, erected with laborious care, which were not needed for the holy city of the Tabernacles of the Most High. So God is round His own. They have no walls of defence, such as are erected by wealth, prestige, and power; but they are perfectly safe, since Jehovah is a wall of fire round about (Zech. ii. 4, 5).

It would seem that the little band of returned exiles were at this moment suffering from the oppression of their foes, which was tempting them to think that righteousness and faith were alike useless, and that it was of no good to be good. But the Psalmist, with steadfast faith, knew that the hand of oppression could not rest on them one moment too long. When the pressure was no longer bearable, God would stay it.

4, 5. The righteous judgment of God should yet be made manifest—good to the good, retribution to the wayward and wicked, and peace to Israel. Never let go your faith that out of the present medley in this sad world God will bring righteousness and peace. There is a God that judgeth and avengeth in the earth.

MONDAY, September 21. Psalm cxxvi.
A Psalm of Restoration.

1-3. It has begun. We seem to hear the ringing laughter, the snatches of song and psalm with which the captive Jews received the news of their liberation from seventy years of exile. Tears and laughter mingled like April weather. It seemed as if they were in a dream, and they dreaded to awake to find that they were captives still. As they marched back from bondage to their fatherland, their story extorted from surrounding nations the acknowledgment that God had done great things for them.

We have had moments like this. The physician has assured us that some beloved life was out of danger. The post has brought the letter with the remittance which has freed us from all anxiety. The sin which had burdened us to the ground is seen no more, because Jesus has put it away for ever. We had lain in Peter's prison, but the angel has led us forth into liberty, and we have followed him, as in a dream. Then joy, inexpressible joy, puts laughter into our faces, and songs into our hearts.

4-6. May it be consummated. Difficulties were not all at an end. Only a tiny streamlet of exiles had returned, and as yet the land was desolate, like the dry valleys of the Southern desert. The Psalmist longed to see a great rush of returning exiles, like the winter torrents that filled those desert valleys with a sudden carpeting of green. So he prays, but he also foretells what is at hand. Let them persevere with their toils, building their city walls, organizing the ruined state, and sowing their fields; the harvest of joy would compensate them for all.

The words have wide significance. No good seed, sown with tears, can ever be lost. The sowers shall be reapers here and hereafter. God is not unrighteous to forget thy work of faith and labour of love. Thou shalt come again, wife, mother, minister, missionary, bringing thy sheaves, rejoicing over the very fields that now seem hopelessly sterile.

TUESDAY, September 22. Psalm cxxvii.
The Safety of God's Beloved.

1-2. All well-being is due to God's care. All effort without that is vain. Men may toil on house-building, but the walls will not rise unless He build with them; they may watch their city walls, but the enemy will carry them by assault or stratagem unless God watch with them. The labour of the labouring man, early and late, will effect nothing, unless He bless it; and if He bless, all good will come to His beloved, amid their unconscious slumbers.

How true this is! You who are building structures of any kind—sermons, businesses, societies; you who are striving to hold your own against opposition and hatred; you who labour hard for bread: remember that your most strenuous effort will be abortive, apart from God; but when your heart is right with Him, He will work for you whilst you sleep, not the sleep of indolence, but of quiet trust.

The old sweet rendering, "He giveth His beloved sleep," must be abandoned. But to me the proposed rendering, "He giveth to His beloved in sleep," is quite as helpful and beautiful. Dear tired Christian, do not sit up late, but go to your couch, leaving your sorrow and anxiety with God. He will work through those hours for you, and in the morning give you more than your labour could have won.

3-5. The Psalmist mentions a numerous family of stalwart sons as one of God's best gifts. The gate was the place of public resort and judgment; and if there the father were assailed, he with his sons around him might well hold his own. Happy are they, too, who have spiritual children, that shall welcome them at the gate of the New Jerusalem! But they, too, are God's gift and reward, given to his beloved.

WEDNESDAY, September 23. Psalm cxxviii.
The Psalm of the Home.

In the last Psalm we had a picture of the good man in the gate of public concourse surrounded by his children; here we have him in his home.

1-4. A Picture of Family Life in its earlier stages. The basis of a happy home is the fear of the Lord and a consistent walk in His ways. The devout man is also diligent in labour, and on such toil God's blessing rests. When he returns from his contact with the world, the good man finds his loving wife in the inner chambers of the house waiting to welcome him, and the children gather to the evening meal like young olive plants around the table.

What a beautiful picture of domestic happiness! Rich, indeed, is the country which has many homes like this. Nothing makes a nation so prosperous or impregnable as its family life. Let men talk as they may of the unhappiness of married life, and magnify the pleasures of a lax morality. Nothing can ever surpass the perfect bliss of the home-life which is based on the Gospel of Christ. We do not realise how many such homes there are, because their bliss is too still and deep to excite notice.

5, 6. A Picture of Family Life in its later stages. The father has become the grandfather. The toils of his earlier years are finished. He can now look on whilst Jerusalem prospers, and children are born to his children. It is not, however, enough for him that his own life lies in the evening-glow; his heart is ever welling up with the one eager petition, that peace may rest upon Israel.

THURSDAY, September 24. Psalm cxxix.
The Cry of the Oppressed.

1-4. Israel's youth lay back in Egyptian bondage. From then and onward, heavy oppressions have been her lot. Cruel taskmasters have laid the whip on the bare back, scoring long wounds like the furrows which the husbandman draws across a field. But God has not forsaken or forgotten. These cruel foes have not prevailed, for God has cut the cord with which they had bound the chosen race. Remember that for your comfort. It may take long to untie a cord, but it does not take a moment to cut it, and God can cut the cord of the wicked at any moment, when your trouble has fulfilled His intention.

5-8. The Psalmist turns to another image—that of the grass which may grow on the flat clay house-tops of the Oriental. It grows up quickly, but withers as soon; and no harvest ever results. "The mower fills not his hand, nor the sheaf-binder his bosom." There is no cheery interchange of goodwill between the passers-by and the reapers, because there is no reaping. So those who hate the people of God will reap no result from their pains. When they expect a harvest of success, there will be nothing to show. What happy trust breathes through all these Psalms; let us open our souls to its glad inspiration, and we have the greater reason who have been brought nigh to God by the blood of the cross. "How shall He not with Him also freely give us all things!"

FRIDAY, September 25. Psalm cxxx.
A Psalm of Ascent.

1-2. The Depths. Have you known those depths? The depths of conviction for sin, when you have envied, as Bunyan did, the trees and bushes and dumb creatures of nature, because they have never sinned? Ah, there are deep and sad experiences, when we seem sunk in a pit where there is no standing, and must perish unless God let down to us a ladder of hope by which we may climb to the top of the beetling crags. In those depths David lay, when he wrote the fifty-first Psalm, and Peter, when he went out and wept bitterly.

3-4. Forgiveness. At first it seems as though God might remember those sins for ever which have thrust the soul into despair; but, if so, the Psalmist knows there can be no hope. But the suggestion of this fear is met by the glad consciousness that where sin has abounded grace has much more abounded, and that full forgiveness has been procured. We know what the Psalmist never realized, how much that forgiveness cost; and with double gratitude we may reiterate his words. Such thoughts of God's love produce a godly fear.

5, 6. Waiting and Watching. The forgiven soul waits for ever fresh favours from the dear hand that has redeemed it. Not more eagerly do the watchers in the sick-chamber, or the warders on the castle-roof, look for and herald the flush that creeps up into the sky announcing the dawn. O God! give us this eagerness for Thee!

7, 8. Redemption. It is not enough to be forgiven; we long to be redeemed from the love and power of sin. This also is secured for us by the cross of Christ, who redeemed us from all iniquity that we might serve Him without fear, in holiness and righteousness all our days.

SATURDAY, September 26. Psalm cxxxi.
The Song of the Child-Heart.

We are all troubled and tempted by the haughtiness of our inward pride; our eyes are fixed on high ambitions, and positions above us; and we are prone to meddle in great things and mysteries beyond our reach. The Psalmist had gone through all these experiences, but they no longer allured him. He had shaken off his proud and vainglorious moods, and mastered his disturbing passions. The struggle had been hard, and the outcry bitter—as when a babe is weaned from its mother. It feels for the warm breast, and is repelled, and its little heart seems as though it would break. But when the struggle is over, the babe lies calm and still in the mother's arms, and finds that life is richer and fuller than it could have been, had not the process of weaning been endured.

Have you ever been weaned from your proud self-reliance, your independence, your determination to scale every height and read the heart of every mystery? If not, you never will reach the calm and quiet of the soul that forsakes the breast of its own consolation, and the pleasure of its own way, to lie back on the bosom of God, content with His way and will, His choice, His wise arrangement and plan. Learn the meaning of the Cross. Accustom yourself to the silence of Christ's grave. Hope not in yourself, but in Jehovah. Quiet and hush your passionate desires to rest, and become meek, lowly, and childlike, through receiving the childlike nature of your Lord.

Other Lands.

The Scriptures for Italy.

By Rev. J. CAMPBELL WALL (Rome).

I AM asked for my personal opinion of the edition of the Gospels and Acts, by the Society of St. Jerome. I have, from the moment of its first appearance, felt a great interest in this attempt at a Roman Catholic Bible Society, and regard it as one of the greatest triumphs achieved by Protestant work in Italy. That the Word of God should in any form be printed and circulated by Romanists, ought, surely, to rejoice all those who believe in its inherent powers of conviction and justification. It was that Word which enlightened the hearts of Savonarola and Luther, even while they still believed in Papal Supremacy and Roman traditions. It is that Word which will alone find its way into many lives which are to-day groping blindly among prejudices and conscientious scruples, derived from their education and necessary environment. Who then can fail to see the importance and value of the latest concession which Protestant missions have wrested from the hands of the Pope?

We may, indeed, regret that the concession has come so late; that it is still conditioned by such limitations as will obviously minimise its spiritual results; that the translators have not hesitated to vary the sense in many passages by an unwarranted freedom in the handling of their text; that the notes are often most artificial; that the preface and appendix are full of errors; but as to the fact of the Society of St. Jerome having issued a popular edition of the Gospels and Acts, we can only recognise it and commend it.

WHAT PROTESTANTS SHOULD DO.

The approval of Evangelical Christians ought, however, to be carefully guarded by their fidelity to Protestant principles. This edition may be useful as the expression of Catholic progress; we may consider it the best which a Catholic can, at present, either give or receive in his church; we must not, therefore, renounce the liberty, or betray the trust which has been given to us as Protestant believers. It may be a lamentable necessity for Rome to issue the Word of God in such a form as would excite the ridicule of any Greek scholar, or the disgust of any Protestant communion; this necessity may, however, appeal to our pity, and we may humbly hope that the intellectual and moral progress of Christendom will do much to remove it.

We are not, however, in a position to co-operate with Rome in its efforts, nor ought we to accept its concessions except under solemn protest. If our Bible Society were for a moment to think that its obligations to Italy had, in any measure, been limited by the existence of the Society of St. Jerome, it would become responsible for the circulation of corrupted Scriptures; and would probably find that, by the withdrawal of its agents, it had involuntarily given an opportunity to the Vatican for the cessation of its Bible work. Personally, I would refuse to distribute a single copy of the present issue of the Gospels and Acts until I had been convinced that the Protestant version would not be accepted or read, and all my experience goes to show that such cases are extremely rare. Only among the clergy and religious orders have I found it necessary to use a Catholic version, and this rather to convince them that our own was, to all purposes, identical with that of which their Church has approved.

IMPORTANT PRINCIPLES.

The principle of "a crust being better than no bread" is that which I should apply to the new version; to that extent I can appreciate it; beyond that I must disallow its usefulness. To-day the Church of Rome is making numerous concessions, and many will think that the promise of reform is at hand. To those, however, who have discovered the essential character of the Papacy, such concessions afford no ground of hope. The best of Roman Catholics, once seated upon the Papal throne, would be as helpless in the promotion of spiritual Christianity as any of his predecessors. Should a new Reformation be at hand, it will come, not from the College of Cardinals, nor from any of the Roman priesthood, but from the independent thinkers who at present are fighting the battles of the people, and may some day lead them to religious freedom, with a personal faith in the Word of God.

It would be easy for me to discuss the arguments advanced in favour of or against the new version (curiously enough it is not claimed to be a version from the original texts) or to point out many peculiarities in the preface and notes; but this would probably occupy more space than can be afforded for the subject. I prefer, therefore, to present the case thus:—Can we approve of a modern version of Scripture which reveals such disregard of the original as even to alter the Lord's Prayer? Is it conceivable that Mariolatry and Papal Supremacy can be honestly stated to be derived from the Gospels and Acts? Does the authority of Scripture receive the reverence due to it when it is manifestly placed on the same level with tradition and the teaching of a Pope? And, finally, shall we approve of a society which places in the hands of the people only the historical books of the New Testament—viz., the Gospels and Acts, making no provision for the circulation of the great Epistles of St. Paul and the other inspired books of the New Testament?

INTERESTING FACTS.

I would remind my readers that this is not the first time that Rome has issued similar versions; the novelty is limited very much to the nominal price of this edition. Hitherto all attempts of this kind have been manifest failures, in so far that no sooner was the edition either sold or distributed, than it was allowed to be forgotten. In this case also it has been proved that some, whose names appear on the list of representatives among the leading clergy, neither possess copies of the new version, nor have any knowledge of the same. With two exceptions I have not found in any of the towns or villages I have visited any evidence of the priests having even called attention to the book; while these exceptions were accounted for by the local activities of Protestant colporteur-evangelists.

Under existing conditions, I have no hesitation in affirming that many parish priests would openly oppose the work proposed by the Society of St. Jerome, while the vast majority of the Roman clergy will be absolutely indifferent to its success. As to statistics of circulation, the total issue of 60,000 copies, neither proves success nor failure. We need to know how many of these have been sold to the public; how many have been distributed among the clergy; how many have been ordered by the energetic Roman Catholic societies working among Italians in North America. I may add that a considerable number of those sold will be accounted for by the interest taken in this movement among Protestant Christians, as also by the effort made by these to introduce this version among bigoted Catholics.

Seamen at Barcelona.—The Barcelona Seamen's Institute continues to serve a useful purpose in this centre which is the rendezvous of vessels of many nationalities. The eleventh annual report shows that the attendance at the institute and mission services has been well maintained. After three years diligent service at this mission station, Mr. C. H. Rowntree returned to England in May of last year, and although it was some nine months before the committee were able to appoint another lay reader to fill the vacancy, they are satisfied that they have now secured in Mr. F. Verralls an earnest and devoted worker, who will have the highest welfare of seamen at heart. It is hoped that in addition to the directly spiritual work of the Institute it will be found possible to arrange educational and social gatherings which will be to the advantage of residents and seafaring visitors. The address of the Institute is, Calle Christina, 8, Barcelona.

Notes from Japan.

WHEN it was learned that there was to be a National Exhibition at Osaka from March 1 to the end of July of this year, the missionaries of Osaka and vicinity met and arranged that daily services should be held at a suitable place which was secured for that purpose immediately in front of the main entrance. The missions were divided into five groups, and each of these in succession took the charge of these meetings. By this means the expense and labour were divided, and a strong body of workers secured for all the services.

The result has been very gratifying. From the first there has been a continuous attendance of eager listeners, and the total number was found by actual count to have been 246,665. Of this number 16,222 gave their names and addresses as inquirers. How many of these will eventually be brought into the Kingdom, it is impossible to tell, but already the fruit of the seed thus sown is being seen in many and widely extended parts of the country.

A Y.M.C.A. CONFERENCE.

The fifteenth session of the Y.M.C.A. Summer Conference was held at Arima. The enrolment in the Japanese section was 182, which was an encouraging increase over that of the year before. Most of these were students, but there were also twenty-five delegates from City Associations and thirty pastors.

The programme consisted of addresses of a constructive character, and dealing with theological and philosophical questions that were especially helpful to the listeners. Special addresses were given for the promotion of the spiritual life, which probably constituted the most valuable part of the programme.

The English-speaking section of the Conference was begun two years ago with an attendance of eighteen. Last year there were forty, and this year sixty present. Of this number five are secretaries sent out from the United States, and located at different strategic points—three in Tokyo, one in Osaka, and one in Kyoto. They are all able and practical men who have had previous experience in the work, and are well fitted for their positions. In addition, thirteen men are employed in the Government schools who were selected by representatives of the Y.M.C.A. in the United States. These are young men of unusual culture and ability, and because of their superiority over ordinary teachers, as well as their devotion to their work, there is a demand for additions to their number, and two others were sent for by cablegram during the meeting.

These teachers being earnest Christians, are not only teaching English, but using opportunities afforded for Scriptural instruction, though such teaching is, of course, gratuitous, and in addition to their ordinary work. Twenty-five Bible classes were reported, with an attendance of about 300, the work of two absent teachers being unreported.

WISE ARRANGEMENTS.

A good number of missionaries were present, among them being several who had been active in Y.M.C.A. work at home. Some of them are also engaged in teaching. At the former conferences there was an element of so-called "Liberal Christianity" which detracted from the power and value of the meetings. But this year the control has been in wise and conservative hands, with the result that sessions were practical, spiritual, and helpful. This elimination of destructive teaching has been shown to be important. Theories that are being tolerated in the homeland are ruinous to an alarming extent, when introduced into a land where Christianity is only beginning to be established.

Much interest is already being felt in the coming of the World's Student Conference to Japan in 1904. Efforts are being made to secure the attendance of men of note who will give character to the gathering and render it popular with the Japanese. Such a meeting will be most timely at this stage of Christian development. That it may be very helpful we ask the prayers of God's people in all lands.

Pioneering in South America

By EMILIO OLSSON.

THERE is no part of the world in greater need of evangelization than South America. Millions of Indians still inhabit that continent who have never yet heard the story of the Cross. Possibly there are hundreds of tribes in the heart of South America whose names are almost unknown to the world; I know those of forty-two different tribes. How sad to think of the spiritual need of that dark land with a population of possibly 30,000,000, almost unevangelized at the beginning of the twentieth century.

During the past twenty years I have travelled 50,000 miles, and my wanderings, through which the Lord has mercifully brought me, have by His grace been turned to good service. Often have I been in perils, twice I suffered shipwreck, once I had to swim for my life, and often my lot was cast among evil men. Through many hardships and almost unendurable dangers I can testify to the faithfulness and keeping power of Jesus Christ my Saviour. Had I not realized His presence when travelling through the forests of South America, surrounded by savage tribes and wild beasts, and where deadly serpents hung overhead and crawled under foot, away from home, friends, and civilization, I would have died in despair; but He who promised, "Lo, I am with you alway," was my Guide and Protector.

By God's help I have been enabled to circulate

OVER 20,000 COPIES OF SCRIPTURE

in the Neglected Continent, and I have travelled 3,000 miles on mules and on horseback, always carrying my precious load of Bibles. To men of 242 different nationalities and tribes I have presented the Word of God, and I have reached with the Gospel over 1,000,000 souls. Six times have I crossed the great Andes, and this is one of the many places where hardly a white man has ever been before. I travelled 3,000 miles through the interior without meeting a single Protestant missionary. Wild, savage tribes, roaming about through the great forests like wild beasts unclad, untaught, uncared for, speaking a Babel of strange tongues, and practising, in pathetic ignorance, cruel and revolting customs—are waiting for something better than they know. Preaching through an interpreter among the Chiquitanos, I said: "The Bible is the Word of God." Some wanted to kiss the Book and kiss my hand. A man of seventy years said: "Blessed be God for the good news; this is

THE FIRST TIME I EVER HEARD IT IN MY LIFE."

Slavery is carried on in certain parts in the interior. Men and women are bought and sold like cattle, and very little of it is known to the civilized world. Thousands upon thousands are waiting for the light, but where are the missionaries who are willing to carry their lives in their hands, penetrate into the very darkest parts of the hidden forest, and seek to save those lost tribes?

Two Bibles were bought by two young men. One fell into the hands of a Roman Catholic priest, who contemptuously burned it. The other Bible was faithfully studied, and the heart of the young man, the owner, was touched by the Saviour. He came to the mission meetings and was finally converted. His wife was converted from reading the same Bible. Two years later I met this same man at a religious meeting, who reminded me of the sale of the Bible—his face radiant with the joy of heaven, as he presented me to half-a-dozen people who had become converted by the reading of that same Bible. The Bible in question, from constant use, appeared as if twenty years old, although only two years had elapsed since its sale. I think the future possibilities of South America as a mission field are very great. My great aim on my return to South America is to win souls for Christ, and also to be able, by industrial missions, to give employment to our native converts.

Revival Work in North India.

MR. REGINALD STUDD—one of the three brothers brought to the Lord on the visit of Mr. Moody to London years ago—has paid a second visit to India on a special mission in the Lord's work. After visiting Ceylon and several large stations in North India with good results, he was led to Mussoorie, where he has had meetings for six weeks, and almost every evening he has drawn crowded meetings.

His earnestness and eloquence have caused quite a revival here, so much so that many who never frequented places of worship before, have flocked to hear the Word of God—among them a number of Roman Catholics. Best of all, there have been conversions at almost every meeting, and when Mr. Studd thought of going away to other stations, petitions came from every side begging him to stay on, which he has resolved to do, and continue to carry on the mission which has proved so successful. A chaplain of the Church of England invited him to preach in his church, when a great crowd came to hear the missioner, with good results. We all rejoice that the Lord has been pleased to signally bless the labours of our dear brother, and hope greater showers of grace will still come to irrigate the thirsty soil, in stirring up the people of God and converting sinners.

We shall be glad to welcome other visitors of the same spirit as Mr. Studd from the homeland, to help in the Lord's work in India.

Revival in Indian Villages.

WHILE sojourning for a time in this country in order to arouse interest in the Dravidian Mission, Mr. S. Arumugam (director) has received an interesting letter from his helper at Nellore, South India, Mr. S. Eloin Aziz.

In the course of this communication, Mr. Aziz says:—"God has been working wonderfully in our midst. There are signs of revival and turning to the Lord. There has been general progress in the village work, as well as in the schools. Several new villages are added to our list, with adherents or baptized Christians.

"Pollapondi, Sonkjerla, and Allur welcomed us, and I have opened schools at Pollapondi and Allur, which promise to become considerable centres of work. We had a baptismal service, attended by people from all three villages. Especially encouraging is the work at Pollapondi, where I baptized seventeen persons, and where a meeting, which was attended by the whole village, continued until midnight. Ten more people have since come from the same place for baptism, with the news that the whole village is getting ready to come over to the Lord's side, and hand over their idol-temple (which is being built) to us with a request to build instead a school house and place of worship. Pray for this village. I have placed a teacher there. I have news from another village where seven caste families are ready to become Christians. We believe God has a great future for the mission in the Telugu country. It is evident that before the end of the year we shall have a community of a thousand people to care for. To consolidate and strengthen the work is no easy thing."

Mr. Arumugam will be glad of opportunities to speak of the work. His London address is 15, Vicarage Road, Camberwell, S.E.

A French Reformer's Memorial.—During recent years the Christian community at Gap, a small town in Dauphiny, has increased to some 200 members, who have only the hall of an old shop in which to worship. An effort is being made to build a church suitable to the needs of the Protestant inhabitants. The movement is finding favour with Christians in all parts of France and Switzerland, and it is felt that many in the United Kingdom would like to share in the erection of this memorial to the brave French reformer, William Farel, who was born at Gap, and in later years frequently preached there. A plot of ground suitable for the memorial chapel has been secured. Rev. J. Gosset-Tanner, 54, Talbot Road, Bayswater, will be pleased to give further particulars of the enterprise.

A Plea for Eastern Girls.

HAVING spent over four years in Ceylon, acquiring the native languages, and helping my father, Rev. John G. Garrett, Church Missionary Society, I became acquainted with native girls belonging to four nationalities, who usually do not speak or eat together, and who, by our English reserve and sad want of practical loving Christianity, are becoming increasingly dissatisfied, and pining for that Christian liberty of English girls which they read and hear of, but alas, have so little experienced. To benefit large numbers of such girls living in Ceylon, some ladies in Kandy were led to start, five years ago, a branch of our World-Wide Young Women's Christian Association. Of this I have acted as hon. secretary.

Immense difficulties faced us at the start; but these have in a great measure been overcome. A pressing difficulty, however, still remains—how to acquire a permanent room or hall sufficiently secluded and otherwise suited to satisfy the wishes of the high-class Eastern parents. At last the Government has recognized our want, and has offered to grant a site on the condition that £300 be spent on the building. We have succeeded in collecting £150, and £150 more must immediately be obtained, otherwise we may lose the site.

Our great motive in persevering, in spite of all difficulties, has been the conviction that if only a missionary spirit were awakened among these girls, they will become evangelizers, living in their own country and generation, using its languages, customs, and modes of living, and thus co-operating with us in a way that nothing else would seem able to effect.

Filipinos asking for Bibles.

IN a hopeful letter regarding the spiritual condition of the Philippines, Mrs. E. White Jansen (Cebu, Isla de Cebu) writes:—

"God bless you much in your service to Him through your paper, which seems like the voice of the Lord of the harvest, telling of white fields, and the nearing gathering in of their workers to meet the great King.

"So great is our need of the Scriptures in the Philippines that we are impelled to ask you to place the matter before your readers. One convert after another comes to us saying: 'I have given away my Bible, or my Testament. The man or the woman to whom I told the Gospel was so eager to read the Bible that I could not keep mine, but felt I had to give it to them.' When we go to a neighbouring island the captain and sailors, finding who we are, ask us to give them the Scriptures. Returning from a recent trip to Cebu, as we left the ship and were being rowed ashore, we could hear the captain's voice follow us over the water, saying: 'Do not forget to send me the Bible.'

"Pleas reach us from many other of the southern islands. My husband, with two native evangelists, is now taking the message of the Gospel to one of these, from which a deputation of the leading men was sent. During his absence another has come saying that the people of an island are desirous of hearing the truth. The Gospels only increase these seeking Filipinos' craving for more of the Scriptures. I find that underlined Testaments are very greatly used by the Holy Spirit, and give confidence to seekers as they see the way marked out by some others who have sought and found it."

Gifts will be expended on the Spanish Bibles and Testaments published by the British and Foreign Bible Society.

A Gospel Minister's Prayer.—Enable me, O Lord, to preach Thy Word—Purely, without mixture; Meekly, without malevolence; Intrepidly, without fear; Honestly, without disguise; Fully, without reserve; and Practically, by giving all diligence to order every part of my conduct as becometh the Gospel of Christ.—Amen.—From Dr. Rippon's Baptist Register, 1802.

Indoors and Out.

MR. CHARLES COOK'S WORK IN LONDON.

THE work of Mr. Charles Cook among the masses of the Metropolis is in several respects a "record" one. For thirty-two years this well-known evangelist has preached in the open air, all that time having a stand in "the people's forum" of Hyde Park. Again, for twenty-eight years he has conducted services in a London theatre, delivering the Gospel message to countless thousands who would not otherwise have heard its warning words, or have come under its saving influence.

In the work of organization, and in the administration of great undertakings, Mr. Cook has done wonders; but his exertions have gone beyond the mere allocating of duties to others. He has taken the platform himself, and not only has he maintained his own West London mission in vigorous operation, but he has accepted calls to preach the Gospel in other directions, which at times have involved travel in far distant lands.

Mr. Cook calls Hyde Park the Cosmopolitan Cathedral, and in view of the character of the congregations that gather there the designation is certainly not without point. He recently stated that at least twenty-nine nationalities were represented by the converts of thirty-two years. In a booklet describing his work, he says:—

On one Sunday evening in 1902, four Swedes, three Frenchmen, and a Spaniard, spoke to us voluntarily at the close of the service, seeking counsel and help; and more recently, among those who followed on to the Hall were two Germans and a Russian. One of each of these different foreigners confessed Christ that night, and have attended the meetings regularly since.

The Hyde Park Hall, close to the Marble Arch, is an admirable rallying place for the open-air workers, and a home for a number of additional efforts. What with exertions indoors and out one would think that Mr. Cook's hands were full; but no—along with these endeavours he has held Gospel meetings in the Metropolitan Theatre. These have been attended with great blessing, and, as already intimated, they are about to enter upon their twenty-ninth year.

SUNDAY EVENING IN THE METROPOLITAN THEATRE.

Mr. Cook tells many stories of conversion on the part of men and women who have heard the Word of God in the Park and the Theatre. Here are a few:—

A lady, crossing the Park with an engagement for a provincial theatre in her pocket, was awakened and converted. She threw up the profession of acting, joined the choir, and continued in the work for some years, till her marriage.

A comedian entered the Theatre, was convicted of sin and converted; he became an evangelist, and has preached in England and America for many years, and is occupying a London pulpit during the present month.

An infidel, named Evans, was saved in the Park, and soon afterwards went to work as missionary in Northampton. He was marvellously used of God in that stronghold of infidelity

A young man, crossing the Park, heard the Word and was converted. He became the town missionary of Epsom, and is now missionary to the telegraph messengers of London.

Mr. Webb, the late manager of the Parcel Delivery Company, recently testified at the Theatre. He said, "My wife and I, my three daughters and their husbands, were all converted either here in the Theatre or Hyde Park Hall."

A schoolmaster, of Hanover Church Schools, was converted under Mr. Cook in the Park some years ago. Later on, he became his son-in-law, and now occasionally takes his place on the platform.

Another principal worker was blessed through the choir singing "Go and find the wanderer," in the Park. Through being unable to act dishonourably in business, he had to leave his situation, and is now a valued employé of Mr. William Whiteley, to whom he was recommended by Mr. Cook. His family have also been brought to Christ.

All Mr. Cook's family have also been brought in, and the partners of those who are married have confessed Christ in the work.

Mr. J. B. Wookey, the evangelist, recently wrote: "It is nearly a quarter of a century ago—in dark, dismal days, when I was living without God, in wilful, deliberate sin, in days when it would never have dawned on my mind to enter any place of worship—that I remember standing on the outskirts of the crowd listening to your workers rendering the beautiful and never-to-be-forgotten words: 'Far, far away, like bells at evening pealing.' After this I heard the choir singing many times, but for some reasons which I cannot explain, could never venture into your Hall. Notwithstanding this, the gracious invitation contained in the singing of the hymns never left me, and some time after, in God's goodness, I found peace."

This work of Mr. Cook's is one that cannot but command our warm sympathy and earnest prayers. The accompanying block gives some idea of how the people crowd into the Theatre. There they hear the Word of God, and are impressed for good by the hearty praises of His people. May the work go on and prosper! Through death and other causes our friend has lost several helpers of late. If he consulted his own ease, he might choose the present moment as a convenient one in which to seek a change of ministry. But evidently God has placed him in his present sphere, and given him the ear of the non-church-going masses of Paddington and Marylebone.

The people willingly listen to Mr. Cook, and many have done so to their present uplifting and their everlasting salvation. It would be a disaster if, through the want of a little money to cover rent charges, the Theatre work should have to be given up. This assuredly is not a time in which the Gospel of God should, in any quarter, retire from the contest with sin and worldliness. We commend our friend and his noble work—in the Park, the Hall, and the Theatre—to the practical sympathy of earnest Christian people, and sincerely hope that for some years yet to come all these departments of labour (to carry on which about £1,000 a year is needed) will be maintained with ever-increasing energy and with abounding blessing from God. Copies of a booklet descriptive of the work, and entitled, "The Cosmopolitan Cathedral," may be had by addressing Mr. Cook, 11, Walpole Gardens, Chiswick, W.

A Word of Cheer.

A LITTLE while since I noticed in The Christian a letter from Mrs. Wilkes, referring to her work for young women, and telling how God has cheered her heart at eventide by the sight of many for whom she has laboured giving happy proof of true salvation. I rejoice with her, and hope that her later appeal has brought her needed supplies for going on. I am quite sure such work is well worth doing; love's labour is not lost when spent for Him who gave His life for us!

I thank God that He allowed me to spend thirty-two years of my life gathering in and caring for orphan girls, and should like to say to His praise that the fruit is abiding, as many saved and useful lives testify to-day. Recently I heard from one brought in many years ago. Her letter says:—"I cannot thank you and Miss Parsons enough for all your kindness, and the way you brought me up. I often think over those happy young days, and would like them back again—not but that I am very happy now, for I have a very steady and good husband," &c.

Another came up from Dorset on holiday to see me the other day. She is a true Christian and valued servant, having kept one situation nineteen years! Another, having also been several years in her place, referring in a letter to her knowledge of salvation, asks:—"Can you tell me where M. is? I should like to tell her how happy I am, and why I am so happy."

These and many more proofs of the reality of the work have been cheering me when no longer able to labour; and I commend to those dear workers still in the heat of the day the blessed assurance that the seed may be sown with tears, but surely "We shall come with rejoicing, bringing our sheaves with us."

Walthamstow. M. Parsons.

A Bermondsey Mission Centre. — The worthy traditions of Stephen-the-Yeoman Ragged School and Mission are being fully maintained, and each succeeding year finds the institution making progress. The efforts which are made on the Sabbath comprise services for adults, as well as the Sunday-school. There has been a considerable increase in attendance at the latter during the year, and the building is crowded every Lord's Day. An attempt to grapple with the evils of intemperance so common among the inhabitants of the neighbourhood has been attended with encouraging results, while a pleasing feature of the Band of Hope is the unusual number of elder scholars who attend. The Day School has again done well. A prayer-meeting for the scholars is conducted weekly, and each Wednesday Mr. Witterick (city missionary) gives a short Biblical address. In the winter months over three thousand free breakfasts were given to the children. Several other branches of Christian and philanthropic work are carried on. The general secretary is Mr. H. J. Gough, 23, Clovelly Road, Ealing, W.

Soul-Winning, Afloat and Ashore.

THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.

IT is now nearly seventy years ago since a young clergyman, Rev. Dr. Ashley, walking with his little son along the cliffs which skirt the Bristol Channel, was led by a remark of the child to meditate upon the spiritual needs of seamen. Dr. Ashley had just received an offer of a rich living. He was an earnest preacher and a rising man, but the thought of the lonely souls on lighthouses, and of neglected sailors at outer anchorages, led him to decline the offer and make the spiritual care of seamen in the roadsteads of the Bristol Channel his life work.

Some years later that graphic writer of sea stories, Mr. W. H. G. Kingston, was influenced by similar thoughts and aims. His dealings with sailors led him to consider seriously what was being done for their spiritual welfare. From the fact that ships and harbours were "extra-parochial," and that in large ports the adjacent parishes were usually poor and very populous, he found that it was nobody's business in the Church of England to look after the crews, either afloat or ashore; and that if anything were to be done for these strangers of the sea, it must be by a special agency. Full of these thoughts, Mr. Kingston gathered a body of friends together, and, after much prayer and consideration, it was resolved, in the year 1856, to found a Society, which should send chaplains and Scripture-readers, provided with mission-vessels and boats, to work among sailors around our coasts and abroad. The Society's work was afterwards united with that already begun by Dr. Ashley in the Bristol Channel, and was thenceforth named "Missions to Seamen."

LAWS FOR "LAND-SHARKS."

An earnest interest was manifested in all that affected the welfare of those who "go down to the sea in ships." Not only were vessels visited and services and Bible-readings conducted on board, but legislation was initiated and supported, by which the sailor was protected from the "land-sharks" then swarming in British ports, who had hitherto been free to make him their prey. Soon after the Society had begun its work afloat, the need was sorely felt of some place in which sea-going men could spend their spare time when on shore, and where their friend, the chaplain or Scripture-reader, could meet and hold converse with them. Reading-rooms were therefore started, which have developed into the spacious and comfortable Institutes that are now to be found near the shipping offices in many ports. The usual plan of these buildings is to have a large reading and recreation-room on the ground floor, where seamen can wait to be hired or shipped, with a mission church for daily use above it.

PUBLICANS RENOUNCE THEIR TRADE.

The good done by these Institutes as great centres of religious influence is incalculable. A Tyneside merchant wrote of the work at South Shields:—"It is like another part of the world altogether; it is so long since we saw a fight, I cannot name the month when there was one."

At Bristol there were formerly forty-nine public-houses frequented by sailors. But from one cause and another, since a comfortable Institute with Mission Church were built, twenty-two of these houses are now closed; and not only so, but twelve of the publicans themselves became worshippers and communicants in the seamen's church, and renounced the trade.

Steadily the work grew, year by year. Chaplains and missioners were appointed at posts established along the English coast; nor were foreign sailors neglected, for many thousand copies of the Holy Scriptures in thirty-three languages were sold to them while in British harbours.

Looking back over the life-time of the Missions to Seamen, it is gratefully recorded by those who have the responsibility of direction that the Society has the services of chaplains and readers who are men of great earnestness, of personal devotion, and of a truly sympathetic spirit, realizing their high and blessed mission, and striving to do the work entrusted to their care, as in the presence of the Master Himself. The Mission staff comprises three experienced superintendents, having the spiritual charge of the fifty-five seaports at home, and twenty abroad, occupied for God by these missions, supervising fifty-three chaplains, and many Scripture-readers and other helpers, who are ministering amongst the crews afloat and when on shore. This spiritual agency is aided by twenty-five engineers and boatmen, and fifty-six Institute-keepers, &c.; and is supplied with thirteen steam and eight sailing mission vessels, together with forty-eight mission boats, to enable them to carry the ministrations of the Gospel all the year round to crews of ships, fishing vessels, barges, and lightships, and to the isolated inhabitants of remote lighthouses, islets, deep-water forts, and coastguard stations; while there are 108 seamen's churches and institutes for the special use of sea-going men when ashore.

A HOST OF HELPERS.

On board ship, too, there are not a few volunteer helpers who undertake to conduct worship, care for the sick and the lads, and help to promote godly living among their shipmates. Last year in all no fewer than 8,946 services and Bible-readings, with 93,568 attendances of seamen, were conducted with crews afloat by chaplains and readers, besides those held by the volunteer mission helpers at sea, and the aggregate of visits paid to ships at anchor or in dock was 139,000. This taking the Gospel to the sailor, on his own element, has proved an untold blessing, both in sanctifying his floating home by prayer, and practically illustrating the possibility of united worship on board. Moreover, the whole crew, whatever their moral and religious standing may be, are thus reached in the quiet roadstead, and, whether they will hear or not, their consciences tell them that in their midst something is going on towards God, in which it might be better for them to have a part. The shipboard mission affords blessed opportunities of reaching dead souls and of witnessing for Christ in what is too often a dark place, while devout Christians on board "show the Lord's death," as a witness to their shipmates of His coming again in glory.

STUDYING THE WORD.

The Seamen's Bible Class, held on Sunday afternoon, is always a marked feature in the Institute work. An average attendance all the year round of seventy seamen meet at one station Sunday after Sunday for the study of God's Word. At the close, those men whose ships are far away in dock or river are invited to stay to tea. Very hearty and very homelike is it all, and comes as a pleasant break in the hard life on shipboard.

Nowhere is the Word of God more precious than on board ships at sea—far from the many public means of grace on land; nowhere is it more "living, and active, and sharper than any two-edged sword." Great stress is therefore placed on the circulation of the Holy Scriptures by sale to individual seamen. Sailors willing to spend their hard-earned wages in the purchase of Bibles and Prayer Books thus give some evidence of sincerity and fixity of purpose to serve the Lord, by using "the sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God." As many as 5,342 Bibles or New Testaments were bought by seafaring men from the chaplains and readers alone last year.

GOSPEL LITERATURE.

"Can you give us something to read, sir?" is constantly being asked by the outward-bound sailor. "Very touching is it to see the number of seamen leaving the Institute at the close of our services and meetings, with library-book bags under their arms, well filled with good, bright, wholesome reading. How outward-bound men appreciate such a gift, often passing the well-thumbed books on to a less fortunate crew, and then, sailor-like, washing the soiled bag and bringing it back with the request for more reading! The tons of books, magazines, illustrated papers, &c., which any one station can send to sea in one twelve months!"

COMMANDER DAWSON.

It was in 1874 that Commander W. Dawson, R.N., was appointed to the general secretaryship of the Society. His ripe experience of naval affairs, and his fervent desire for the evangelization of seamen, marked him out as peculiarly suitable for the post. Born in 1831, he entered the Royal Navy as a naval cadet when but thirteen years of age, and he has served his country in various departments of the Navy and in many parts of the world, winning the confidence of his superiors and the esteem of officers and men. His active pen was employed, too, in directing public attention to official regulations which hindered religious work on board ship, and to securing the abolition of such obnoxious rules. Indeed, there is scarcely a phase of religious or social life among sailors which has not been improved by the untiring devotion of this common-sense advocate of needful reforms. He has written instructive essays on, "Bible Classes in the Navy," and "Lay-Work in the Royal Navy"; while periodical literature has found in him a frequent contributor of articles which have enlightened the public mind as to the spiritual deprivations and gracious opportunities of a seafaring career, and consistently upheld a high standard of religious and social life for the sailor.

In 1851, Commander Dawson joined the Naval Prayer Union, founded by Admiral Sir Edward Parry, the Arctic navigator and discoverer. Of that organization our friend subsequently became honorary secretary. Amid many exacting calls he has found time during forty years of residence in London to take an active part in the religious work of many parishes, fulfilling administrative duties, conducting evangelistic missions, and advocating the temperance cause. He was a member of the Diocesan Lay Helpers' Committee for thirty-two years, and was until recently a member of the Diocesan Readers' Board. His long experience as an abstainer has helped him to give strong testimony for the temperance cause, and he has frequently and acceptably spoken for the Church of England Temperance Society.

PROGRESS, AND PRESENT NEED.

The main work of the past twenty-nine years of Commander Dawson's conspicuously unselfish life has been devoted, of course, to the Missions to Seamen, where, as we have shown, very much has been done to make spiritual provision for all who are employed on board ship. So fruitful have been the labours of this and other organizations that, as the latest annual report, issued from the Central Offices (11, Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C.) says:—"It is not uncommon to board merchant ships in which the whole crew, from the captain to the youngest boy, are total abstainers. It is generally found that God is unitedly worshipped in such temperance ships, and that a religious spirit animates all on board."

At the same time, much remains to be done. The absence of Divine worship on board the great majority of British merchant ships, and the neglect of the Word of God's grace themselves constitute a call to prayer. More particularly it is hoped by Commander Dawson and the Committee that those home seaports recently depleted of workers may again be adequately manned, and that "the kingdom of Christ may be so extended to spiritually destitute harbours abroad, in which no clergy are specially set apart to minister to the crews, that in those ports also Jesus may as of old walk on the waters, and be willingly received into the ships."

A Valuable Ministry.—Writing from the Soldiers' Memorial Home, Springlands, Netley, Miss Stewart Sandeman says: "We are still in the heart of deep work among a class practically out of reach completely of outside efforts. The Home has done excellent service, and is in continual use. Soldiers, especially those whose relatives are telegraphed to in cases of dangerous illness or serious operations, look to it as a Godsend, after the long years of absence, and scattering of many home-links, and just arrived from hospitals abroad and long voyages." Miss Sandeman's Homes exist for the benefit of soldiers who have served abroad and discharged invalids, and in this respect are fulfilling a unique and much-needed ministry. We commend this work to all who desire to see our soldiers turned into missionaries of the good tidings in distant lands.

Our Priestly Ministry.

By Maréchale BOOTH-CLIBBORN.

I DO not think as Protestants we sufficiently realize the significance of our priestly office in the salvation of men. The call of the Prophets was a thing so apart, and their work so definite, so recognized by all as God-given, and they themselves as God-chosen, that this fact in itself gave tremendous weight to their message.

The call, the vocation of the Apostles was no less high and God-given, and this holds good right down to the present day.

There is a sense, a very sacred sense, in which we are to be priests, standing between God and the people, with the mightiest and most sublime mission—even that of taking hold of Christ by the one hand and the sinner by the other, and drawing them together. Bringing men into contact with Christ, getting them within sound of His voice, to know His power, to see His face—this is our object. If we fail here, we fail everywhere.

I believe one secret of failure is that our work is too desultory—not followed up by individual dealing. We do not understand that Christ counts on us as His representatives to make men submit, to "persuade men with tears," for "the Kingdom of Heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force."

Do not suppose for a moment I imagine God cannot do without us. He can save through one of the Gospels given away, a simple word or a song, as I have known in many instances. But this by no means contradicts the truth I wish to enforce. Our part, our duty, our vocation as apostles is that of and bringing men into the Kingdom of Heaven. Now apostles have to do with humanity; the more truly and absolutely they belong to God, the more truly and absolutely they belong to men. The nearer they are to Christ, the nearer they are to the lost sheep. The sheep may be vile, degraded, despairing, given over to every vice, to pride and Pharisaism, but they are His property by right. They cost His heart's blood, and since they are so dear to Him, they are dear to us. Our mission is to get hold of these, to convict and win them. On this all our efforts must be focussed.

Also we must reckon with humanity, go down to it, take it in our arms, look at it, share its griefs and woes, love it with a great disinterested pure divine love—with a love which can bear ingratitude, coldness, and slights—with a love which can endure misunderstanding and injury and yet love on, giving all and asking nothing in return. Do you understand me? If you would save, you must love! Whatever else the apostle does or does not, he must learn to love!

To judge, criticize, blast, and denounce may have its place, but will not conquer; for truly I agree with the Curé d'Ars that "the world belongs to him who loves it most."

During twenty-two years' experience on the Continent of Europe, the need of true, spiritual priest-work has been brought home to me repeatedly. Taking any Continental audience of a thousand people, there would be hardly a dozen present who would not have some skeleton in the cupboard, some hidden sin, some cruel slavish bondage, some burden too heavy to be borne, some intricate sinful circumstances out of which they see no way of escape. How are they to get deliverance, if we do not hear their tales of woe, if we do not give counsel, if they cannot unburden their guilty consciences, and trust to us the sin which is blasting their lives—to whom should they go?

The message is delivered, the truth is given, God's judgments and the wages of sin have been dwelt on at length, hymns of peace and joy have been sung, and the meeting is closed. Here is a woman who would only too gladly accept the salvation offered her. Here is a man weighed down with a sense of guilt, but his chains hold him fast, and the enemy grins at his agony of heart. The first has a husband in another country; she is now living with one who is the father of several of her children—what is she to do? The second is in a position equally sad. Is it not cruel to leave these people with a message of the Gospel, and make no effort to help them in righting their poor lives?

During my campaigns in France, which were very remarkable, and where I have again and again seen whole cities moved towards God, I was struck with

THE NEED OF THE SPIRITUAL PRIESTHOOD.

How often (after a powerful meeting, where I know I have spoken in the demonstration of the Spirit), at an advanced hour, I have entered into conversation with one and another in the audience who had listened with the greatest interest and feeling, and they have replied: "Oh Maréchale, you have so moved me, I am going to see the priest to-morrow." "Think, it is five years since I have been to confession."

Another: "Oh, I've a great sin! I must go and find the curé," &c.

I reflected—what help can they obtain from one who probably has not himself found deliverance from sin? To get real help we must find someone who can say: "I see"; "I am healed"; "I know"; "I do the will of God"; "I have peace which passeth understanding." But how rare are such spiritual leaders! These alone are worthy and fit to occupy this sacred position. Seeing this, I simply announced that anyone in difficulties would be received between certain hours, and oh, the tales I have listened to, from aged men and women to youths of sixteen—murder, theft, impurity, every phase of sin and weakness has been revealed! This plan gave me a wonderful opportunity of getting at the hearts of the people, and bringing them to a personal knowledge of the Saviour. It is impossible for people to be saved without first putting themselves in harmony with truth. (Not once, I may add here, has anyone abused the opportunity thus afforded them.)

Suffering and Sunset.

"At eventide it shall be light."

Is there no sun upon the dreary landscape of my life?
Nought but this weary shade, this never-ending strife?
Is there no heavenly ray to pierce the deepening gloom?
That makes the life I live more like the lifeless tomb?
Enhanced by ceaseless suffering.

. . . . . .

Look up, look up, faint heart, for bright and fair
Above the clouds the sun is shining there.
Else were the shadows not so thick and black
That seem to gather all around your track.
Would you have sun and shadows flee away?
Content with shadowless and sunless day?
Oh, bide a wee, until the cloud has wept
Its heaviness away, and gently swept
From out our eyes the dust of doubts and fears,
And given us instead refreshing tears.
Then, when the raging storm has spent his might,
And wild winds hushed, the clouds will melt in light;
And above, setting in crimson splendour,
Bending in tenderness to heaven's floor,
The sun stoops low to kiss the weeping earth,
Scatt'ring rich jewels all along her path;
Wooing on high her sobbing and her tears,
Chasing away the shadows and the fears;
Gilding the cold horizon of our life,
Until it shines with radiant glory rife;
Bright'ning the shadows till they jewels seem,
While every teardrop as the rainbows gleam;
Flooding the hills of doubt that hid the sun
Like living paths of glory, one by one.
For mountains are the way that God has given
To lead us o'er the clouds and nearer Heaven.
Grasping His hand, the rough paths lead us near,
Through rocky steeps, to purer atmosphere.
Fear not the thorny crown, the toilsome way,
Look far above it to the endless day.
E'en suffering is His gift to seal His own,
Making us partners on His Heav'nly Throne.

. . . . . .

Wait till the eventide, poor, tired soul;
Wait till the clouds have each been rolled away;
Wait till the tempest has spent all its might;
Wait for the dawning of th' eternal day.
And the sun will be the brighter for the storm,
The grass will be the greener for the rain,
Sweeter the rest that follows weary toil,
More exquisite the bliss for all this pain.

Tunbridge Wells. G. E. H.

Torrey-Alexander Mission.

FIRST WEEK IN LIVERPOOL.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

THE first week of this mission has witnessed a most remarkable series of meetings. In no place visited by the evangelists has the response of the people been so ready and hearty at the beginning. There has been no "working up" to do, but from the first meeting the hall has been filled with eager crowds, and the presence and power of the Holy Spirit have been distinctly manifested. The public reception meeting on Monday afternoon brought together an audience which nearly filled the Philharmonic Hall. The platform was thoroughly representative, ministers of all sections of the Evangelical Church uniting in a hearty welcome to the guests.

GREETINGS FROM THE COMMUNITY.

Mr. Alexander led the meeting in song, after which the hon. secretary (Mr. J. L. FENN) read letters of sympathy with the work from gentlemen unable to be present, including the Bishop of Liverpool, Archdeacon Taylor, Canon Woodward, and Mr. Chas. M'Arthur, M.P. Mr. T. A. LEIGH (chairman) briefly recounted some of the results of the never-to-be-forgotten visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Rev. C. MUSGRAVE BROWN, chairman of the executive committee, welcomed the evangelists, assuring them that much prayer had been made, and as in the case of Cornelius and his household, the people were now ready to hear all that the Lord had commanded them to say. Rev. Dr. S. R. MACPHAIL (Moderator of the Presbyterian Church of England) welcomed Dr. Torrey, not only as an evangelist whom God had anointed with power for this special work, but, most of all, because he was set for the defence of the old Bible, as the Word of the Living God.

Rev. J. H. ATKINSON, president of the Free Church Council, in a few happy sentences, emphasized the importance of a mission in Liverpool as likely to be a world-wide blessing, since from it ships went to every port in the world. Rev. JOSEPH JACKSON, who succeeded the sainted Charles Garrett as superintendent of the Liverpool Wesleyan Mission, hailed Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander as apostles of personal work for Christ. Rev. THOMAS YATES, of Norwood Congregational Church, welcomed them as men able to deal with mental difficulties in the way of the Gospel, especially amongst our working-men. Rev. GRIFFITHS ELLIS, of the Welsh Presbyterian Church, voiced the hearty welcome of the Welsh friends.

THE SECRET OF BLESSING.

Dr. TORREY replied in characteristic fashion, directing attention from himself and Mr. Alexander to God, from whom alone would come the power to make the mission a lasting blessing to Liverpool.

Mr. ALEXANDER briefly told of their work in other lands, where the power of God had wrought great marvels. A few words from Mr. Robert Harkness brought to a close a most interesting and enthusiastic meeting.

After the successful Monday evening meeting reported in our last issue, Dr. Torrey commenced his Bible-readings on Tuesday afternoon. A very large audience listened with close attention as he answered in the most convincing way the question, "Does God answer Prayer?" The evening meeting was larger than on previous days. Mr. Alexander was early on the platform, and choir and audience were soon singing the "Glory Song" in the heartiest manner. Dr. Torrey's address on "Weighed and found wanting," was one of the most heart-searching we have heard, and such was the power of the Spirit that the whole audience was awed. At the close, scores of men and women stood up to indicate their decision to accept the Lord Jesus Christ.

On Wednesday afternoon, after leading the people in song, Mr. Alexander asked for texts that had proved helpful. In response a number of promises were quoted, and testimony borne to God's faithfulness. Dr. Torrey's address on "What prayer can do," was an encouragement and inspiration to continuance in prayer. Mr. Alexander's solo, "He Knows," fittingly closed a solemn service. In the evening thousands of people were turned away, many of whom made their way to the Gymnasium for an overflow meeting. Dr. Torrey took as his subject "The Judgment Day—its certainty, the basis of judgment, and the Judge." His clear, logical proclamation of these solemn truths, followed by Mr. Alexander's effective singing of "There's a great day coming," produced a profound impression.

Thursday proved a wet day, and even the most sanguine did not anticipate a large assemblage at the afternoon Bible-reading; but about 2,000 people were present, and "The Secret of Prevailing Prayer" formed the basis of a most stirring address, Mr. Alexander singing, "Anywhere with Jesus." Rain still fell in sheets at the hour of the evening gathering, yet the doors of the Philharmonic Hall were literally besieged by people eager to obtain seats—a very large number failing to get in, and taking refuge in the Gymnasium, where each night souls have been saved. Dr. Torrey had announced that he would preach on "Hell." Scattered about the hall were a number of ministers in addition to those occupying the platforms. Taking as his text Matt. vi. 49, the preacher held his audience spell-bound as he demonstrated from the Word of God "the Certainty of hell, its Character, and How to escape it." No such deliverance has been heard in Liverpool for many years. It has been the talk of the city ever since, and the number of people coming forward at the close to accept Christ evidenced the way in which the Word had been carried home. Mr. Alexander's solo, "She only touched the hem of His garment," seemed specially effective after Dr. Torrey's solemn warnings.

The Friday afternoon's subject was "Obedience, in its Relation to Prayer." Many were interested as Dr. Torrey explained how to settle questions upon which there is no "Thou shalt," or "Thou shalt not," showing that when the spirit of filial obedience rules the life God will give us whatsoever we ask. Following his sermon on "Hell" on the previous evening, the Doctor took as his subject, "God's Barricades on the Road to Destruction." From the words, "not willing that any should perish," he showed how many hindrances God had placed in the path—the greatest of all being the Cross. As on other evenings, the invitation to come forward was numerously responded to.

PRAYER-MEETINGS IN THE CITY.

Throughout the week meetings for prayer have been held at noon in the City Hall, in the centre of the business part of Liverpool, and have been well attended. Some remarkable testimonies have been given at these meetings, of the conversion of drunkards, both men and women, as well as of work among shop girls. About a dozen dinner-hour meetings have also been held in workshops and factories, or adjacent buildings secured for the purpose. In one where a great number of girls were employed, Mr. Alexander's song, "Never lose sight of Jesus," supplanted the popular songs, and the factory was humming all the afternoon with the refrain.

It is difficult to gauge the effect produced by this first week of the mission; but it is safe to say that Liverpool is being greatly stirred. Sinners are being saved, and Christians are gaining day by day an altogether new conception of Christian work.

Sunday brought an increasing crowd. The meeting for Christian workers at eight o'clock in the morning was attended by about 1,500 people to whom Dr. Torrey spoke of "The Privilege and Duty of Personal Soul-Winning."

In order to reach the largest possible number the meeting in the afternoon was restricted to women, who filled every available inch of space. Mr. Alexander moved many hearts as he sang, "My Mother's Prayer," and "Where is my Wandering Boy?" Dr. Torrey, in a sympathetic address, showed "How the Lord Jesus Christ was a Shelter from all the Ills of Life," and many were induced to accept Him before leaving the hall.

In the evening the hall was densely packed by men of all sorts. The choir was also composed of men, and Mr. Alexander led off with the "Glory Song," the singing of which has not been equalled since the evangelists were at Melbourne. Dr. Torrey gave a solemn address on "Sin, its Power, its Consequences," in which, while dealing with special sins in a most faithful way, he showed a sympathy with the erring which was as touching as his faithfulness. When he appealed to men "to break with sin and accept Jesus Christ," about 200 came to the front, in several cases two or three members of a family standing side by side to confess their faith.

Overflow meetings were held in the Gymnasium, both afternoon and evening, at which addresses were given by Dr. and Mrs. Warren, formerly of Melbourne; Mr. W. M. Oatts, of Glasgow; and Mr. Trowell, of London. Souls were saved at each meeting.

ORGANISING THE CHOIR.

In no city which Messrs. Torrey and Alexander have visited in this country has there been a better organization of the choir than in Liverpool. I was so struck with this, writes a correspondent, that I took the trouble to obtain from Mr. Foxley, who has had this work in charge, the details of his method, so that others may benefit. Mr. Foxley told me that he had been working very hard to get as good a choir as possible for the mission, and he had made it a matter of prayer from the very beginning that every letter he wrote and every step he took might be Divinely directed. His first idea was to engage the interest of the various Christian Endeavour Societies, which are particularly strong in the district; and with this in view he sent a letter asking members to join the choir. But this only resulted in comparatively few, about fifty, accepting the invitation, and he saw that he would have to extend the area. So he wrote another letter and sent it to singers connected with the churches and with certain choral societies connected with religious work in Liverpool. He gave the business a dignity and importance, and at his first rehearsal, which was attended by about 500 singers, he asked them to take the work as seriously as possible so that they might achieve a great result for God. He assured them that every step would be taken to make the choir feel the responsibility of its work. For instance, no one who had not a card of admission bearing the name of the singer would be allowed on the orchestra.

Next, he sent out a card with dates of the meetings for three weeks of the mission, and asked every singer to mark the dates on which he or she could promise to be present. These cards were returned by the hundred to Mr. Foxley, who has been thus able to know precisely how many singers would help at every service. I may add that at no evening services has there been one single vacant seat visible on the orchestra, and the sight of such a fine body of singers has been most inspiring and helpful in the musical part of the service. The attendance of every singer was marked in a book by the choir stewards at each service, and such was the eagerness of the choir to get credit for keeping their promises that they asked Mr. Foxley if their attendance at the overflow services could also be registered. I saw a letter from one member of the choir apologizing for inability to keep one engagement, and that will reveal the fidelity with which the singers keep to their work.

Of course, the organization of the choir has entailed a large amount of labour and thought, but Mr. Foxley would be the first to say that he has been well repaid for his trouble by the splendid fervour of the choir. Mr. Alexander was delighted from the first with the body of voice which he conducted, and there is no doubt that much of the influence of the services in the Philharmonic Hall has been due to the fine tone of the choir, spiritually as well as vocally. Altogether Mr. Foxley secured the help of nearly 1,300 persons, and this has enabled him always to have the attendance of about 500 singers. Too often the business of organizing a choir for a mission is left to the last moment and to haphazard methods. I think the Liverpool experiences are worthy of imitation.

A STORY OF "PRAY THROUGH."

An interesting incident of how far-reaching is the influence of two words, occurred last week at Liverpool. Mr. Charles Alexander had occasion to go with a friend to one of the leading banks in the city, in order to exchange some American coinage for British currency. While he was waiting at the counter he traced on the blotting paper in front of him the words "Pray Through," which he had been using in the course of an address. These words, it will be remembered, formed the motto of the Convention at the Moody Bible Institute at Chicago. Almost unconsciously Mr. Alexander wrote the two words several times on the blotting paper; then, having finished his business in the bank, he and his friend left. Shortly afterwards a customer of the bank came in. He had been passing through a time of great anxiety, and while he was waiting at the counter his eye fell on the words, "Pray Through." It interested him, and he asked the clerk who had written them. The clerk was not able to tell him, but the gentleman felt it was a direct message to himself to cease his anxiety and to continue in prayer until the cause of it was removed, or he was given strength to understand the Divine plan. An incident like this ought to make us realize the power of two short words, with a great idea behind them, to help and guide men and women.

FIVE MONTHS AFTER.

"The friends in the gallery, and all those below as well, might sit closer. All the room will be required to-night!" So said Mr. W. M. Oatts at the opening of the Fellowship meeting in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, on Monday evening, last week. The meeting was commenced at the close of the Torrey-Alexander campaign in March to conserve the fruit, so far as possible, of that mission, and has been going on weekly under the care of Mr. Oatts. The meeting on the 7th was a special rally, with Lord Overtoun as speaker. The hall was crowded with a bright, earnest audience, young life predominating. Mr. Oatts read the following from among a number of questions sent in:—

"Is it right for me, a Christian, to dance in music-halls, &c. I have forty-two medals, two silver cups, and the silver belt of Bonnie Scotland for Highland dancing. A young Christian lad told me that I would have to give everything up to the Lord before I can be a Christian. This is a very hard task for me, but God's blessed will be done. What about church concerts? I have danced at them also. I have been nine years on the stage. It was at Dr. Torrey's meeting in St. Andrew's Hall, on March 8, that I gave myself to the Lord, but I get so many offers for dancing that it takes me all my time to fight with the devil, so I want your prayers that I may go home to-night with a new heart for Christ."

Quoting 1 Cor. x. 31, "Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God," and making it the basis of his reply, Mr. Oatts said, "If dancing can be done in a music hall or in a church to the glory of God, then dance. The question is, 'Can I take Jesus with me?' If not, then I have no right to go." This was followed up by a bit of personal testimony, in which Mr. Oatts told of how great a hold dancing used to have on him, but that he gave it up when he found others were contaminated through dancing in places he didn't need to dance in. He could dance in the drawing-room, where the surroundings were clean, without suffering hurt, but he felt he could not rebuke others for doing what he did himself, so for their sake he gave it up, and had never danced since.

Lord Overtoun addressed the meeting on the subject of "Church Fellowship."

Hop-Pickers' Mission in Hampshire.—The last of our five tents was erected last Monday, and the work in the whole district began most encouragingly. In the terrible gale four of our tents were blown down; three were very much damaged, the canvas being torn to ribbons. It is a trial of faith. One gipsy man has recently given his heart to God. He came forward to shake hands and said, "I have told my brother about you." What a comfort to know that the effort put forth on their behalf bears fruit.—Aurelia Chinn, Lenton House, Alton, Hants.

From Our Readers.

THE EAST INDIA COMPANY AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

SIR,—In your issue of August 13, the following statement was said to have been passed as a resolution by the Directors of the East India Company to express their extreme repugnance to Missions in India:—

"In 1793 the East India Company passed a resolution that the sending of Missionaries into our Eastern possessions is the maddest, most extravagant, most unwarrantable project that was ever proposed by an enthusiastic lunatic."

This sentence was, I believe, taken from The Quiver of last July, page 928. In both places it was accompanied by some severe comments, which, if the quotation had been correct, would have been perfectly justifiable. A similar statement was made in the Gospel Missionary of March, 1901, and was copied into the Quarterly Paper of Intercession and Thanksgiving for last July (p. 15), issued by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel; but, in this instance, it is said to have been contained in a memorial addressed to Parliament by the Directors of the East India Company in 1800, though without verification.

As I had reason to believe that this exaggerated saying had often been quoted on missionary platforms, I was anxious to verify it; and I have, therefore, made a careful search in order to ascertain its origin. I find that it first occurs in a work called "The Great Value and Success of Foreign Missions," by an American, Rev. John Liggins, which was published in this country by Messrs. Nisbet and Co., in 1889, edited by Dr. A. T. Pierson. There, on p. 80, it was called, "A Disgraceful Memorial of the Company. The Directors of the East India Company placed on solemn record in a formal memorial to the British Parliament 'their decided conviction,' after 'consideration and examination,' that," &c. Then follows the supposed quotation.

Dr. Pierson himself, in a volume entitled "The New Acts of the Apostles," also published by Nisbet and Co. in 1894, p. 260, said, "The greater part of a century has passed since the Directors of the British East India Company put on record their conviction that," &c.; and then he added, "What was worse, at that time, now more than eighty-five years ago, this outrageous assault upon obedience to our Lord's command was not repudiated by the great body even of English Christians, and found positive support among members of Parliament and ecclesiastical dignitaries." Eighty-five years being deducted from 1893, when Dr. Pierson was writing, takes us back to 1808, only five years before the next renewal of the Company's Charter, when "the great body of English Christians" did exactly what Dr. Pierson desiderated. Not one of the writers I have mentioned has attempted to give his authority, or to verify the quotation.

I have examined the records of the East India Company in the early part of 1793. It will be remembered that a discussion regarding the renewal of their Charter was then proceeding in the House of Commons. William Wilberforce had proposed certain resolutions empowering an increase of chaplains, and the admission into India of missionaries and schoolmasters, which were passed in Committee of the House, though they were afterwards excluded from the Act. These resolutions will be found in Kaye's "Christianity in India," 1859, p. 518, App. V.

The Court of Proprietors of East India Stock entertained the strongest objection to them, and a meeting of the General Court took place on May 23, 1793, to consider the subject. The clause to which they objected most was as follows:—"Be it therefore enacted that the said Court shall be, and are hereby, empowered and required to appoint and send out, from time to time, a sufficient number of fit and proper persons for carrying into effect the purposes aforesaid, by acting as schoolmasters, missionaries, or otherwise."

The meeting was stormy and excited. Some very strong remarks were made against the above clause, and especially against the word to "require," as well as to "empower" the Court to employ agents for the purpose of imparting to the native inhabitants of the British dominions in India "useful knowledge," and of advancing "their religious and moral improvement." One of the speakers, Mr. Bensley, a Director of the Company, used the following phrase:—

"So far from approving the clause, or listening to it with patience, from the first moment I heard of it, I considered it the most wild, extravagant, expensive, and unjustifiable project that ever was suggested by the most visionary speculator."

It will be observed that the sentiment of this phrase is just the same as that of the statement with which I am dealing, but the wording is different. I have no doubt that it is the origin of the whole matter; but it should be clearly borne in mind that it was the utterance of an individual speaker, and not the solemnly recorded resolution of the Court of Proprietors arrived at after careful consideration and examination. (The Court of Proprietors, I may say in passing, must be distinguished from the Court of Directors, who were elected by them.) The resolution actually passed was as follows:—

"That it is the opinion of this Court that, if the Ecclesiastical Establishment in India should not at this time be equal to the number of the British subjects at the several Presidencies, the same should be made commensurate to the several British Protestant communities in India, and that to go beyond that Establishment is not only an unwise expenditure of the Company's property, but may be dangerous to the peace and good order of the British Possessions in the East Indies."

Many injudicious things were said by some who attended this meeting. An excellent abstract of it will be found in J. C. Marshman's "Life and Times of Carey, Marshman, and Ward," 1859, Vol. I. p. 43. The Court, however, was bound only by its own resolution, and not by the inflammatory speeches of the excited Proprietors, much less by one extravagant speech. Sometimes, even in the present day, injudicious speeches are uttered at meetings of Joint Stock Companies; but no one would think of attributing sentiments to a Company beyond the resolution passed at any particular meeting. A full account of the meeting to which I am referring is to be found in the report published in 1793 by William Woodfall, which can be seen by the reference under his name in the catalogue in the reading-room of the British Museum.

No record of a memorial having been presented to the House of Commons by the Court of Directors can be discovered in the Parliamentary Reports of 1793. In the following year one of the best men in England, Charles Grant, became a member of the Direction; and I am quite certain that, while he retained his seat as a Director, no such outrageous resolution as that under consideration would have been permitted to pass. Grant himself commented very forcibly on the proceedings of the Court of Proprietors of May 23 in his "Observations on the State of Society among the Asiatic Subjects of Great Britain"—a treatise which was ordered by the House of Commons to be printed as a State paper. (Parliamentary Papers, 1813, Vol. X., p. 136.) We can, therefore, allow the assertion that the statement in question was embodied in a memorial from the Directors to be put aside as a fabrication. No one can regret the policy and the action of the Court of Directors in certain particulars more than I; but we who know the position of India in the present day, and can compare it with the India of a hundred years ago, should be just to our ancestors who were then governing that country under peculiar difficulties; and we have no right to attribute to them, as the governing body, official language which they never employed. The Directors of the East India Company, though sometimes mistaken and misguided in their policy, especially on missionary subjects, were English gentlemen, who would not have placed on record a declaration containing such violent, and even blasphemous, expressions.

May I add that, in 1793, the distinguished missionary Schwartz, who was in the service of an English Society, was then labouring in South India, where he was in high favour with the Government of Madras, who had employed him on several important and delicate matters of State? I would also recommend the perusal of two despatches which emanated from the Court of Directors in 1798 and 1808, which are to be found in Kaye's "Christianity in India" (pp. 508 and 513).

The London Spectacle Mission.—It is satisfactory to note that interest in the beneficent work of the London Spectacle Mission shows no indication of languishing, so that the society has been able to continue its much-needed work on the same lines as formerly. There are now four working centres in London, and some idea of the wide appreciation shown by the poor is gained from the number who have sought assistance. At the head centre, Maida Vale, during the year, there were 800 applicants, at the East End over 400, South London over 400, and Finsbury Park 200. Each of the 1902 applicants, with the exception of ten or twelve, was provided with suitable spectacles. Although the Mission usually gives new spectacles made for its purpose, friends often send parcels of disused spectacles and eyeglasses for the benefit of the society, which are useful for failing or short sight. The secretary has again despatched a parcel of over 200 pairs of spectacles and glasses to a leper settlement in Demerara, and another varied package to a society working for lepers in the East Indies. The address of Miss Waring (hon. sec.) is 197, Sutherland Avenue, Maida Vale, W.

Ministers in Conference.

[BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

THE meetings held at Oxford last week were designed to provide conditions in which open-hearted confession and advice might be possible in a high degree, with a minimum risk of misunderstanding; and by making the devotional atmosphere an essential in every meeting, there was secured conference with a minimum of controversy.

Although leaders from every branch of the Free Churches have been present, it has been an absolutely brotherly gathering, in which the greatest sat to learn from the humblest.

There were about 420 present in George Street Congregational Church on Monday night, when Principal ADENEY, of Lancashire College, opened the subject of "The Minister's Relation to His Lord." Dr. Adeney laid great stress on the objective validity and authority of the preacher's theme, independently of the personal experience he had of it. The Christian minister is not so much a prophet who declares a vision and gives his utterance whether men receive it or no, he is a messenger to declare a gospel and persuade men to take it. He was followed by the president, Rev. R. J. CAMPBELL, of the City Temple, who, for his part, declared his inability to be dogmatic except in matters in which the Gospel had actually helped him.

Rev. Dr. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN, of Northfield, U.S.A., also declared it impossible to lift people by any theory apart from our own experience, the authority being that of the Scripture as interpreted by Christ to us. Revs. R. H. Coats (Birmingham), M. Anstey (Dewsbury), Will Reason (New Southgate), James Robertson (Oxford), R. A. Hickling (Chik Ballapur, India), Dr. Goodrich (President-elect of the Congregational Union of England and Wales) and Principal Forbes Jackson, continued the discussion.

On Tuesday morning, "The Causes of Failure in Spiritual Work" were considered. Rev. THOMAS CHAMPNESS, of the Joyful News Mission, found them in a sort of heart-failure through the chill of agnosticism, and in over-development in one direction to the starving of the vital function in another. He instanced the prize pigeon worth £50, whose young had to be fed by the common ninepenny blue rock, because the prize bird's bill was over-developed in shortness! So the great preacher has sometimes over-developed some points to the starving, say, of the function of conversion; and for this must undergo the humiliation of calling in the help of "such a ninepenny pigeon as I."

Rev. R. J. CAMPBELL, taking up the reference to agnosticism, said we were not altogether responsible for the spirit of the age, the Zeitgeist; and we should notice how of late it had changed from direct antagonism to a wistful inability to believe. But we are responsible for falling victims to it instead of being its interpreters; and we are responsible for such causes of failure as vanity, interested motives, idleness, the false pulpit-dialect, and the craving to be great preachers rather than soul-winners and soul-builders.

Mr. W. R. LANE pointed out that if spiritual work fails it is because spiritual life has failed first. Rev. JOSEPH HOCKING spoke of the going round the pulpits of London searching for hints and inspiration for his own pulpit work, and finding great disappointment from two reasons—preachers evidently aimed at the "good sermon" instead of the message to the needs of the people; and their words too often seemed to be backed up by no earnest conviction.

On Tuesday evening a thrilling exposition of "The Social Ethics of Christianity" was given by speakers each of whom came fresh from the actual solution of pressing social problems on Christian lines. Rev. W. REASON, who has worked long at the Mansfield settlement in Canning Town, pointed to the crying need that Christians should make God sovereign, not only in their own lives but of all in which they took part touching the lives of others. The Passive Resistance movement was suggesting to outsiders that Christians were ready to act for justice when themselves "touched on the raw"; but why remain so callous towards the indescribable injustice to thousands embodied in many of the social conditions of our time—the drink traffic, the land laws, the overcrowding, the starvation? If London and York are typical, then one-third of the people have not sufficient food to make them physically fit for life. Yet our Lord made it our business to feed the hungry, and to attend to the weightier matters of justice and mercy.

Miss CONDER, of Milton Mount College for Girls, Gravesend, followed with a strong appeal for more Scriptural and religious teaching in the home; instancing one minister's daughter who was found destitute of any knowledge whatever of the contents of the Old Testament, and another girl, aged sixteen, who wrote that "Our Lord visited Nazareth to see the Virgin Mary, and tell her she should have a son named John the Baptist"!

Rev. J. L. BROOKE, of the Lingfield Home, pleaded that the Church should gather its greater harvests by marshalling its members in trained brigades for Christian service on every social undertaking, on vestries and councils, and even in Parliament. He stated the principles of the "Colony of Mercy," that the Church and not the State is responsible for the afflicted, and urged that if the Church did its duty to the poor the workhouse would be reformed off the face of the earth.

Dr. TAYLOR, of Chicago, followed with graphic picturing of his grappling with social conditions in America, and with the clear exposition that nothing but a Church of Jesus Christ has any prospect of dealing effectively with social trouble. Rev. CAMPBELL MORGAN, at the close of the discussion, recalled the individual emphasis in the thought that you cannot build a new social order save by regenerated individuals; the "holy nation" is the new social order, and the Church ought to have been revealing to outsiders what that order is, instead of antagonizing them as "unspiritual."

SPIRITUAL CRISES.

On Wednesday morning the news of the Balkan massacre benumbed the Conference at its opening; but Rev. F. B. MEYER, on "Our Individual Pentecost," soon led into the exaltation of the Divine Presence. He compared the wonderful quickening that comes in unmistakable instances, to the floating of an island out of arctic cold into the warm south till its seeds strangely burst into foliage. He spoke of this in Wesley's crisis at the prayer meeting in Fetter Lane Chapel, when he rose to his great mission; in Christmas Evans' conviction of a cold heart and his wayside prayer for three hours in which the Welsh Revival began; and in Moody's sudden seclusion for some hours of prayer when he entered the more abounding ministry of his life.

Rev. JAMES TRAVIS, President of the National Federation of the Free Churches followed. And Rev. CAMPBELL MORGAN, following the lead of Mr. Meyer in disclosing some secrets of his past experience for the guidance of his brethren, told of three spiritual crises which culminated in the settlement of the question—Are you going to be "a preacher," or "My Messenger?"

On Wednesday evening the Conference sermon was preached from John vii. 37-38 by Rev. CAMPBELL MORGAN. Christ has satisfaction for every craving of every man. If any craving in any man is not satisfied he is unequipped for effective Christian work. When it is satisfied the Spirit that fills him can then flow out of him, rivers of living water to quench the thirst of others.

On Thursday morning the subject was "The Preacher and the Bible." In the absence of Dr. Robertson Nicoll, Rev. R. J. CAMPBELL opened the discussion. He acknowledged a difference for the better that criticism of Holy Scripture had made in our handling of God's Word, and yet pointed to the unspiritual type of critic whose views were extreme and destructive. In any case, we need not be in a hurry to accept the dicta of criticism, for there is another standard by which to test results than the consensus of experts, that is, the Christian consciousness. It is Christianity itself derived through the consciousness of holy people in unbroken apostolic succession from the upper room that makes me sure I find God's Word in the Bible. We are on the eve of a great rehabilitation of the miraculous in modern thought both from the side of science and psychology.

Rev. ED. ISAAC, of Melbourne, asked whether it was safe to make Christian consciousness the test for verification of the Word of God, seeing that in different Christians it is a variable quantity. He had learnt to say not the Bible contains, but the Bible is the Word of God.

Principal FORBES JACKSON pointed out the Bible was the gift of God, not direct, but through the Church. And if only Christian men can receive Christian truth, why should we try to make that truth tolerable to men to whom it is by its very nature intolerable.

On Thursday evening Dr. FORSYTH, principal of Hackney College, gave a valuable address on prayer. This was followed by the Communion Service.

On Friday morning Professor VERNON BARTLET, Mansfield College, Oxford, followed by Rev. A. J. PALMER (Folkestone), and Rev. CAMPBELL MORGAN, dealt with the solemn rededication of the preachers and ministers to the holy service of their ministry.

Another correspondent writes:—

Readers of THE CHRISTIAN Almanack who attended the Ministers' Conference could not fail to notice how the texts contained therein seemed to fit in with the needs of each day—so much so, indeed, that it would have been difficult for the compilers to have chosen more appropriate Scriptures even with the Conference in view.

For instance, most of us are in danger of forgetting the culture of our own souls as we become engrossed in the work of saving and satisfying the souls of others. And therefore, as we had been called together for "quiet waiting upon God concerning ourselves," it was with peculiar interest that some of us readily appropriated the following passages:—

September 7.—The Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul (Isa. lviii. 11).

September 8.—Thou shalt cry, and He shall say, Here I am (Isa. lviii. 9).

September 9.—In the day that I called, Thou answeredst me (Psa. cxxviii. 3, R.V.).

September 10.—Thou didst encourage me in my soul (Psa. cxxviii. 3).

September 11.—Now the Lord of Peace Himself give you peace always (2 Thess. iii. 16). Thus, after retreat and fellowship one with another, we returned on this day to our respective spheres of ministry with the Lord of peace as our Companion, and the promise of His own peace as our abiding portion. And having learned during the days of Conference the narrow limits of our own knowledge, and something more of our daily need of illumination, we turned again to our study on September 12, with this word ringing in our ears—"If thou satisfy the afflicted soul, then shall thy light rise in darkness" (Isa. lviii. 10, R.V.)

Christmas Letter Mission.

ONCE more this useful organization is anticipating the festive season, and has made preparations on a large scale. In the past many have thanked God for the letters and the message they convey. A missionary to omnibus men says: "We cannot really estimate the blessings resulting from the distribution of these letters." One girl who cried heart-breakingly over her letter said: "It is my own history; who can have told them?" The wife of a horse-foreman in an omnibus yard confessed: "I have great reason to thank God that you ever came into this yard with the Christmas letters," while another writes: "Who can estimate the harvest to be gathered from these letters throughout the world? Here they have entered the hospitals, barracks, sailors' homes, and wherever a lonely one, hungry for fellowship, could be found, and the moistened eye, the quivering lip, have told their own story as regards their reception."

There are undoubtedly many who will find joy in sending the letters far and wide, to scattered country villages or crowded city lanes, and wherever there are hearts waiting to be comforted and cheered by the thought that "someone cares."

A specimen packet of the letters (price 3d.), with full particulars, can be obtained from the Christmas Letter Mission, 52, Long Acre, London, W.C.

After the Holidays.

I SUPPOSE most, if not all, of you have now returned home from your annual visit to the seaside or the country. You have been enjoying the beauties of nature, the rambling in the woods or on the shore, the cycling, bathing, and other happy recreations that such opportunities afford. Day by day you have asked the question, "Where shall we go, what shall we do next?" Sometimes, perhaps, you have thought more about your own pleasure than the enjoyment of those around you, and have hardly realized how much comfort and rest your parents have given up in order that you might have "a good time."

The next thing to think about now is school, which I know is a much less pleasant subject, and you are dolefully counting the days that remain of your holidays, as I did when a boy in two lines that ran:—

This time next week I shall be Back in the clutches of . . .

(disrespectfully filling in my schoolmaster's initials to complete the rhyme).

Well, you will have enough lessons to learn when you get back to school, so I will not anticipate them here; but before those lessons begin I want you to ask yourself, as I ask you now, "Have you thought of giving anything to God as a thankoffering for all His goodness to you during the holidays?" Most, and I hope all, of you have returned home safe and sound without mishap. If you had been placed in any great danger or had an accident, your thoughts would almost certainly have turned to Him. How much more therefore should they do so if He has "preserved your going out and your coming in" (Psa. cxxi. 8)?

I have heard of a lad who expressed a desire to make his father a birthday present, and asked his mother for a penny to spend for this purpose. She granted his request, and trudging off to a confectioner's he bought eight "toffee-balls." But on the way home temptation proved too strong, as a result of which he ate six and gave his father two!

I have no doubt he meant to be kind to the one who was always so kind to him, but somehow that greedy animal, Self, with a great big capital S, spoiled his good intentions. But there are other ways of being greedy, besides eating; and if you keep for yourself the greater part of your time and thought, your pleasure and strength, and give God a very little, or perhaps none at all, that is the worst form of greediness and selfishness.

When our Lord Jesus healed the ten lepers (Luke xvii. 17) only one of them returned to thank Him; and there was a pathetic sadness in His questions: "Were there not ten cleansed? Where are the nine?" Have any of us brought sorrow to the loving heart of our Heavenly Father by taking all the good things, and the daily mercies that He has given us, without giving Him in return something substantial in the way of thanksgiving for His care, and obedience to His will?

You can see at a glance the wrong in what the little boy did to whom I have referred; but I want each of you to measure yourself by the same rule. The Israelites were bidden to offer sacrifices to the Lord, and the Apostle Paul tells us we are to "present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto the Lord" (Rom. xii. 1). Now a sacrifice costs something, and means self-denial. We are apt to think that God only wants our souls—that is, the spiritual part of our nature; but He wants more than that. He asks for a share in our every-day life and thought and action—a share in our pleasures and happiness, not in order that He may deprive us of anything, but that He may give us something very much better in return. He has given us Himself in Jesus Christ, and He wants us to love Him, to enjoy Him, and find delight in Him.

A friend of mine had three children who, when they were little, used to have their tea early, before he came home for his. Sometimes they would stand around him while he was having it, partly because they liked to be with him and partly because he would occasionally give them a mouthful of something nice. One evening his little girl got there first, and was enjoying some tasty morsels, when in came her brothers; but as they approached the table she said, "Go away, boys; don't worry Pa!" And as she said it she opened her mouth for another bite! I am afraid you will say she was thinking of herself more than of her "Pa," and perhaps you are right. Yet when we test ourselves are we very much better in regard to our Heavenly Father? Do we really desire Him even more than the good things He gives us, as He longs that we should?

When Jesus was bidding farewell to His disciples on the night in which He was betrayed, He spoke of heaven, not with a fanciful picture of its scenes and joys, but as the place where He would be. "In my Father's house are many mansions. I go to prepare a place for you, that where I am there ye may be also" (John xiv. 2). That is the best heaven that He has to offer us, and if we are to share it we must prepare for it by taking pleasure in Him here on earth. Then when this life is over we shall find that "in His presence is fulness of joy, and at His right hand there are pleasures for evermore" (Psa. xvi. 11).

The Necessity for Witness-bearing (Acts iv. 13-20, v. 19-32).

THE Apostle Peter's address in Solomon's Porch on the cure of the cripple had important results which brought the infant Church into collision with the national authorities. That afternoon began the record of Christian confessorship and martyrdom. For a whole night the Apostles remained in prison, and on the following morning the Lord's words were fulfilled, "They shall bring you before rulers for My sake."

The court did not question that the cripple beggar had been healed; the one question was, By what power was it done? In answer, Peter did not hesitate to avow that the cure had been effected in the Name of the risen Christ. The special power of the Holy Spirit enabled him to make a great confession (Luke xxi. 12-15). Every word he said was substantiated by the presence of the healed man, the fact of whose healing the Sanhedrim found it convenient to ignore in word, though it was a strong factor determining their action (v. 15-16). It is remarkable that nothing was said about the resurrection. Surely if it had been possible to produce evidence to say that it had not taken place, that would have been the time. If the body of Christ had been somewhere in existence it could have been produced, but no attempt was made to throw doubt upon Peter's assertion that Jesus was risen. All they did was to attempt to hush up the incident (v. 18), and to bid the Apostles speak no more in that Name. Here was collision between a hollow authority and the might of conscience.

We are reminded of Daniel in Babylon, and of Luther at Worms, in the magnificent answer of v. 19. We dare not hide in our heart the truth which has been committed to us. We dare not falter in our witness because it may bring us to contumely and suffering. There are great and stirring times in the history of the world, when men are bound to speak out from full hearts the glorious mysteries with which they have been entrusted.

How long the interval was between this collision and the one recorded in the fifth chapter we do not know, but it is clear that Christianity went forward by leaps and bounds. Not only was the mandate of the Sanhedrim set at defiance by the apostolic preachers, but every day the city rang with a proclamation of the Resurrection and Messiahship of Christ. The rulers felt that something must be done, so one day the whole of the Apostles were suddenly arrested and lodged in gaol. On the following morning, however, it was discovered that the prisoners were free. What comfort it must have been to them when the angel of the Lord opened the prison doors and bade them go forward with their proclamation of the Risen Christ. It reminds us of the angel who appeared to comfort our Lord in Gethsemane. They must have felt, as they saw the radiant visage of the heavenly visitant, as if their Master was setting His seal upon their witness. And what occurred to them does happen still for all true and faithful souls who dare to stand for Christ.

In Germany, the other day, I saw a beautiful picture of John Huss standing at the stake, while the Lord is represented as a heavenly Visitant kissing his forehead. The artist, by his shading, evidently desires to indicate that that celestial presence was only visible to those whose eyes were opened.

When the high priest reminded the apostles of his prohibition, Peter repeated his assertion of the Divine necessity which was laid upon them to preach, and which overrode the authority of the highest of the land; and an examination of the two speeches shows that though they covered something of the same ground, there is less reserve, the sword is drawn from its scabbard, and Peter wielded it in the power of the Holy Spirit. Let us never forget those memorable words, "we ought to obey God rather than men."

It is not at all unlikely that we are entering now upon a period when we shall be called to suffer for our convictions in ways we never expected. Contumely and loss will fall to our lot if we dare to stand against the power of the world. When such experiences befall us, let us open again this ancient record, and thank God that we are following in the footsteps of those who knew most of the mind of Christ because they were so closely associated with Him, and whatever we may be called to suffer, let us always remember not to be obstinate, or contumacious, or self-willed, but simple, humble, reverent, and willing to submit to wrong rather than resist it. Chief Personages.

Samuel. The faithful message-bearer of Jehovah. The last judge in Israel. The founder and first schoolmaster of "the school of the prophets."

Saul. The first King of Israel. Had a fair start, with everything in his favour. Self-importance was the first leak to the vessel (xv. 17); disloyalty to God; then flagrant disobedience.

Jonathan. A dutiful son, a staunch friend. True to Saul and David, to king and country because first of all true to his God.

David gave his heart to the Lord when a lad, and God made him brave and fearless in body and spirit (1 Sam. xvii. 37, 45), valiant in war, wise among courtiers (xviii. 5). When he came to the throne he knew to whom to look for help in the time of need.

Special Point from each Lesson.

I. To reflect God's message is to reflect Him. The Lord counts good or evil done to His people as done to Himself.

II. The King of kings will never disappoint His people; what am I doing for His kingdom?

III. Christ "ever liveth to make intercession for us."

IV. One sin unrepented of always leads to others. A silk thread of evil habit will gradually become the iron chain of sin's slavery.

V. Not looks and words, but the heart of loyal love is of value to God.

VI. Only by the power of God's Holy Spirit can we gain the victory over sin (Col. i. 20). Only on Calvary can we see the sign of God's love (John iii. 16).

VIII. Jonathan and David friendship was holy, God was between them (1 Sam. xx. 23).

IX. "A man after God's own heart," proved when he spared his enemy because he was the Lord's anointed.

X. Rejection of God and His salvation means (Heb. x. 28-31, ii. 3).

XI. "Thou art my King, Lord Jesus!" Make me loving, loyal, true, brave, wise, "ready to do whatsoever my Lord the King shall appoint."

XII. Watch. Pray. "The Lord is at hand. He shall keep the feet of His holy ones unspotted from the world" (Rev. vii. 14, iii. 4). He who will be my Judge is willing to help me all the way along.

LIGHT, SALVATION, AND STRENGTH.

Sir David Brewster, the eminent philosopher, who was honoured by all the nations of Europe, acknowledged upon his death-bed the sovereignty of God, and the beauty of Christ's redemption. Referring to the wonders of creation, Sir David said: "I have found them to be great and marvellous, and I have felt them to be His. I have had the light for many years, and oh, how bright it is! I feel so safe, so satisfied." As the great scientist died peacefully in the Lord, so we may all, in the midst of life, have a similar confidence and assurance. We may each truly say: "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?" (Golden Text).

GOD'S WAYS ARE BEST.

It was recently reported in certain parts of Italy that the olive groves were in danger of destruction, owing to the ravages of a terrible little insect having a partiality for olives. Whole districts have already been ruined, and the loss throughout the whole country is estimated at over two million pounds per annum. According to an agricultural expert in Italy the havoc wrought by the insect has arisen from the wanton destruction of bird-life, now carried on throughout that country. God in His wisdom has provided Italy with many birds to keep down the insect life, and as is so often the case, disaster has now followed man's interference with nature. When the people of Israel murmured at God's rule and sought an earthly king, they acted in a spirit akin to that of the Italians of to-day. We, too, are prone to rebel against God's dealings, and are apt to choose for ourselves; hence many of our mistakes in life (July 5).

UNCERTAIN SIGNPOSTS.

A century ago it was no uncommon thing to find a signpost turned round, so that travellers should be bewildered on their journey. Young men very often went to a post at cross-roads in the country, and having altered the directions on its extending arms, were accustomed to hide behind a hedge and await the arrival of the next traveller. When they witnessed his astonishment and uncertainty as to the way to take, they considered themselves amply repaid. "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." The path of self-will and self-strength will not lead to our desired goal. God has said, "This is the way, walk ye in it;" and only as we keep to the narrow path of godliness shall we arrive at our destination in peace (Sept. 6).

A FRIEND IN NEED.

Mr. John B. Gough was accustomed to refer to a a young man who had written to him regarding a career of drink. "Thirteen years ago," he said, "I came to this city from the country to engage in business. I came poor, but honest, with the warning voice of a Christian mother fresh in memory. Would to God I had adhered to her counsels; had I done so, rum would never have crossed my lips." The young man was tempted, and drank in the bar-room with friends and acquaintances. He took a downward course, and was only saved by the timely intervention of one who was, in deed and in truth, a real friend. "Had I remained any longer as I was," added the young man, "the hand that pens these lines would this day be mouldering back to its mother earth, and over the sod that covered me might have been written, 'A Drunkard's Grave.'" Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit. We all need God's grace to enable us to keep from temptation.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

KING'S LYNN.

THE mission just concluded by Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry, assisted by Mr. T. Armon Jones, has marked an era in the temperance life of King's Lynn. The house-to-house canvassers put forth redoubled efforts, and in the face of many obstacles good audiences gathered each night to listen to the powerful appeals of Dr. Henry and the soul-inspiring melodies sung by Mr. Armon Jones. A profound impression was left upon all who came to the meetings. Many Christians and temperance advocates acknowledge that their position has been much strengthened.

After the splendid gatherings of Sabbath, September 6, especially with the deep spiritual feeling of the evening meeting, it was not to be wondered that a good company gathered on the following evening. Rev. W. G. Morgan, vicar of St. John's, occupied the chair. Dr. Henry spoke on "The Great Red Dragon of Strong Drink."

"If we cannot cut off all the heads of this dragon at once," said the speaker, "we may cut off one at a time." Changing the figure, he contended that if we cannot get the whole loaf of Temperance reform at once, let us do something to get a piece, a crust, or even a crumb, but in any case let us seek to get something, and that quickly, rather than stand by and do nothing. "Christian, get a crumb, and let that give you an appetite for more and more until the great task is accomplished."

On Tuesday, when Mr. S. S. Burlingham occupied the chair, Dr. Henry again appealed to all Christians to take up this great question of Temperance, since it belonged primarily to them. "The drink has made and is making an attack upon the Church, and now the Church —all Christians—must commence a great warfare against this gigantic enemy. This important question has been largely fought without the Church, but now it must be fought from within." Further, Dr. Henry appealed to all to fight upon Bible evidences, and said, "Let us begin in the Church; let us banish the intoxicating cup from the Lord's table, teach our children the truth regarding this great evil, and thus help to liberate the Church of Christ from all complicity with the trade in strong drink." The address was a mighty appeal, and many went from that meeting ready to put the Temperance question in a new setting.

Each evening deep interest was aroused. Rev. G. Bell occupied the chair on Wednesday, and not a few hearers declared Dr. Henry's address on this occasion to be the best of the series. He reminded his audience where to go for strength in this great struggle. "God is our help," and being filled with the Spirit should be the true position of all who wish to hasten the day of emancipation from the slavery of strong drink. The singing of Mr. Jones at the close touched every heart, and several stood up to signify that they took the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour. A meeting for women was held in the afternoon, Mrs. Teare occupying the chair, and many who were unable to get to the evening meetings, took this opportunity of hearing the missioners. Mrs. Henry also spoke.

Thursday, September 10, was the closing day, and despite the violence of rain and wind a good company assembled to hear the lecture on "Public-house Life in America." Councillor A. Jermyn, J.P., presided. The weighty evidence of this splendid lecture was of immense value. Dr. Henry's method of presenting the phases of Temperance reform is calculated to be of far-reaching benefit. Everyone who attended said, "What a splendid lecture, and what convincing statements!" The singing of Mr. Jones was magnificent—time after time did the audience call for him to sing again.

Now that Dr. Henry has gone we feel that one with the Spirit of God has visited us. New life has been given us, new desires, new aspirations. Our prayers go with them. May the desire of all Christian Temperance friends at Lynn be answered: "God give great triumphs to the Christian Temperance Campaign." During the mission over 700 pledges have been taken.

G. Allen.

Mr. Robert Scott has received the following interesting letter regarding the mission:—

I think it my duty as president of the King's Lynn Divisional Temperance Council to inform you of the high appreciation of our committee of the great and valuable services rendered by Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones. Every meeting was a success, and was well sustained by both speaker and singer; in fact, I may say that for the past thirty years in the history of the temperance cause in Lynn no speakers have created such a profound interest in the cause. I believe the temperance sentiment among the churches has been greatly extended, while a sense of Christian duty has been inculcated as an obligation upon Christians generally. We believe that this is the commencement of a new history in connection with our great cause in this town and district. We wish to thank you for the kind interest you have taken in the matter.

Alfred Jermyn, President.

On September 10, Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones commenced a mission at Uddingston, N.B., of which it is hoped to give particulars next week.

At Doncaster Races.

THE Racecourse Mission campaign at Doncaster last week was from more than one point of view remarkable. The workers came from far and near—Bournemouth, Swindon, Darlington, Bromley, Huddersfield, Wakefield, Dewsbury, Batley, Sheffield, and London each supplying its quota. The ministers of almost every local Nonconformist church took active part in the proceedings, and their conviction was that the churches must earnestly co-operate with the work on the racecourse, that being the place where the people are to be found. "We do not know anything at all about it while we stay in our churches," said one.

Four of the pulpits of the town churches were occupied by Racecourse missioners on the Sunday morning, and two meetings were held in the Corn Exchange later on the same day, the Hall Gate Congregational Orchestra and United Free Church choirs doing admirable service in providing the music. A pleasing feature of the week was the large number of testimonies heard from one or another as to blessings received in past years.

This year, too, many definite results have been chronicled. A young man was met, who was twenty-one years old that day—had already had much money, but had gambled it away; and that very day his last £100 had gone into the hands of the bookmakers. "I'm on the rocks!" he said. He was dealt with faithfully by the worker, and on the Town Moor, under an umbrella, he decided to begin a new life, and gave himself to Christ. Thursday was a very wet day, and much of the work on the course was prevented; but near the grand stand, outside the van which provided shelter for the missioners, a remarkable meeting was held in the early afternoon. The leader was addressing the people, who had been gathered to the spot by the singing, and in the course of his remarks he stated that it was an awful thought that the majority of those thousands on the Town Moor were on the downward path. "How do you know that?" shouted one of the bystanders, and taking out his Testament the speaker read from Matt. vii. 13-14. From the verses he spoke for twenty minutes or more, amid much interruption from the audience, the workers in the van meanwhile holding him up in prayer, the result being that three men from neighbouring towns, all known to some of the workers, found Christ before they left the course, each also signing the pledge.

As one of them got up from his knees he said, with deep emotion, "There's one man here I want to see. He gave me a Gospel last year on the course, and persuaded me to give myself to Christ. I gave him my name and address, and he sent me a card at Christmas." The same evening it rained so much when the workers arrived at the market place that a meeting was impossible, so, led by a cornet and a concertina, they marched back to Priory Place schoolroom, the headquarters for the week, and at the meeting held there two souls were won for Christ. Other definite cases there were, the servants of one of the hosts accepting salvation through the instrumentality of the missioner guest.

J. J. H.

After singing the Gospel on the Doncaster racecourse on the "St. Leger" day, and distributing much literature, Mr. Bob Johnson took a rest from singing and speaking on the following day, devoting the time (until rain commenced to fall heavily) to parading the city with boards bearing Scripture references and the words, "To-day's prospects." Some Christian friends gathered for an indoor meeting of praise, which lasted until nearly midnight.

THE OPEN-AIR MISSION CAMPAIGN.

It was an unspeakable joy to members of the Open-Air Mission to be able once more to proclaim the Gospel on the occasion of the races. On the Sunday several pulpits of the chapels and mission halls were occupied by some of the evangelists, while others of their number conducted services on the London Road. At all of these gatherings there were large attendances, and the message of the speakers was applied to many hearts in the power of the Spirit. On Monday afternoon some members of the band paid a visit to the Union and Infirmary, where, through the kindness of the matron, every facility was offered for all to hear the Gospel.

On the race days, Tuesday to Friday, meetings were held in the Market Place at 11 a.m., continued on the racecourse from 12 to 2 p.m., and again in the town at 7.30. Each afternoon the evangelists were employed in distributing tracts to the crowds as they returned from the course, and in this way some 50,000 tracts and leaflets were put into the hands of the people.

It was interesting to notice how willingly these were received. God will surely bless this seed scattered so widely.

A notable feature of all the meetings was the number who came under the spell of the Word as spoken, and at the close of each meeting many men and women came forward for converts' cards.

A man came up to our ring on the course, and stated that the previous evening he had picked up what he thought was a bookmaker's note book, but which was really a Marked Testament. He had been led to read it that night, and had been so blessed by the reading that now he would on no account part with the book. He gave his name and address, and asked for a convert's card with a view to signing it.

On another occasion, a young lad was convicted that he was in the path of error, and hearing that there was a band of evangelists working on the course, he sought them, but without success. On his return from the course, he received a tract from the hand of a member of the band, and a little further on he received a second. He passed on to the town, but was constrained to return and seek an interview with the tract distributor. The one from whom he had received the second tract had left, but he continued to retrace his steps till he met the first, and making himself known to him, he was taken into a neighbouring friend's house, and after a conversation over the open Bible, he unreservedly gave himself to the Lord. and so God has graciously signified that the work in His name, carried on by this little band of workers, was not in vain, but that He was setting His seal upon it, and that souls were being saved. On the Saturday the band dispersed, with hearts full of praise and thanksgiving, for fresh spheres of labour, some to Leicester and some to Scotland.

C. A. R. Sage, Colonel.

Liqueurs in Sweets.—An esteemed correspondent calls attention to a new danger to which children are exposed. He states that some of the chocolates imported from Austria are full of brandy or other strong liqueurs. These are bought and thoughtlessly given to children, and a taste for spirits is generated. Parents will do well to avoid establishments where these pernicious confections are served out, and thus protest against a practice which, if unchecked, cannot fail to have widespread evil consequences.

The Boys' Brigade.—Some interesting figures concerning the growth of the Boys' Brigade were given at the annual meeting of the Council for the United Kingdom, held at Belfast on Friday. The total enrolled strength, including the United States and the Colonies, is now returned as follows:—1,950 companies, 6,700 officers, and over 87,000 boys. One of the most important developments during the year has been the formation of a London council, and the opening of an office in the Metropolis. The report of the London Committee is in every way satisfactory, and shows that this new departure has been abundantly justified by results. All the companies are, of course, connected with some church or Sunday-school.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Gipsy Smith at Douglas.

ANOTHER effort has been made by the Nonconformist Churches in Douglas, Isle of Man, to meet the spiritual needs of the visitors to the island. A mission has been conducted in Victoria Street Church by Gipsy Smith. On the first Saturday a workers' meeting was addressed by the Gipsy, at which a large number were present. On the first Sunday the spacious church was crammed to its utmost capacity, and both morning and evening overflow meetings were held in the school adjoining, and were conducted by Revs. Isaac Shimmin and W. H. Heap. Each evening service was marked by decisions. Arrangements have been made for the newly-appointed Wesley deaconess to visit the resident converts. On September 7, Gipsy Smith gave his popular lecture, "From Gipsy Tent to Pulpit," when the church was packed, and for over two hours the missioner held his audience by the wonderful story he had to tell.

Mr. W. R. Lane at Blackheath, Staffs.

During the last few days a very effective mission has been held at Blackheath, Staffs. The Free Church Council secured the services of Mr. W. R. Lane. The mission lasted only for ten days, but we believe that every church in the neighbourhood has received a fresh and mighty spiritual impetus. Mr. Lane is a model missioner; he does not believe in rushing his hearers into the inquiry-room, but seeks thoroughness. That is the reason that he spent the first few nights in exposing and denouncing sin. Many thought he was hitting too hard, but if Mr. Lane knows how to smite, he knows also how to speak the healing word. Some were offended; but if the Cross was an offence to such it was an attraction to others, and many were converted. We are thankful to God for raising up such a powerful preacher.

D. Joseph Price, Congregational Minister.

St. George's Cross Tent, Glasgow.

The special mission which was begun at St. George's Cross Tent, Glasgow, on the last Sabbath in August, is being prosecuted with vigour allied to prayer and faith, and captures are being made for Christ from among the unconverted. On the second Sabbath the meetings were large, the preaching, as usual, Scriptural and earnest, and the workers had the joy of pointing a number to Him who came to seek and save the lost. A special endeavour, with the aid of a brass band and a large open-air march, was made on the Monday following, resulting in a large meeting inside, and an ingathering of souls. The evangelist, Mr. Harry Young, has preached the Gospel in the power of God, and his ministry has met with much acceptance. Mr. Richard Hill now takes up the work. J. C.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

Mr. James B. Wookey has just taken a fortnight's mission in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, E. It is many years since his voice had been heard in the great building, but not a few who came to hear him remembered the blessings vouchsafed to them through the ministry of the Word by this servant of God. Mr. Wookey has lost none of his old power of conveying the truth. The straight, manly, yet delicate way in which he deals with some sins rivets the attention of his listeners, and the silence sometimes while he is denouncing sin becomes almost painful. The atoning work of Christ he placed before his hearers as the only remedy for the shocking leprosy of sin, and his faithful proclamation of the unsearchable riches of Christ was rewarded by men and women each night during the mission responding to the earnest invitation to meet Christian workers in the inquiry-room. The attendances have been above the average for this time of the year, and Christians, too, have received blessing.

Mr. J. W. C. Fegan at Uckfield, Sussex.

Mr. Fegan (founder of the well-known homes) and his wife, have visited Uckfield with their boys from Southwark and Ramsgate, numbering 160, and have been camping on ground kindly lent by Mr. W. Holmes, under charge of the officers of the Homes. Although the weather has been very unfavourable, the boys have thoroughly enjoyed their outing, and every need has been supplied for their comfort. Apart from the service rendered to the country in providing for these poor boys, Mr. Fegan has been doing a great work for the Lord in Uckfield. A large tent has been erected, providing room for upwards of 2,000 people, and at some of the services it has been crowded. A great spiritual awakening is manifest in Uckfield; hundreds are already thanking God to-day for the visit, and this has only been the ploughing and sowing—the reaping is to follow. Mr. Fegan began his mission work on August 9, and for the first week held no week-night services; but such a deep interest was shown by all denominations in the town—some closing their Sunday evening services—that the evangelist arranged to continue the services till the end of the present month. Many of the sick have been visited far and near with blessed results. Mr. H. H. Saunders, a converted operatic singer, has rendered great service by his singing.

On Thursday evening last, the great tent was blown down, and the boys' tents nearly all brought to the ground during the storm. Happily, no serious damage was done, and the lads found shelter for the night in the Congregational schoolrooms. Through the kindness of sympathizing friends, a more suitable position has been obtained for the tent.

Infidel Battle-Grounds Abandoned.

The old battle-ground of the Midland Railway Arches, N.W., has been lost to infidelity for some time, and silence reigns supreme in the place that once resounded with the noisy declarations of those of whom Cowper speaks, who:—

"Laugh at all they trembled at before,
And, joining the freethinkers' brutal roar,
Swallow the two grand nostrums they dispense,
That Scripture lies, and blasphemy is sense."

Happily, that "dispensary" is closed. My last visit to the above was when I answered the present leader of the infidel party in London, who spoke on "salvation," but failed to quote a single text where the word occurred.

A yet greater victory has been achieved in Regent's Park. For some time no infidel meeting has been held here, but having heard of a well-known lecturer from the infidel platform being converted to God, I not only heard his public recantation of infidelity on Sunday last, but a very able and earnest confession of his faith in our Lord Jesus and a warm defence of the evidences and fruits of Christianity. The Lord be praised for this signal victory!

But though there was no expounder of infidelity in Regent's Park, there were several good meetings where Christ was being uplifted. The German Association were holding a service in German; two or three other brethren were hard at it; and there was a meeting of the St. Pancras Free Church Council, at which nine ministers were down to speak. I was able to show my fellowship with these good friends, and spoke briefly, and then hurried away to Hyde Park, though they continued the meeting till 5.30. While present I listened with profit to Revs. E. J. Dukes and Z. B. Woffendale, the chairman being Rev. G. A. Suttle.

But the above seem to be eclipsed by the following which came to hand through the brother who was preaching with me in Hyde Park last Lord's Day:—A friend of his has been answering an infidel lecturer of the East End so effectively, that, though the latter had three regular meeting places, indoors and out, for a long time, yet, since the friend in question has dealt exhaustively with his arguments, he (the infidel) has given up all three meetings.

Tent Work in Belfast.

A peculiar interest attaches itself to the work of the Lord in the north of Ireland, as the scene in times past of the marvellous activity of the Spirit of God in saving grace, and the Christian is always drawn to details of the doings of the same Lord in this place.

Just six years ago Mr. David Rea was led to pitch his large canvas tent, capable of seating upwards of 2,000 people, in what are known as the Chapel Fields, Belfast, situated in the very midst of the large linen warehouses, and here for upwards of six months nightly the Gospel was preached with blessing and power. As an instance of the abiding character of the work, I may add that I have visited at times since the houses of many of those awakened and saved during the progress of those meetings, and the beauty, order, and godly atmosphere that pervaded many of these houses, which formerly were the scenes of debauchery, rejoiced my heart. The Word of God, the blessed instrument of their quickening, seemed to rule every relationship, and the visitor could see that the unseen Guest was honoured in these households. How blessed to see them sitting around the book of God, engrossed with its precious truths, while the visitor also was made to participate to his own edification!

The tent has again been pitched in the scene of these former labours, and for five weeks past Mr. Rea, in conjunction with other servants of the Lord, has been preaching the Gospel in its simplicity to large and attentive gatherings. Already there are droppings of blessing, and a number, one has reason to believe, have passed from death unto life, and there is "the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees" (2 Sam. v. 24), a general bestirring and spirit of expectancy among the people of God of all denominations that the arm of the Lord is about to be made bare in our midst in saving power; that arm that has plucked many a brand from the burning, and been folded around many a lamb.

The meetings are of the plainest type; a primitive simplicity pervades everything. The singing is most hearty and the hymns used are of the old soul-stirring type that characterised the '59 Revival. The addresses are pointed and conscience-probing, and more or less of a sifting character, calculated to lead the saint to tighten his grasp of the hand of the Blessed Saviour, and to mercifully open the eyes of poor devil-deluded souls.

The fellowship of all God's people everywhere is earnestly requested for this work in hearty, believing prayer, and also their praise to the God of all grace for His good hand in our midst already. C.F.

Rescue and Evangelization Mission, Sheffield.

We thank the readers of The Christian for their intercession on behalf of the opening of the Alhambra Theatre, Attercliffe, and the open-air services in connection therewith. We praise God for two seekers who professed to give themselves to Him on Saturday night last at the open-air meeting, and six others on Sunday night. There were a good number present for the opening service, when Rev. I. M. Ward, Baptist minister, gave the address; and more in the service at eight o'clock—it is supposed there were about one thousand. Let us pray until there is a thorough awakening. (Mrs.) E. Colbridge.

Christian Endeavour at Southend.

The Tent Mission at Westcliff-on-Sea, organized by the Christian Endeavourers and the Evangelization Society (originally arranged for three weeks, but extended to five weeks on account of its success), has been brought to a very happy termination. The visit of the evangelist, Mr. Albert E. Sims, has resulted in many being brought to a knowledge of the Saviour.

The Endeavourers made the most of their opportunities. Ten thousand cards—specially designed to reach the unconverted, were distributed in a regular house-to-house visitation. Trains and electric cars were met, and the beach and cliffs well canvassed. Unsaved friends brought in by workers have gone away rejoicing in a new found Saviour. Many prayers were gloriously answered. The Bible-readings given by the missioner on three afternoons each week were much blessed. Children's services were held four days each week, in which great interest has been manifested by the children. Scholars from three different colleges attended, and many were blessed. The thanks of the parents, and of the principal of one of the colleges, have been expressed for this work. Great sympathy and help has been given by the churches and the ministers, and the residents in the neighbourhood.

Indeed, God gave the mission and the missioner great acceptance on every hand, the workers rallying around and carrying out any work assigned in a very loving and hearty manner, with the result that the whole place has been aroused, and we trust that the force of the battle cry, "Westcliff for Christ," inscribed on a large flag (made by the workers) which marked the entrance to the tent, has been realized to a very great extent. The Evangelization Society has rendered great help by not only supplying the evangelist and the tent, but also by giving large quantities of small Gospels and tracts for distribution. For all these blessings, Glory be to God!

C. R. Downton Davis,
Hon. Recording Sec. S.E. Essex C.E. Union.

The city of Philadelphia has for some time been noted for its outdoor evangelistic services. On request, the chief of police of that city collected statistics for the last Sunday in July, when it was found that 127 meetings were held, with an aggregate attendance of about 25,000 people. These meetings were conducted by twenty-two organizations, representing various denominations.

Rev. J. Tolefree Parr has just concluded a united mission at Horsforth, Leeds. There have been over 100 enquirers and signatories to the total abstinence pledge. The congregations have been very large, and the two lectures Mr. Parr delivered—"The Down Line," and "Eight Years in Darkest London"—were thrilling almost beyond description. Best of all, we have the conviction that the spiritual harvest has only been commenced by Mr. Parr's powerful influence in our midst. (Rev.) C. S. Douglas, Secretary.

A fifteen-days' mission has just been concluded in the Gospel Mission Hall, Fulwell Road, Upper Teddington. The services were taken by Mr. Thompson and Mr. Henry Collins, from the Evangelization Society. The clear Gospel addresses given by both evangelists were owned by the Holy Spirit in salvation to some and restoration to the backslider, while the Lord's people had much blessing and comfort from the mission. The prayer-meetings on Saturdays were precious seasons to believers. M. H.

Rev. John McNeill paid his fifth visit to Blackpool this season on Sabbath last for the Y.M.C.A. services in the Hippodrome. There have been three services each Sabbath, and the attendances have averaged from five to six thousand persons from all parts of the kingdom. Mr. McNeill will conclude his series of services on Sabbath next. Much good has resulted from his labours. L. J.

For the past few months several local friends have been holding open-air meetings on the sands at Rhyl, which have proved a source of blessing both to the unconverted and to many visiting Christians who gladly came forward and helped in the singing as well as, in many cases, giving a testimony to the saving and keeping power of the Lord Jesus Christ. Many such visitors were thankful that they had been given an opportunity during their stay of thus witnessing. This may encourage Christians at other places to go forth and witness in the open-air. M.

Mr. John Denning (Chilmsine House, near Wellington, Somerset), writes :—"Our village tent, that for many years has been used in different parts of this county, in great blessing to many precious souls, and has been in constant use during this summer in four needy villages in Somerset, was brought to a complete wreck on Thursday night last by the sudden and terrific gale that passed over these parts. It has been taken great care of and done good service during the nine years it has been in use. I am anxious to replace it so that it may be ready for further work in the villages of Devon and Somerset."

Mrs. S. J. Alexander conducts open-air meetings every Lord's Day evening in High Street, Ilford. Hundreds gather and listen to the glorious news proclaimed. Frequently these meetings are continued from seven to ten p.m. Fresh evidences of the blessing bestowed upon these meetings come to light daily. The work among women also grows apace. The Young Women's Christian Institute is much appreciated, and it is anticipated that the cheery rooms in the High Street will prove a source of attraction during the winter months. The women's meeting is a source of comfort and help to its numerous members, many of whom can only leave their household duties for this one service.

Rev. Jesse Mayo is having much encouragement in fishing villages on the Norfolk coast. He is especially cheered by the hearty co-operation of his ministerial brethren in the places visited, pulpits being readily offered, and in many cases local arrangements have been either set aside or merged into special efforts to reach the people. Mr. Mayo writes :—"It is really good to find how the simple presentation of the Gospel is felt to be the only panacea for existing darkness and apathy. I wish the good Lord would give a real revival; it is much needed. Most of my work for some time will be among villages." Mr. Mayo could make good use of a lantern in these out-of-the-way places. Perhaps some reader can lend him one, or help to supply the need. Address, Winterton, near Yarmouth.

The tent mission commenced at Lisburn Road Wesleyan Church, Belfast, by Mr. James Dixon, over three months ago, continues to prosper. The Christian Advocate says :—"There is a steady increase in the numbers attending, and the spiritual results are alike cheering. Many non-churchgoers have been reached and helped. The children's services, conducted by Mrs. Dixon, have proved a great blessing to the young. Revs. R. Crawford Johnson, D.D., John Elliott, Pierce Martin, J. O. Price, and others have, by their presence and help, evinced much interest in the work. Many prominent laymen amongst the various churches co-operated in the work, and this marked token of Christian unity has tended much to the success of the labours of the evangelist. The meetings will be conducted to the end of the present month."

In spite of unfavourable weather, the committee of Well Hall and Eltham Y.M.C.A. commenced a week's mission on September 6 in a tent lent by Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, on ground granted for the purpose by the Royal Arsenal Co-operative Society. The Gospel was preached nightly to large congregations, and souls were blessed. Among the speakers were Revs. John Wilson and W. L. McKenzie, Dr. McKilliam, and Messrs. Jordan, Jackman, and Bennett Anderson. There was a time of refreshing at the meeting for ladies on Thursday last, addressed by Mrs. C. Orde Browne. Last Lord's Day there were gatherings for children and for men only, as well as an open Gospel meeting. Such was the blessing resulting that the committee have arranged with Mr. Bennett Anderson to continue preaching during the present week. William Soper, Hon. Sec.

Prayer is earnestly asked that a suitable home may speedily be found for an aged lady where she may have help and guidance in spiritual things.

For the forthcoming Conference at Salisbury, September 21-25, that this happy union of those that fear the Lord and think upon His name, may be greatly blessed.

For the Dublin Christian Convention, commencing Sunday, September 27, that the presence of God may be manifested in all the meetings; that many souls may be saved, and the name of our Lord Jesus Christ greatly magnified.

For the forthcoming mission at Dublin, by Gipsy Smith, that all may be done in singleness of heart for His glory and the salvation of souls; that there may be a great ingathering of souls; and that the children of God may be revived.

For a policeman in a north-eastern town who, for many years, lived a quiet, consistent, Christian life. However, in an unguarded moment he used an oath. Several years have since passed, and Satan has so well used one evil word as to persuade him that he could never have been a Christian. He still knows that Christ alone can save him, but needs the faith to abandon himself again to Him.

Personalia.

Dr. Baedeker has returned to England after his Continental tour, in the course of which he visited and addressed a number of churches and conferences.

The condition of Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon has caused deep anxiety of late to her many friends; but the latest intelligence regarding the esteemed sufferer speaks of an increase in strength.

Mr. James W. Ross, of 9, Bartholomew Road, Kentish Town, N.W., has issued his prospectus of "Bunyan Readings." Secretaries and others desiring to provide for winter evening meetings should apply for particulars.

Mr. George Clarke, the evangelist, has ceased to be editor of the Sunday Strand, and will now devote all his time to conducting missions. As he is fully engaged until next May or June, this will not be difficult. For our own part we think he has acted wisely in concentrating his interest in the work of winning souls, in which he has been greatly used of God.

Mr. and Mrs. George Soltau, 85, Lordship Park, N., will sail for the United States on the 24th inst., to take up work in the Bible Teachers' Training School, under Professor W. W. White. Their New York address will be 83, East Fifty-fifth Street. Their second daughter, Miss G. Eleanor Soltau, L.R.C.P. and S., E., has been accepted by the United Free Church of Scotland Mission Committee for service in India, and will sail on November 6 for Ajmere, Rajputana, to undertake medical work.

Rev. R. Blackmore, Wesleyan Chaplain, Wesleyan Manse, Mhow, C. India, will be grateful for unsold papers for distribution among soldiers in the barracks and hospitals.

Dr. G. Campbell Morgan's Visit.—Taking advantage of the presence in this country of Rev. Dr. G. Campbell Morgan, the committee of the Central Y.M.C.A. have secured from Dr. Morgan a promise to deliver a course of addresses to young men in Exeter Hall, September 21-25. These meetings, which will commence at 8 p.m., are exclusively for men; but in order to meet the wishes of a large number of friends arrangements have also been made for afternoon Bible readings to be given each day at 3.30 p.m., which will be open to the general public, ladies and gentlemen. Tickets for reserved seats for each series of meetings may be obtained on application to the secretary.

Welsh Notes.

AMONG the numerous commemorations of the centenary of the British and Foreign Bible Society is the publication of a special edition of Rev. T. Charles' Bible Dictionary. The idea is a happy one, inasmuch as the author of this great Welsh classic was the founder of the Bible Society.

The Welsh Congregationalists of Rhostyllen are taking steps to honour the memory of "Williams of Wern." He was among the foremost of Welsh Congregational ministers, and is one of the trio whom Welsh Nonconformists can never forget. What John Elias was to Calvinistic Methodism, and Christmas Evans to the Baptist denomination, "Williams of Wern" was to Welsh Congregationalism.

News has reached this country from the Khassie Hills in Assam, India, that Dr. Griffiths, one of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist missionaries labouring there, has broken down in health, and will have to return home. Dr. Griffiths is one of the most experienced medical missionaries in India, and his departure from the scene of his labour will be a serious loss to the work.

The meetings of the Welsh Baptist Union are to be held at Everton Village, Liverpool, September 21-24. The retiring president is Rev. H. Harries, Treherbert. The programme will consist of conferences and public services, at which several of the leading ministers and laymen of the denomination will take part. Considerable interest is being taken in the election of president. Among the names to be submitted to the Union are Rev. Peter Williams, of Bootle, and Mr. E. Thomas, Mayor of Cardiff.

Irish Notes.

THE annual convention for the deepening of spiritual life has just been held at Kingstown, under the chairmanship of Professor Mackintosh. Rev. Charles Inwood was the principal speaker.

The Qua Iboe Mission, West Africa, appears to be in a more prosperous and hopeful condition than ever before. There are four schools now going, and a heathen headman in Mepon has, with the aid of the missionary, Mr. Baillie, brought out his idols and fetishes and publicly burned them.

The weather for several weeks has been most unfavourable for harvest operations, with the result that the hay, corn, and other crops are seriously suffering, and that the outlook for the country is gloomy in the extreme. Last Sunday earnest prayer was offered in many churches to the Lord of the Harvest, that He would mercifully grant suitable weather for the ingathering of the fruits of the earth.

An interesting conference in connection with the Presbyterian Zenana Mission has just been held in Coleraine under the presidency of Mrs. Irwin, of Castlerock. Addresses were delivered by Mrs. Jacob (India), Miss M. Williams (China), and Miss Irwin (India). There was a large attendance of ladies representing the various Presbyterian churches in North Derry, and there were also several missionaries present.

The annual assembly of the Council of the Boys' Brigade of the United Kingdom has for the first time been held in Belfast. A luncheon was provided for members by Sir W. Quartus Ewart, Bart., President of the Belfast Battalion, and tea by the vice-president. Mr. T. F. Shillington, J.P. The movement is progressing in Belfast, where there are now thirty-three companies, 110 officers, forty-three staff-sergeants, and nearly 1,600 boys, being an increase during the past year of twenty-six officers and 622 boys. A united church parade service was held in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, under the presidency of Sir James Henderson, and was attended by over 1,000 boys. Altogether the movement seems to be performing a useful work.

Missionary Trials in Jamaica. — Besides doing much damage to churches and chapels (to which reference was made last week) the terrible cyclone which swept over Jamaica a few weeks ago has had the effect of retarding the progress of Christian enterprises which were being advanced. Rev. W. A. Tucker, Baptist minister at Spanish Town, tells of efforts being made to erect a chapel at Bower Wood, a town with a population of 500. The old chapel became so dilapidated that it was found necessary to take it down. The foundation-stone of the new church was laid last year, and after subscribing £20 the members have given labour worth £25. The chapel is estimated to cost £100 only, but through the destruction of their crops the people are now unable to raise the necessary balance. Mr. Tucker is hopeful that friends with means will show practical sympathy with this struggling church. He may be addressed at Spanish Town, Jamaica.

The Churches.

Church of England.

The memorial over Mr. Kensit's grave in Hampstead cemetery is nearly completed, and will be unveiled on the afternoon of October 10 by Mr. J. A. Kensit.

Dr. Barlow, the Dean of Peterborough, met with rather a severe accident last week. Whilst superintending the arrangements in Peterborough Cathedral, in connection with the unveiling of a soldiers' memorial window, he had a bad fall, injuring his face, besides sustaining a severe shock. By the doctor's orders he has been confined to the Deanery.

It has been decided to hold, at the Church Missionary House, 33, Park Street, Bristol, during the Church Congress week, an exhibition of curios—restricted, as far as possible, to those directly connected with the religions of the peoples—from various parts of the mission field. The exhibition is being organized by the C.M.S. (in conjunction with the Medical Mission Auxiliary), the C.E.Z.M.S., the Colonial and Continental Church Society, and the London Jews' Society.

Protestants will note with thankfulness the firmness of the new Bishop of Exeter. Dr. Robertson, it seems, has issued stringent directions to Rev. H. M. Downton, whom the Keble Trustees have appointed to succeed the late Rev. G. R. Prynne at St. Peter's, Plymouth; for a number of the lay communicants at that church have presented a memorial to Dr. Robertson, in which they respectfully approach his lordship with "dismay and apprehension" at hearing it reported that he intends "to curtail Catholic privileges." They refer more especially to the reservation of the Sacrament.

A conference of Cornish Sunday-school teachers was held a few days ago at St. Gerrans, Rev. H. J. Martin, rector of the parish, presiding over a representative gathering. Archdeacon Cornish gave a helpful address on the responsibilities of the teachers in the Sunday-school. Teachers, he said, must aim at a high ideal. Real strong work is wanted, and men as well as women are needed to teach. If men are ashamed to teach, then the boys, when they grow older, will be ashamed to do it.

Congregational.

In view of recent statistics showing a decline in Sunday-school attendance, the Congregational churches in the Aberdare Valley have banded together and formed a large united class, having as its chief object the training of qualified teachers.

The work of renovating the interior of Tolmers Square Church, London, has been done by the members working in the evening under the direction of the pastor, Rev. F. Hastings. The volunteer workmen have also provided gratuitously the cost of wood required for the alterations.

Rev. John Holden has commenced his ministry at at Bowdon, as co-pastor with Dr. McKennal. The church has been closed for three weeks for renovation, during which time the congregation have worshipped with the Presbyterians. A new branch church at Broadheath is to be opened this month.

At Winchmore Hill, N. (Rev. Arthur Jarvis), a purely evangelistic service was held on a recent Lord's day evening, and was attended by a good congregation. The church is making good progress, the membership having doubled since November, 1900, and the minister and deacons are considering the question of building a larger church.

The Sheffield Congregational Extension Committee have completed a portion of their extension scheme by the opening of a new church at Darnal. The building is seated for 500 worshippers, and the lecture hall has accommodation for 350 scholars. Up to the present the church has been housed in a structure which has become too small to accommodate the increasing number of adherents.

Baptist.

The 48th anniversary of Junction Street Church, Derby (Rev. P. A. Hudgell), has been held. Encouraging reports were presented concerning the position, progress, and prospects of the church.

The first baptizing service has been held at the Central Mission, Bradford, when three candidates were immersed by Rev. A. H. Tolhurst. Two deaconesses have been appointed, Sister Ruth and Sister Dorothy.

At Cavendish Church, Ramsgate, on Lord's Day evening, after a solemn service in memory of Mr. John C. Stone (who had been suddenly killed while at work) three believers were baptized by Pastor T. Hancocks.

Rev. James Alderson, of Albert Street Baptist Church, Keighley, has been compelled to resign the pastorate by reason of ill-health. Mr. Alderson has ministered to the church at Keighley for sixteen years. His removal will be the occasion of widespread regret, not only in the church, but amongst the townspeople, with whom he is held in high esteem.

The anniversary of Pastor T. Spurgeon's birthday is to be celebrated at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Monday, September 21, upon which day Pastor and Mrs. Spurgeon, assisted by Pastor and Mrs. Sawday, will attend in the vestry from four until seven o'clock, to welcome friends and to receive their gifts for the work of the Lord carried on at the Tabernacle. This day of thanksgiving will conclude with a rally of the societies and institutions connected with the Tabernacle, commencing at 7.30 p.m. It is now ten years since Mr. Spurgeon undertook the pastorate.

Methodist.

On Sunday evening next, at Selly Oak Chapel (Birmingham), a special sermon will be preached by the President of the French Methodist Conference (Rev. Jules Guiton), in aid of French Missions.

A cablegram received from Rev. F. Bavin, superintendent of the Jamaica Mission of the United Methodist Free Churches, indicates that many of the church and school buildings were destroyed by the cyclone, but no life was lost.

Under the will of the late Mr. P. Pownall Brocklehurst, of Hurdsfield House, Macclesfield, the New Connexion Sunday-school in Macclesfield receives £500. This school is one of the oldest and largest in the town, and some well-known public men received their first religious training in it.

A new Wesleyan church at Little Lever, Farnworth, was opened last week by Miss Helen Ashcroft, of Southport, in the presence of a large assembly. The building, which will seat 500 persons, replaces a chapel which has done duty since 1860. The dedication service was conducted by Rev. Marshall Hartley, president of Conference.

There are now about 500 University students going to Newcastle-on-Tyne in connection with the Colleges of Science and Medicine. Rev. A. L. Fillingham (28, Archbold Terrace, Jesmond, Newcastle-on-Tyne), will be glad to welcome any such as are going for the first time from Methodist homes. "It will be a pleasure to do anything which would make their student life more happy and helpful, especially in introducing them to Christian friends and work."

Methodist visitors to the Matlock district during the present summer will have observed, with pleasure, the progress being made with the erection of the new chapel at Darley Dale. Like the adjoining institute, it will be associated with the name of the late Sir Joseph Whitworth, who resided at Stancliffe Hall, close by. The villagers, thanks to the baronet's beneficence, are already richer than most in the enjoyment of educational and recreative facilities, and local Methodism may be considered happy in the prospect of possessing this new chapel.

At the village of Hittisleigh, situated about sixteen miles from Exeter, there has been for many years a Bible Christian cause, and much good has been accomplished. The old chapel has become dilapidated, and the friends who carry on the work are compelled to rebuild. They are zealous, but nearly the whole of them belong to the labouring class, and are unable to raise the £210 required. Nevertheless, they have raised about £40. It is at this chapel that Christian worship in the village is chiefly maintained. Communications may be sent to Rev. Lewis H. Court, The Manse, Whiddon Down, Okehampton.

Presbyterian.

The deputies to the Waldensian Synod have arrived at Torre Pellice. Dr. Macphail, Moderator of Synod, being unable to go on this occasion, his place has been taken by the Synod Clerk, Rev. W. M. Macphail, of Streatham.

Rev. John More, New Road, Woolwich, whose health has become seriously impaired during the last year or two, intimated that, owing to the inexorable verdict of the doctors, he would be compelled to resign his charge. Mr. More, besides conducting the work of the ministry in connection with New Road Church, is also chaplain to the Presbyterian troops in Woolwich. The church members have cordially endorsed a proposal that the matter should lie over till next meeting, in order to find a solution of the difficulty, which would enable them to retain the services of Mr. More.

Society of Friends.

John William Graham, of Dalton Hall, Manchester, was present lately at meetings at Llandrindod Wells. He had acceptable service in the meeting for worship in the morning, and in the evening gave an address on "The Lord's Supper—an historical study from the standpoint of the Society of Friends." There were good attendances, especially in the evening, including many visitors from all parts of the country.

At the Weston-super-Mare Mission of the Protestant Reformation Society (superintended by Mr. Herbert Wolstenholme), one feature of the work during recent weeks has been a series of lectures on the Epistle to the Romans. These have been given with a view to showing the contrast between the doctrines taught to the Primitive Church and the Papacy. Large gatherings have been held on the sea-front, and many Roman Catholics have quietly listened to the Gospel there proclaimed. At the close of one service a lady handed Mr. Wolstenholme three scapulars and a medal, saying she had no further use for them, and thanking God for a free and full salvation through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

The annual public meeting of the Sunday-school at Brookland Church, Bristol, has been held. The church was crowded, as it was all day on the Sunday when Rev. J. Pickup, of Widnes, with much power preached the anniversary sermons. Mr. J. S. Fry took the chair. Mr. Cann (secretary) read a highly-satisfactory report, showing that the Sunday-school was composed of 122 classes, with 135 officers, and 2,545 scholars, the average attendance per Sunday being 2,328 scholars. During the year the scholars collected £269 for the work. In the course of his interesting address, Mr. Fry said that a very large proportion of those who take the lead in various walks of life have been Sunday-school scholars. There is no better training for men of business, professional men, or for any sphere, than that to be obtained in the Sunday-school. Mr. J. Priscott followed with helpful words to the teachers. He himself was a scholar thirty years ago in the school of which he and Mr. Cann are now the leaders with a wonderful band of efficient helpers. Rev. J. Pickup and Mr. Frank Weaver also addressed the meeting.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. Dr. M'MORRIS, Presbyterian, of Manorcunningham, Ireland. For many years he was Clerk of the Synod of Derry and Omagh, to whose Moderatorship he was also raised.—On September 4, suddenly, Rev. D. P. PACKER, Baptist minister, of Gateshead.—Rev. DANIEL M'LEAN, of Moncrieff United Free Church, Alloa. Mr. M'Lean was an able minister, and held in high esteem. As convener of the Care of Youth Committee of the United Presbyterian Church he did much active work, and was widely known.—Mrs. BROCKWAY (wife of Rev. W. G. Brockway, of the London Missionary Society), a capable and enthusiastic missionary. She was married to Mr. Brockway in 1887, and four years later they removed to Berhampur. Since 1894 Mr. Brockway has been pastor of Union Chapel, Calcutta, and in this sphere also Mrs. Brockway's service will long be remembered.—Mr. T. H. PUMFREY, a member of the Jamaica Row Congregational Church, Bermondsey, for half a century, and during the whole of that time a teacher in the Sunday-school. He was followed to the grave at Nunhead Cemetery by a throng of men and women of middle age, who once were infants in his class.—At Dublin, Mr. H. E. BROWN, a devoted worker in connection with the Methodist Church.—At Dublin, Mrs. HAMILTON, wife of Rev. Mr. Hamilton, M.A., curate of Castleknock, and daughter of Rev. T. B. Robertson, rector of St. Munchin's, Limerick.—Aged thirty, Mr. JAMES LAWSON, of the London Missionary Society, at Mberengi, Central Africa. He was a son of Mr. R. P. Lawson, of Manchester, and was married in April last, his bride leaving home to join him in his far-off station.—Rev. THOMAS SMITH, of Helmshore, aged seventy-five. After forty-eight years' ministerial service he was superannuated by the Primitive Methodist Conference in 1897. He would have been appointed President of the Conference, but for his refusal to accept nomination owing to defective hearing.

Obituary.

GEORGINA, COUNTESS OF SEAFIELD.

A FAMILIAR figure on Protestant and Evangelical platforms is removed by the death of Georgina, Countess of Seafield, who passed away recently at Mayne House, near Elgin, at an advanced age. The departed lady, who was widow of the ninth Earl of Seafield, was for many years a generous but unobtrusive supporter of religious and philanthropic movements. She was held in high esteem for her earnest life and work, and will be lamented by a wide circle of friends.

MRS. ALICE G. GULICK.

Supporters of Evangelical work in Spain will learn with sorrow that Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick passed away on Monday night last. Mrs. Gulick, president of the International Institute for Girls in Spain, had for thirty years worked for the Christian and higher education of Spanish girls, and, despite the difficulties of such work, had been remarkably effective. For a number of years Mrs. Gulick had been president of the Young Women's Christian Association and of the Women's Christian Temperance Union in Spain. Her rare gifts enabled her to arouse great interest in educational circles in America in the college work for Spanish girls. Mrs. Gulick, who had been in Switzerland all the summer seeking better health, returned to London less than a fortnight since, accompanied by her daughter and her sister (Miss Elizabeth Gordon).

Openings in the Mission Field. — The trustees of the Zambesi Industrial Mission would be glad to hear from several young unmarried men who feel led to offer for missionary work in British Central Africa. Specialists are wanted, as well as ordinary missionaries for the industrial departments. A fully-qualified doctor and a certificated schoolmaster would be very helpful, also a book-keeper and a baker. All should, if possible, have a knowledge of agricultural work. The engagement is for a period of five years. Missionaries must be Evangelical, and willing to work harmoniously with others who may differ from them in some points of church government. The age should be between twenty-three and thirty years. Applicants should apply to the Zambesi Industrial Mission, 6, Colonial Avenue, Minories, E.C.

Blindness and Acute Suffering.

An Old Man, 74 years of age, blind through cancer in the eyes, which is now spreading all over the face. In addition to this sad affliction he is also suffering from an internal disease. He and his aged wife are greatly in need of assistance, as apart from the little their married children are able to give them they have nothing at all to depend on except charity. Who will help to make their old age free from anxiety? Surely pain and blindness is terrible enough without poverty.

The National Blind Relief Society.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Hon. Sec., Rev. J. PULLEIN THOMPSON, The Vicarage, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W.; or at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

THE RAILWAY MISSION
. . AND ITS . .
CONVALESCENT HOMES.

ABOUT 15,000 RAILWAY MEN are injured every year in the United Kingdom by accidents on the line.

Many of these men suffer amputation of one or more limbs, and after discharge from Hospital require nourishing food and fresh air to restore their strength.

THE RAILWAY MISSION CONVALESCENT HOMES at St. Leonard's and Southport provide for the men in their time of weakness.

The Homes urgently need funds. Contributions will be gratefully received by Richard Nixon, Secretary, 1, Adam Street, Strand, London, W.C., who will send collecting boxes in which thank-offerings for journeying mercies may be put for the Homes.

which is a union of 46 Protestant Societies in Great Britain, Ireland, Australia, Canada, and Ceylon, earnestly appeals for immediate generous financial aid for the maintenance and extension of its pioneer work.

Papers explaining the importance of the Federation's operations will be sent to any applicant, and large or small contributions will be thankfully acknowledged.

Modern Reading. A correspondent sends us his experience in seeking suitable literature for perusal while at the seaside. Everywhere, on bookstall, in shop or library, he could find "little else than novels, with daily and comic papers":—

> Not a single biography, or book of travels or history, and scarcely a poem, rewarded my search, and the question was forced upon me—Is this the sole mental food that booksellers or libraries now offer? Are our young people to be trained, or our older people refreshed, only on the lines of thought laid down in these mostly worthless and ofttimes pernicious compositions?

We fear the reply of the bookseller would be that he sells what is most generally asked for, and stocks that which is likely most readily to sell. This is not an age of depth, either in thought or reading. Quite recently a schoolmaster remarked to us upon the difficulty he found in getting boys to take an interest in standard works, even such as those by Sir Walter Scott. Parents need to impress forcibly upon their young folk the dangers of this superficial tendency.

Public Profanity. It would be well if an experiment in the repression of profanity in the streets which has been initiated in Ealing were repeated in every town and village in the country. About a year ago the residents of that suburb formed an Anti-Swearing League, the object of which was to put down offensive language in public places and conveyances. Two inspectors were appointed to warn offenders, and, if necessary, to summon them. At a recent meeting of members it was stated that although in some cases warnings had to be given, it had not been found necessary in a single case to prosecute, and much palpable good had been done. If such steps were more generally taken, a great reformation in public manners would doubtless result.

An Unworthy Device. Seldom have the vagaries of modern journalism hit upon a more objectionable method of forcing public attention than that adopted by the Daily Express in regard to the (voluntarily) "missing" member of its staff. The lady, of whom a minute description was given in the paper, was commissioned to roam about London until recognized by any stranger seeking the £100 offered for her identification. As a result, many young ladies last week were troubled, and sometimes insulted, by the vexatious attentions of irresponsible persons, who made this flimsy excuse for addressing them in public places. Every day, ladies out shopping or walking are subjected to annoyance from aggressive or immoral "men about town," and it is much to be deprecated that a respectable and generally excellent journal should lend itself, even unwittingly, to add to this scandal.

Ethics and The Gospel. It is not infrequently urged against Christianity that the working-classes have had to win their social improvements alone, unaided by the Church of Christ. It is obvious that such statements are far from accurate, for not only has the Gospel of Christ placed a social by the side of the individualistic conception of religion, but the very influence of the Christian faith has rendered such reforms possible and within reach. It is true, indeed, that of late years there has been a more marked "shifting of the emphasis," but the standard has undergone no change in consequence of the wider recognition of the social ideal. Many misunderstandings on both sides will have to be removed before there can be full social healing. Meanwhile, the promulgation of the ethical teaching of our Lord, which now occupies its proper place in many pulpits, will go far to do away with what has been termed "the caste-spirit which dominates both capital and labour."

The Gospel and the World. A contemporary writer, in reviewing certain aspects of modern life, has some wise words to say in regard to one element which certainly calls for eradication. He says:—

> There is a lack of that strong religious repose which is the heritage of the soul stayed on God. The imagination of the people must be tickled by some sort of religious phantasmagoria. And the pulpit suffers from the same sort of disease. Like some poor physicians at their wits' end when face to face with a strange epidemic, so they adopt every craze to try and interest the people. Yet they fail. Why? It is not amusement the people need, but the thunders and lightnings of Sinai to arouse them from spiritual torpor, to recall them to pure and simple ways, to inspire them with that life of service which gives its all as a living sacrifice to better the world.

Mr. Booth, in his monumental volumes, has noted the same need, for he testified to the fact that the "liberalized form of Christianity," as preached from only too many pulpits, makes no headway, and that in those chapels and missions in which the saving results are evident, "the teaching is strictly and even narrowly orthodox."

A Materialized Church. A life needs to be exceptionally vigorous in order to resist the influence of a moribund environment. An enfeebled organism readily becomes the prey of adverse circumstances. We may be certain that when a person succumbs to such influences he has been lacking in life power. What is true of the individual is true of society—the Church included. The most deadening influence at work in the world to-day is that of materialism, whether formulated into a philosophical creed, or operating as a practical force in the affairs of life. An enfeebled Christianity cannot resist this influence; hence we find a practical materialism in many of the churches. Some of the schemes resorted to for the raising of money, or for the attracting of congregations, are purely material, and must take rank with the methods of the world. They are a "success" only in the lowest sense; in the highest, they are a dismal failure. The testimony on behalf of Christ, which the Church exists to offer, can only be truly successful as it reveals a life and results which are spiritual and supernatural. "Abundant life" is the supreme quest for the Christian heart; it and it alone can triumphantly combat materialism in any of its forms.

Questions "Open to Doubt." An opinion was expressed at the late Ministers' Conference at Oxford that it is unwise to introduce into the pulpit "questions which some consider open to doubt." The matter so expressed seems to admit of a dual interpretation. It may mean either: Is a minister to introduce the doubts of individual persons into his discourses in order to refute them? Or: Is he to keep silent about the truths of Scripture because some members in his congregation "consider them open to doubt"? As to the latter, a minister is God's witness to declare the truth of God to men, "whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear"—as God enjoined upon Jonah, to "Go, preach the preaching that I bid thee." But as to the former, great mischief has been done in many churches by ministers airing and answering the doubts of an individual before a whole congregation, thus introducing doubts which had never occurred to most of his hearers. For the sake of young people this is strongly to be deprecated. The right course would be to answer the inquirer in private, not in public.

Patience Up to Date. The Apostle James addressed himself to the times in which he lived when he wrote: "Let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing" (James i. 4). Canon Newbolt has recently amplified the thoughts which gather round this utterance precept, and has given thereto a trite application to the controversies of to-day:—

> Patience, dear friend; patience, while the last criticism is devoured by one more recent still, until after fifty or sixty years' dispute, as it has been with the Johannine authorship of the Fourth Gospel, the controversy comes back to where it was before, and he who stands on the high ground of truth, sees the storms chase each other up and down the valley and away to the sea, while he is in the sun all the time. The system of God is a system which postulates patience.

The Gate Beautiful. Only those devoid of physical deformity, an old tradition tells us, could enter through the "Beautiful Gate of the Temple" at Jerusalem, outside which the lame man of Acts iii. 2 lay, asking alms. This is a parable of higher things. The beauty of nature can be realized only by the healthy-minded. The temple of high ideas is closed against those of vitiated tastes and debased minds. The "ideal man," hidden behind the outer court of ordinary people, can be seen and recognised only by those qualified by sympathy and insight and love to know Him. The finer experiences of religion and fellowship with God are the exclusive possession of the "pure in heart" and the humble of spirit. The reason why so many miss the best rewards and promises of the Gospel, is that their nature is marred by some spiritual deformity. To all these comes the word, "In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk!"

The Higher Life. Dr. Russel Wallace and his critics, who are at war in the Reviews in regard to man's place in the universe, might well take to heart Ruskin's remark that it is of more importance to consider whither we are going than whence we came. The discussion is of importance, however, as revealing how little agreement there is between those scientists who lay so much stress upon the value of the modern scientific method, and those who hold the old-fashioned faith in the inspired statements of the Word of God. Dr. Russel Wallace, it would seem, does not think that it is at all probable that the delicate adjustments and numerous physical and chemical combinations which "are required for the development and maintenance of life" are likely to be found again in any planet; therefore, he concludes that our earth is the only inhabited planet in the stellar universe. The only Book which gives us any reasonable account of the creation of this planet goes on to tell us that God so loved it that He "sent his only begotten Son into the world that we might live through him" (1 John iv. 9). There is, at any rate, no doubt as to what is necessary for the attainment of that life.

The Things Unseen. The change of tone adopted by scientific men, in speaking of the mysteries of life, is very marked. The speeches delivered at the late meetings of the British Association have been distinguished by a dignity and modesty which contrast favourably with the jaunty flippancy manifested by certain scientists some years ago, when all spiritual matters were loftily ruled out of court. This changed tone, too, is a rebuke to the noisy Rationalism which, under the name of "science," seeks to wound God and man in explaining everything in terms of matter. Men's researches have shown them, as Dr. Boyd Carpenter said in his sermon before the Association, that there is a power and a life which we cannot touch, and which lies beyond the ken of our scientific methods. That Unseen Power is the most considerable thing in the Universe. Scientists are compelled to acknowledge it, and its Presence has made them modest. Good as it is to advance thus far, there is nothing saving for the soul in such an admission. A man may admit a Power equal to all phenomena, and yet himself be a lost man. For the savant and for the ignorant there is but one way to communion with that Unseen—the way of faith in Jesus Christ. Nothing else avails.

Wisdom from Above. Another striking utterance at the Association meetings was that of the Bishop of Liverpool, whose choice of a text was in itself a contribution to science lore, for he selected a passage from the awed utterances of Job, in that marvellous acknowledgment of the infinite and unsearchable power and wisdom of God. "Lo, these are but the outskirts of His ways, but how little a portion is heard of Him" (Job xxvi. 14)! It is well for the highest human knowledge to be reminded from time to time that all things are not open and clear to the finite intellect of man, and that the most complete study of Nature fails to reveal to the seeker all that he is, and all that God intended him to be. As Dr. Chavasse said, research > cannot satisfy the deepest needs of man's being—teach him the secret meanings of sorrow, allay the soul's hunger, or give him moral guidance.

It is here that the mind of the little child comes in (Matt. xviii. 2, 3, 4).

England and the Vatican. The Times of the 16th inst. gave prominence to a long letter signed "Imperialist Catholic," in which some new and subtle reasons were advanced, urging that England should, at this present favourable moment, re-establish direct diplomatic relations with the Vatican. The accession of a new Pope is thought to provide the favourable opportunity. The chief reason given was that, as the "Church" has always been on the side of order, England could, by direct relationship with the Vatican, employ the resources of the "Church" in checking "Jacobin and other particularist tendencies of local populations." So plausible a plea is nothing but a great fallacy, in the light of history. Wherever the Roman Church has obtained a footing for social reasons, she has speedily advanced her dogmatic claims over conscience. The writer for whom The Times can find a column and a half of space, must be very naïve if he thinks a plea of this kind will have any weight. The truth is, that Rome is ever wheedling after the return of temporal power. It is too late for that. Civil governments do not need Rome's assistance for maintaining order.

The Pope and the Virgin. Those eulogists of the new Pope who ventured to predict that he would take sides with the Progressive party, must be disappointed with the Pontiff's letter to Rampolla and three other Cardinals in regard to proposed demonstrations in honour of Mary. The late Pope had, as might be expected, thrown the weight of his influence in support of the movement, and his successor follows the example and confirms the authority, with the view of > encouraging love and confidence in the prayers of the sinless maiden-mother, divinely called to a unique participation in the mysteries of faith and love, and constituted dispenser of all the graces.

It almost goes without saying that a new prayer is put forward in the letter in question, and to those who recite it daily, Pius X. grants an indulgence of 300 days. How directly this complicated system of recitations and indulgences is opposed to the Divine declaration: "There is One Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; who gave Himself a ransom for all" (1 Tim. ii. 5, 6)!

The Rage against Christ. There is a hopeful view which Christians may take of the furious propaganda now being waged in some quarters against the Gospel. "Rejoice ye heavens. . . . Woe to the inhabiters of the earth, for the devil is come down to you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time." That "great wrath" inspires this new Atheistic outburst is abundantly clear from the fact that its chief author disdains to read one word of the replies that have been made to him. This is a sure sign of rage, and of the sense that the cause is a bad one. Men are not furious against dying opponents; they are contemptuous or indifferent. The two extreme things, fanatical fury on the part of the enemies of Christ and increasing devotion on the part of His people, are surely among the signs that His coming is near. "The blessed hope" needs to be re-preached; it has been nearly forgotten. The very things that are happening around us were foretold by Him as amongst the signs of His coming. Let us, therefore, renew our hope.

Church and State in France. Many Englishmen have accorded their sympathy to the Breton priests in the matter of the recent Governmental decree, that the French language shall be compulsorily taught in the schools, and that preaching shall be in that language. The decree seemed to strike at liberty, and it has been suggested that an analogous case would exist if the English Government were to suppress the Welsh language in favour of English throughout Wales. But the "other side" has just been given, in which the analogy disappears, and in which the action of the Government receives full justification. The French correspondent of the Daily News has shown that the monks and nuns have systematically boycotted the French language for their own purposes. That "simple faith of the peasants," of which so much has been heard, turns out to be simple ignorance, and worse than simple superstition. The correspondent remarks that Brittany "is the only part of France, and indeed of Europe (outside Russia) where persons are from time to time lynched by the peasantry on suspicion of bewitching their cattle." The lynching, too, is sometimes extended to innocent visitors, as a recent event has proved. There is surely good reason for the Government to interfere, when part of the country is kept in this kind of darkness by monks and nuns.

The Care of the Body. It is difficult, in face of the many cases of breakdown, to avoid the thought that many workers for God, in their very earnestness and zeal, overlook the duty of caring for that "temple of the Holy Ghost," the body, and thereby curtail their period of devoted service. In the religious life there should be no room for anything approaching to pampering, but the due care of the body, as God's handiwork, should have its proper place. Preaching recently at Bath Abbey Church, Rev. F. Lawrence said:—

> Caring for the welfare of the body should not be regarded merely as a matter of prudence, but as an obligation binding upon every Christian.

The endeavour to maintain the health may be made to the glory of God, and in the hope of prolonged usefulness and service.

The Fatigue of Fashion. According to news in the "Society" papers, the votaries of fashion in the chief American summer pleasure resorts are experiencing the fatigue which arises from the unending endeavour to subscribe to the pitiless demands made upon them by "Society." The exactions as to toilette and parade and great functions are simply destroying the pleasure of living. Even in the summer vacation there is no relaxation allowed. It is hardly surprising that some of the leaders are talking of retiring to the country. The goddess of fashion exacts terrible tribute from her worshippers. To-day, as in the prophet Jeremiah's time, people "weary themselves" in seeking to be somebodies, and there comes finally a period of reaction. How much misery people might save themselves if they would only live simple lives, realizing first of all their debt to God, and then their real position towards their fellow-men. If they did this, there would be none of the vain ambition which is at once so absurd, so sinful, and so disappointing.

"Things as they are in Southern India." —In an exhaustive review of Miss Wilson-Carmichael's book, The Christian Patriot (edited by a Christian Hindu) says:—"The awful realism of the book and its attendant pessimism almost scare away all but the man who wants to know facts. But if ever anyone wants to read a perfectly straightforward and well-written account of how a village lives in the South of India, he should take up Things as they are. Miss Carmichael's views are always sane, and generally free from the Zeitgeist. She has something interesting or striking to say on subjects ranging from the education problem in India to whether missionaries should live simple lives or not." (6s. Morgan & Scott).

THE UNVEILING.

EXPOSITION OF SYMBOLS.

AS the passover lamb of the Exodus pointed onwards to Christ our Passover slain for us; as the blood of the paschal lamb, shed and sprinkled, was fulfilled in "the blood of sprinkling which speaketh better things than that of Abel"; as the Israel of the Old Testament foreshadowed the Israel of God of the New; and as the Tabernacle in the wilderness was made after the pattern of, and typified, the True Tabernacle, the greater and more perfect Tabernacle, not made with hands, not of this creation (Heb. viii. 2; ix. 11-14):—SO the Tabernacle in which John in vision saw One like unto a son of man in the midst of the golden candlesticks, with the explanation that the seven candlesticks are the seven churches, suggests that the symbolism throughout will be consistent with this Divine exegesis; and that the Unveiling sent by Jesus unto His servants (as in i. 1, 2) unto the churches (as in xxii. 16) relates to the Church of God.

And this is corroborated by the frequent mention of the Tabernacle and the Temple (substantially the same), in the subsequent visions; the Temple having previously been included in the promise to the overcomer in the Philadelphian Church—"I will make him a pillar in the Temple of my God."

If the seven candlesticks in the Temple are the seven churches; and if those who overcome are pillars in God's Temple; and if the Church is the Temple of God, a habitation of God through the Spirit (Ephes. ii. 19-22)—then at least we are justified in believing that these visions seen by "John, our brother and companion in the tribulation and Kingdom and endurance in Jesus," cannot exclusively relate to a time when the Church has passed away from earth.

The City of my God.—New Jerusalem—the Jerusalem which is above—our mother—(Gal. iv. 26).

LAODICEA.

My own new Name.—Various names of our Lord have been suggested, and probably this also: "Jehovah our Righteousness." This is specially His own new name. And He gives it to His saved people: "And this is the Name wherewith she shall be called, 'Jehovah our Righteousness'" (Jer. xxiii. 6; xxxiii. 16).

The faithful and true Witness.—"Faithful—trustworthy,—to be believed. True—He realized and fulfilled in the highest sense all that belonged to a witness" (Trench).

The Beginning of the Creation of God.—"Not the first created, but the Beginner, by whom all things were made. The source not only of the first creation, but also of the New Creation, which springs from Him as the second Adam: 'Behold I make all things new'" (Sp. Com.).

Cold, lukewarm, hot.—The publicans and harlots, the world lying in the wicked one, is cold toward God. The Scribes and Pharisees, the carnal Corinthians, the legal Galatians, were lukewarm. The forgiven woman who loved much; the Pentecostal Christians from their upper room of prayer; the persecuted church of Smyrna, the revived Church and revived Christians of any period, these are hot with the love of God shed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Spirit given unto them.

Because thou sayest, I am rich, and have become enriched, and have need of nothing, and knowest not that thou art the wretched and miserable and poor and blind and naked one.—Contrast Smyrna, "I know thy works and tribulation and poverty, but thou art rich."—The riches may be earthly and material or spiritual and heavenly; but either may be misused.

"I will come in and sup with him; and he with Me."—

I will share with thee thy sorrows;
And thou my joys with Me."

*Sanctified: Glorified.

By Rev. A. EVILL.

RECEIVING the Holy Spirit, we are brought into fellowship with all the three Persons in the Godhead (John xiv. 16, 23). When the Spirit of God comes into any heart, the Son comes, and the Father comes, and that heart becomes the abode of the Trinity (1 John i. 3). It is by the Spirit that that fellowship is had with the Father and the Son, for He is one with them, and proceeds from them to dwell in us. Receiving the Spirit, we receive Christ, and He said: "He that receiveth Me, receiveth Him that sent Me."

The Spirit of God is given to sanctify the whole man, and this is threefold. "The very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thess. v. 23).

The grace bestowed by the Spirit of God is threefold: "Faith, hope, love" (1 Cor. xiii. 13). These three eminent graces include all that is needed for the perfecting of the Christian character. They are mentioned together seven times in Paul's epistles as representing the whole work of the Spirit in God's children. If only these be working, the heart and life become right with God and man. Faith in God and in Christ, faith looking at things unseen and eternal, love to God and our brother, the hope of heaven, of the life and glory of the world to come, these have a mighty power to turn from sin to righteousness; and the renewing of the Holy Ghost may be said to consist entirely in the imparting of these holy and heavenly affections.

Having awakened the conscience, made the sinner know himself to be a sinner and anxious to be saved, He shows how the righteousness of Christ was wrought on the sinner's behalf, that through that righteousness which God Himself has provided, as the sinner trusts in it and pleads it, he may look to be accepted of God: the Spirit thus encourages with the sure hope of pardoning mercy, of peace with God and enjoyment of His favour. Then He testifies of judgment, judgment to come, the overthrow and destruction appointed of the powers of evil, of the devil and of all who do his works: as He testifies of this, He calls unto holiness, shows the need of it, moves to follow after it and helps to attain it, makes to fear and hate sin, to strive against it and to overcome it.

God has given to us in His Son eternal life; the Spirit conveys that life to those who receive Him, makes it to be actually theirs. What is that life? Threefold: the favour, the nature, and the glory of God. In the favour of God is life; we live, as we are delivered from condemnation, from the punishment of death due to us, as we are forgiven and accepted of God. The Spirit imparts this life. It is given in Christ to those who believe in Him; and this true saving faith in Christ is the work of the Spirit. It is His doing that we are made to know ourselves to be sinners, guilty, condemned, worthy of death, and to receive the atonement made for us by the Son of God, the blessing of pardon, and peace with God gotten for us by His obedience unto death in our stead.

It is through the Spirit we become justified by faith in Christ. And He imparts the nature of God; the new birth is this, the giving of the very life of God Himself to the soul; and this life is eternal; they who are born of God then grow in grace and knowledge, become more and more what His children are called to be, partakers of His holiness. Having perfected the inward man, He will also at last redeem the body from corruption (Rom. viii. 2). That mighty working by which the Lord subdues unto Himself is the working of His Spirit. By His Spirit He now subdues the hearts and minds of His people, makes their thoughts, desires, affections, subject to Him, like His own; by that same Spirit He will at last make their bodies also like His own, make them outwardly as well as inwardly partakers of His glory.

THE

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

God's Primal Law.

"But I say unto you, Love" (Matt. v. 44).

WHAT must be done for life—eternal life—the deepest and best? Everyone desires to know that. We all want to drink it to the last drop, to know everything that can be known in the brief limits of our existence, of true enjoyment. Everyone asks the question, in one form or another, How can I taste the inner meaning of life?

This is the answer—Love is life, and every man that loves perfectly God and his fellows is already drinking of the River of Water of Life that flows from the throne of God and the Lamb.

You may be startled for a moment, having been wont to hear from the lips of teachers and preachers the formula, Believe and live. Is there then a contradiction when the Master says, Love and live? No, as you will discover as soon as you endeavour to live a life of perfect love without believing in Christ. You cannot do it. If you could, the Gospel would be needless; but because it is impossible for man to love like this, the Lord Jesus came to renew our natures, and teach us to love; yea, He ascended on high to send the Holy Spirit, that He might shed abroad the love of God in our hearts. Love is not indigenous to the children of Adam's race; it must be implanted as an exotic from heavenly soil.

But when we speak of love, we do not mean that it is primarily an emotion of the soul; it is the expression of the soul in action. Love consists in being willing to do. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy strength." Many are disappointed because they try to love God with their hearts before they make Him first in their will. They who begin by serving another will end in loving him with warmth and tenderness of sympathy.

How beautiful it is to see the amenities of human life—the trust of man in his fellow, the love of parent to child, the devotion of wife to husband. These things, like the flowers that festoon unsightly ruins, adorn the lives and characters and homes of men who lay no claim to godliness. The abandoned woman presses her babe to her breast with maternal pity; the bandit is attached to his comrade, who shares his rug and spoils and plunder; and even the grim tyrant is attached to the woman he calls wife. These virtues are the wild flowers that grow over the rugged nature of man. But they are not the test of our religious life. If you simply love those who love you, and are kind to those that are generous, and salute those who salute you, you are not doing more than those who act at the prompting of their own human heart.

The children of God must do more than this. If the religion of Jesus Christ does not lift its professors out of the ordinary level of mankind into an altogether new atmosphere, to stand amid a fresh environment, and to give proof that they have found something which others do not possess, it can boast nothing better than was yielded by the hoary religions of the past, and is doomed to pass away. No, the Lord demands that, as there are men and women in our social circles whom naturally we dislike, whose temperament offends us, and whose prosperity is a matter for which naturally we cannot pray, so we cannot attain His ideal until we have learnt to love, pray for, and bless them, with a Divine and heaven-born unselfishness.

How many Christians form a false estimate of themselves! Their friends flatter them that they are generous and kind, and with such estimates they are only too ready to concur. We judge ourselves by the way in which we behave to wife, child, or friend, to those in our own circles of life, where it is easy to be open in heart and hand. That, however, is far from being an adequate test of what we really are. Men of the world can be attractive and winsome under similar surroundings. The only adequate gauge of the quality of our religious life is furnished by our attitude towards those from whom we are separated by prejudice, temper, or the consciousness of unfair and unkind behaviour. These relationships furnish the real test of what we are before God; since we are towards God what we are to them. Such an attitude of kindness and prayerful sympathy is impossible to men of the world. Thus Christ's command is a profound and searching test when he reiterates the ancient law,

"THOU SHALT LOVE THY NEIGHBOUR."

(1) Every man loves himself. That is universally true. The whole tendency and drift of human life which has not been regenerated by the Holy Spirit, is to revolve around the pivot and centre of one's own individuality. This is the result of being born of the first Adam, and proves the necessity of being born again of the Holy Spirit.

(2) Every man has a neighbour. This is also taken for granted. You are not only the centre of your own life, but part of the circumference of someone else's life. That circumference may be a very wide and far-extended one, but you cannot evade the fact that you have been born into a community or family of people; and, as we shall see, the point is not, whois your neighbour, so much as whom you will neighbour. Any man whom you shall encounter within the next hour on the king's highway needing your help, is your neighbour.

(3) The world's method is at variance with God's. The children of this world try to limit as far as possible the number of their neighbours, and to admit as few as possible within the pale of their generosity; whereas God's principle is, to go forth to all who need comfort and help. The scribes said, "Who is my neighbour?" (Luke x. 29), hoping that Christ would limit the duty of neighbourliness within as narrow limits as possible—a blood relation or such like; whereas our Lord always taught that we were to be on the outlook to prove our neighbourliness. His reply was, in effect, "Go, and show yourself a neighbour." In showing ourselves neighbours, we must remember that every individual has

THREE CHARACTERISTIC PROPERTIES.

(1) Every man has his rights. There are his inherited rights, such as his right to freedom; for no man may enslave his fellow, and everyone in whose heart there is a part of God's love is bound, so far as he may, to secure liberty for the enslaved. Every man has a right also to fresh air, fresh water, sufficient land for the maintenance of life (whether cultivated by himself or by others is not material). Every man also has a right to freedom of conscience; so that no man is justified in imposing his creed or manner of Divine worship on another.

These are rights which every individual member of the human family has a claim to, and if we would live a life of perfect love we must respect these rights in every man, though a beggar; in every woman, though a servant-girl.

Each has, also, acquired rights, such as those of character and of reputation. No one has a right to take another's character, or impair his reputation. If there is some blemish in another's character which calls for reprehension and blame, dare to tell it him between himself and yourself; but do not filch away his reputation to another.

There are also the rights of property. These must be respected. Anything like a compulsory division of property is impossible to Christ's disciples, though we all may proceed on the voluntary principle which was practised by the early Church, and of which the early chapters of the Acts tell so wonderful a story. Directly we begin to live the life of perfect love, we begin to respect the rights of another, and to care for them as if they were our own.

(2) Every man has his necessities. How infinite the variety of need! The master needs the servant quite as much as the servant the master. We are bound to each other by a network of necessities, and the man in whose heart is God's perfect love learns to minister to those needs, whatever they may be and whenever there is an opportunity—it being always remembered, of course, that a man may be compelled to turn aside from some needs he would like to meet because of the call of other and more clamant ones.

A recent writer has contrasted the demand of Christ with the demand of the world, as the contrast between MINISTRY AND MASTERY.

The devil says, "Ye shall be as gods." Christ says, "Ye shall be perfect, as My Father is perfect." But in order to be as gods, the devil says you must be prepared to trample men beneath your feet. Christ says, "If you would be perfect, go sell what you have, and give to the poor, and you shall have treasure in heaven." The difference is that one set of men go blustering over the world showing the strength of their arm, and insisting on other men serving them; whilst the other set are perpetually giving themselves away in ministry, losing their souls to find them.

(3). Every man has his sins. We often seem to forget how clearly Christ has laid down our duty about our behaviour to such. "If thy brother trespass against thee" (Matt. xviii. 15), what do we do? We are cool to him, do not speak to him, give him a wide berth. He has done us a wrong, and we tell our wife and child to have no intercourse with his wife and child. If we meet him in the street, we bow stiffly and pass. But Jesus says, "Go and tell him his fault between him and thee." Go? Let him come to me. Go? Why should I? If he should be in need or at the point of death I would go, but why should I go now? Yet the Lord will have us go, and go now, that we may gain and win our brother to a better mind. Ah, we shall never do it until we have learned to love.

Yet another text, "If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one" (Gal. vi. 1). Too often we whisper to this and the other the story of his sin, saying, "Of course you will not tell." But that is not God's way. No, says the Lord, lovingly lift that fallen man or woman up again in the spirit of meekness, remembering how easily tempted you are too. Then go to your place of secret prayer, and pray God that you may not be tempted to your undoing, and if you are, that someone's love should do for you what your love has done for him.

Once more, "If a man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall pray——" (1 John v. 16). Instead of talking of it let us hasten away to his secret place and cry to God. What will be the result? "God shall give him life for those that sin not unto death." And the man who has sinned shall feel life coming back into his soul. He may not know whence, but in heaven he will discover that it was because his brother, who saw the act, went away and prayed for him. Why do we not act thuss Ah! We need the love of God shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, which he hath given unto us (Rom. v. 5).

Christ is All.

How dark the night! how weird the road!
How far from home! how far from God—
Our state of guilt and shame!
Till light Divine was shed abroad
Upon the pathway Christ once trod
As to the cross He bore our load:
There's light in Jesu's Name.

The storms of conscious sin we bore;
Within, behind us, and before,
An overwhelming flood.
Till Christ rolled back the tide, no more
To crush us with its weight and roar;
Cried "Peace! be still!" from shore to shore:
There's peace in Jesu's Blood.

The family of God below
Have more than pardon, peace, to show—
Their birth is from above;
In Christ they live; by Christ they grow;
All needful grace He'll here bestow;
Till in his presence they shall know
There's life in Jesu's Love.

And should life's pilgrimage be long,
The battle fierce, the pilgrim song
Will be of rest to come:
Of Paradise for old and young,
Of victory for weak and strong,
Of welcome by the ransomed throng:
There's rest in Jesu's Home.

Bishop Auckland. Frank North.

A Great Record.

On Thursday evening last, at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, an occasion was celebrated which was, we believe, unique in the annals of Christian work—namely, the completion of ten thousand consecutive nights of Gospel work at this busy evangelistic centre. Nominally, it was the thirty-third anniversary of the work inaugurated by Mr. Charrington in the East End of London; but it was not until five years later that every-night meetings were established.

WINNING THE MASSES.

The operations of this strong and many-sided Mission afford a daily demonstration of the attractive power of the Gospel. Its congregations, drawn mainly from the poorer section of the vast working-class population of the district, crowd the hall Sabbath by Sabbath; to witness the reverence of the people and the manifest satisfaction with which they enter into the bright service, and the uncompromising presentation of the Truth, is in itself a liberal education in Gospel work. In this connection a word of hearty recognition is due to the choir with their effective ministry of song.

The membership has attained the high figure of 2,500, and the ideal of "every member an active worker" is largely realized. Visitation in the homes of the people is maintained even amid the haunts of squalor and vice by a well-organized body of volunteer workers, while the sick and distressed are tenderly cared for. In all the undertakings there is manifested the sanctified common sense which has operated so effectively in securing for the mission and its leaders the confidence and esteem of Christians in all parts of the land.

IN THE OPEN AIR.

Nor does the evangelistic fervour find scope only in the indoor meetings and satisfaction in a crowded building. While there are thousands within, there are still the unreached masses without; so to carry the Gospel to those who, Gallio-like, "care for none of these things," a vigorous body of preachers takes advantage of the exceptionally wide roadway in front of the hall to declare the good news of salvation, and to engage in personal talks with passers by, endeavouring to meet individual difficulties, combating infidel error, and pointing convicted sinners to the Saviour. Yet another striking feature is the out-door brigade which operates in connection with the "Men's Own." This enterprising force has workers stationed at the doors of public-houses, "buttonholing" the men who pass out, and persuading them to attend the meeting.

Various departments which deal more particularly with the physical needs of the starving poor have arisen from the directly evangelistic operations as the years have gone by. On Christmas Day, dinners are provided for no fewer than 800 deserving families whose sufferings have become known through visitation; while another notable event of each recurring Lord Mayor's Day is the meal to some 4,000 of East London's miserables. As for the sick and suffering little ones, they find a friend in need in the person of Mrs. Kerwin (wife of Mr. E. H. Kerwin, the esteemed secretary and coadjutor with Mr. Charrington in these missionary labours). Mrs. Kerwin holds herself specially responsible for the cosy Home in Epping Forest, where so many slum "tinies" have spent delightful holiday seasons. The well-managed coffee palace is another useful adjunct.

MR. CHARRINGTON'S REPORT.

As was expected, the report presented at the meeting by Mr. Charrington was itself a most inspiring record. Naturally he could only touch upon a point here and there, as he reviewed the vista of past years, but the facts quoted forcibly illustrated the need of the work and operations conducted by the Mission. Arising out of these nightly Gospel meetings is a feature which is felt to be most effective, namely, personal conversation with persons of varied circumstances, homeless or otherwise; but the most striking element is the number of would-be suicides with whom the workers have thus been brought into contact. By one of those curious impulses, which the world would call chance, but which the Christian believes to be the leading of the Spirit of God, numbers of these moral wrecks drift into the Assembly Hall to "spend their last night on earth!" So at least they think; but the power of God has been brought home to them, and they have subsequently left the hall with a vision of new possibilities before them, and in many cases in the possession of a newly-found salvation.

Mr. Charrington quoted one case in which he had had a prolonged struggle on the floor of the hall with a man for the possession of a bottle of poison, with which the latter had intended to take his life that night. Indeed, Mr. Charrington and his devoted fellow-worker, Mr. Kerwin, have quite a collection of such bottles, as well as knives, pistols, and other dangerous implements.

THE "TEMPERANCE ISLAND."

Turning to the temperance side of the work, it was shown that during the period under review about 70,000 pledges had been taken; the labours of the "Crusaders" and other aggressive workers have been much blessed; and a recent development of this department of service is the purchase of a temperance island, not far from London, where, as one of the speakers neatly put it, "If a man wants a drink, he will have to swim four miles to get it." Great hopes are entertained of the good results from this scheme, as a means of dealing with those whose moral weakness makes it easy for them to fall a prey to a tempting environment.

In more public directions, such as the County Council and School Board, Mr. Charrington's influence has been felt for righteousness and temperance, and it will be remembered that a signal victory was secured in the prevention of a license being granted to the People's Palace.

Other work which has achieved most encouraging results has been in the direction of purifying the neighbourhood in various ways, including the clearance of whole streets of undesirable houses.

Turning from the adult work to that amongst the young, it is gratifying to note that the Sunday-school has no fewer than 2,000 children in regular attendance.

It is not wonderful then, that this celebration of the 10,000th night of consecutive services drew together a very large concourse of people. As the tea tables were being cleared, the entrance of Lord Radstock was greeted with hearty applause; nor is he the only peer who takes an interest in this work, letters of warm sympathy being also read from Lord Kinnaird, Lord Overtoun, as well as a great many other leaders of Christian thought and service, whose other engagements prevented their actual presence. Upon the platform Mr. Charrington had around him a good company of representative evangelists and friends, for his work appeals to the sympathy and co-operation of all who are concerned in saving the lost.

THE GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL, AND MILE END ROAD, E.

TEN THOUSAND OPPORTUNITIES.

Speaking of the antagonistic forces in the world as represented by the "Lord of Hosts" and the "prince of this world," the chairman (Mr. G. E. Morgan) rejoiced in this work, with its abundant "signs following," as an indication that great as are the powers of evil, this mission is a forcible testimony for Christ in the Metropolis. Ten thousand opportunities of hearing the Gospel had involved a proportionate responsibility on the part of the hearers; while the workers would remember that even numbers are not everything, for quality is more essential than quantity; the secret of real success being the presence of Him who is "the chiefest among ten thousand." Even in this twentieth century there is an appalling degree of ignorance and of indifference among the masses of the people (and even in higher circles). The activity of evil seemed to him a strong argument for belief in the personality of Satan. How else can we account for the persistent ingenuity evident in the ever fresh forms of temptation, and ever ready resistance to every new effort undertaken by Church or State for the moral protection of the nation?

The speaker gave examples of this in reference to the drink and "white slave" traffics, gambling, and other evils rampant in the large centres of population. Much as he congratulated the workers upon their unique achievement of 10,000 nightly meetings, he reminded them of the recently introduced "Twice Nightly" performances of the Music Halls, and in this connection aptly quoted Luke xiv. 31: "What king going to make war against another king, sitteth not down first and consulteth whether he be able with ten thousand to meet him that cometh against him with TWENTY THOUSAND?" He wished it were possible to hold every night a second meeting at a late hour, say 10 p.m., with a fresh relay of workers, to reach the "night birds" who will not attend a meeting at an ordinary time. Mr. Moody had found this plan most effective during the World's Fair at Chicago.

Other addresses followed from Mr. John Wood, of the Evangelization Society (a source upon which Mr. Charrington draws largely for Gospel preachers), Dr. Harry Guinness, Messrs. J. B. Wookey, Thomas Richardson, and George Nokes, all of whom expressed in the heartiest manner their gratitude to God for the far-reaching service of the Great Assembly Hall.

Three Stages in the Christian's History

A BIBLE-READING OUTLINE.

THERE are three texts that seem to take in the past, present, and future of the Christian.

Enemies of God.—We find our past referred to in Col. i. 21. What a thought is here! Enemies of God—so utterly "alienated by wicked works" that the story of our lives, if not the words of our lips, was "Not this man, but Barabbas."

Children of God.—Our present position is described in Gal. iii. 26: "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." Enemies in the past, now children, and "if children, then heirs," now and for ever, overshadowed by that mighty love that broke down every barrier and vanquished every foe.

They shall see His face.—One word sums up our future—Heaven. But what is heaven? "They shall see His face" (Rev. xxii. 4). Could God offer more? Sorrow and pain will be done away, loved ones will meet again; but all this is not heaven—that lies in seeing Him. In our past we were shamefully loyal to our master, the devil. Shall we be less loyal now to the One to whom we owe our present and future?

JESSIE CREIGHTON WILLIAMS.

Llandrindod Wells. —A favourite summer resort in the Land of Preachers, as Wales is often called, is Llandrindod Wells, with its sulphur, saline, and chalybeate springs. Christians will be pleased to hear that during the holiday season an English-Welsh prayer-meeting, lasting half-an-hour, is held every morning except Saturday, at 10 a.m., at the Albert Hall. Why this exception should be made, we, like other friends, could not quite understand; but we rejoiced to see the services, which for many years took the place of family worship, so well attended. The hall was sometimes crowded. Mr. W. Thomas, the precentor of the Welsh Calvinistic Chapel, who is the proprietor of the largest business in the town, has for many years conducted an admirable Welsh choir, which is rendering good services to beneficent causes. Many of the choir members are his own employés. The Duchess of Abercorn has expressed to Mr. Thomas her sympathy with his work. There are good hotels and boarding-houses in the town. We found a congenial atmosphere at Sunnycroft, of which a Christian lady, Miss Kirkby, is at the head.

As Others See Us.

BY REV. ROBERT CAMERON, D.D.

I HAVE been asked for some observations on my visit to England, and I readily comply with the request.

Permit me to speak of some changes that I have observed. First, as to the streets. I notice that they are not only broader, better paved, and cleaner, in a material sense, but they have greatly improved in a moral sense. Roughly speaking, I should say that immorality is fifty per cent. less in evidence upon the streets than thirty years ago. In conversation with those who know what goes on behind the scenes, I am told that there is no improvement, and some think that matters are going worse. Of this I know nothing; but I am very certain that the moral atmosphere of London, as it appears to the stranger, is vastly ahead of what it was thirty years ago.

THE DRINKING CUSTOMS.

Two things impressed me very much for the worse after my arrival. The physical degeneracy of the ordinary people was at once recognized, and I was not surprised, a few days afterwards, to notice that this question was engaging the attention of the philosophers and philanthropists of the country. Whether this is the result of the prevalent use of the cigarette, or of over indulgence in drinking, or of youthful immorality, or of all together, is for others to determine. The other matter to which I refer is named with much reluctance and sorrow, viz., the shocking way in which women, young and old, with escorts of the opposite sex and without, with children and husbands and without them, go to the public-houses and drink without any apparent sense of the unwomanly indelicacy and shame of their conduct. I tremble for the future generations of England, unless this drunkenness of the wives and mothers of the land is checked.

As to the condition of the Christian Church, I am scarcely able to speak with authority. Assurance has been given me that I have preached in some of the most spiritual congregations of London. One thing, however, seems very plain to me, namely, that while there is an increase of general indifference among the people, there is an intensity of earnestness on the part of active Christians, far in advance of what I found when I first came to London. The amount of street-preaching, and work in connection with mission halls, has multiplied manifold.

THE STUDY OF PROPHECY.

As to the students of Scripture, and especially prophetic students, it is matter of deep regret that so many divergent views have come to the front during the past few years. The painful fact is that many of the positions maintained are merely speculative, and without any substantial basis in the Word of God. In other words, prophetic students have been doing in their line exactly what the higher critics have been doing; while blaming the critics, prophetic students have been setting forth things that are new, rather than unquestionably true.

Permit me, in a general way, to say how grateful I am for the cordial reception given me on every hand. My magazine, Watchword and Truth,* deals largely in prophetic teaching. This has brought me into conflict with many exponents of Scripture in Great Britain; and yet every one of them, even those whose teachings I have been compelled to antagonize in the most earnest way, have received me with a cordiality and kindness that is beyond all praise. My own hope is that hereafter a better understanding may obtain among prophetic students, that greater caution may be observed in the advocacy of prophetic theories, and that all shades of opinions may seek to present their teachings in the terms of Scripture or Scripture equivalents, instead of in terms that express various types of interpretation.

I preached at Talbot Tabernacle (Pastor F. White); Kenyon Chapel, Brixton (Pastor J. Douglas); Highgate Road (Pastor J. Stephens); and in Stratford Town Hall, in connection with the work among the masses carried on by Mr. C. Boardman. In every place large congregations assembled, and the closest attention was manifested. Moreover, there were in each place tokens of the presence of God with professed conversions. The feature of these various congregations that impressed me most, was their reverence during the hour of worship. Almost without exception on entering the meetings the people bowed their heads in prayer, and during the service the great majority used Bibles and hymn books, and joined in the singing and other acts of worship. I also noticed that when the benediction was pronounced the utmost silence prevailed while the congregation slowly retired. This is greatly in advance of anything we have in America.

If all congregations are in the condition that those to which I ministered seem to be, I would be free to say that London is on the eve of the greatest revival that has ever visited the city. The recent census, however, indicates that only in those places where the old Gospel is faithfully preached do the people gather in large numbers, and therefore this prediction may have to be discounted. It is impossible to "dispense with" the Gospel three-quarters of the year, and then expect the results of the Gospel in the conversion of souls to grow out of a spasmodic effort during the remaining months.

I thank my British fellow-Christians for their generous kindness, and pray God to keep the whole Anglo-Saxon race united together, and the whole of the churches of God abiding in the Truth.

Jesus, I Come to Thee.

JESUS, I come to Thee,
Thou dost all sin repel;
Yet me, so sinful, Thou dost draw
Close to Thy feet to dwell.

Thou art all holy, Lord,
Therefore I come to Thee,
Drawn by the thought that Thou hast come,
Unasked, to sinful me.

Thy Cross hath made the way;
By that Thou hast drawn nigh;
Save by the Cross Thou never couldst
Have come to such as I.

But that Thy feet were fixed
Just where my sin prevailed,
How could I e'er Thy feet have reached,
By Satan so assailed?

Jesus, I come to Thee;
Yea, at Thy feet I am;
Thee for my sin and guilt I see,
God's sacrificial Lamb.

My hand upon Thy head—
So lowly Thou—I lay,
My sins confessing, but THYSELF
CONFESSING MORE THAN THEY.

Thy death I own as due
Wholly to sin of mine,
And I myself, so dearly bought,
I own forever Thine.

The Suffering Poor.—Considerable extensions in the operations of the Mission of Help to the Suffering Poor during the year have brought increased opportunities of usefulness. Acting on the advice of the referees, the secretary has relinquished other labours in order to devote her whole time to the growing claims of the Mission. Suitable premises have been secured for the clothing store—an important feature of the work. There are now fifty-five names on the books for regular weekly relief, thirty-five of whom are aged, the remainder being chronic invalids. Often at the close of a life of great industry and usefulness unforeseen circumstances involve its last days being spent in penury. It is always the special desire of the Mission to help the aged, since half-a-crown a week spells the difference between destitution and comfort, and shuts out the vision that frequently attends old age—that of becoming a pauper. A small committee of ladies who have had long experience with the poor has been formed, and it is felt that their united judgment and counsel will prove a strength and gain to every part of the work. The secretary is Miss Annie F. Perram, 105, Listria Park, Stoke Newington, N.

A Visit to Benares.

By Rev. J. F. T. HALLOWES, M.A.

HERE I saw idolatry in all its gloom, writ large over a city covered with idol temples. Accompanied by a Moslem guide, I visited the Monkey Temple, sacred to Durgá or Thâli. The whole place swarms with tame monkeys, which are regarded as having special sanctity. Here numberless goats are slaughtered in honour of this feminine monster, who seems to have a special fascination for the Hindus. Many are the shrines dedicated to her revolting image, with its three eyes, huge protruding red tongue, and necklace of skulls. A poet has thus described her:—

Dark goddess of the azure flood,
Whose robes are wet with infant tears,
Skull-chaplet wearer, whom the blood
Of men delights three thousand years.

Subsequently, I went on to the "Golden Temple," devoted to the worship of Shiva. This is by far the most important temple in the city. It is large, and is capped by two spires and a central dome. The dome and one of the spires are covered with copper plates, heavily gilded. The worshippers were in crowds, multitudes of whom were pilgrims from provinces far and near. Of course my profane feet could not enter so holy a shrine, but I could hear the noise made by thronging devotees as they jostled each other, eager to present themselves and their offerings to the presiding goddess.

In Benares, as in India generally, idolatry runs mad. Any object, however offensive, may be worshipped. The Godhead is lowered to the likeness of crocodiles, monkeys, and dogs. The Brahmins, constituting nearly one-eighth of the immense city population, love to have it so. They line the river banks, they haunt the temples. True children of the horseleach, they ever cry, "Give, give!" Idle and profligate, puffed up with pride, utterly contemptuous of inferior castes, desiring to be worshipped by them, they prey upon the souls and property of the people, riveting the fetters of their idolatry, and making escape to a rational and spiritual faith much more difficult. Before Christ, the ascendancy of the Brahmins generally in India was complete; but their prestige has since then been slowly but surely waning. The spread of English education has diminished the power and gains of this sacerdotal caste, whose influence is being further undermined by Christianity, which indeed is destined to terminate it for ever.

A RIVERSIDE SCENE.

The following morning I saw the greatest sight that Benares can afford. At about half-past six, I was rowed up and down the Ganges, near the left bank of this noble stream, which is here about twice the width of the Thames at London Bridge. Stretching three miles along the riverside there is a bewildering series of palaces, temples, and occasionally mosques, with their domes, pinnacles, and minarets. Great flights of solidly-constructed stone steps ascend to these from the river. These steps, as it were, frequently broaden out into capacious platforms, stone built, on which are crowded shrines, bathing-houses, and preaching canopies. On these steps, sometimes under immense straw umbrellas, and on small wooden piers just above the river, I saw thousands of Hindus performing their worship, with divers incantations and gesticulations. Multitudes, including many aged men and women, were standing knee deep in the cold water (the morning was quite chilly), every now and then immersing their heads. Their performances were carried through in a leisurely manner, and were accompanied by prayers muttered to numerous deities. A few youngsters coupled pleasure with devotion, by swimming in the sacred flood, but this was rare. A general air of seriousness prevailed.

Just below the Nepaulese Temple, I saw the "Burning Ghat," a dirty little creek where the remains of orthodox Hindus are burnt, and their ashes given to the river. Presently a dead man, robed in white, was brought down. His face was uncovered and sprinkled with water preparatory to the cremation, which I did not actually see. I learnt afterwards that the torch would be applied by his son if he had one, and then the relatives would, from the steps above, watch the body slowly consuming. Thus the living and the dead meet at the stream whose waters are supposed to secure purification for both. The dying, too, are not seldom carried to the brink of the river in hope of imaginary benefits. I left Benares with a deeper sense than ever of the hold which Hinduism still has upon the prejudices and affections of millions of Hindus; and also with the conviction that the Christian Church at home does not realise the tremendous nature of the struggle against it, and the absolute need there is for reinforcements—men and women well endowed by nature, and well endued by grace. The power of the Spirit is essential in every case, but they who would successfully meet so strong and subtle a system of heathenism, need a special training as well as a special enduement of the Holy Ghost. Pray that God would multiply such labourers, and that the Christian Church may take in the measure of the situation, and give her best in men and means.

Winter visitors from England also might well be increased—Christian men and women who can pay their own expenses. Such would find, as I have found, that it is vastly more impressive to see the facts of heathenism than to hear about them. The facts actually witnessed are more easily turned into prayers; and carried to man, as well as to God, they might, when brought to bear on the churches at home, stimulate more prayer and effort in behalf of the heathen world.

The Training Home, Adyar, Madras.

MRS. LONGHURST WARD, whom many followed with their prayers during her painful illness, writes from Madras:—

The Lord has given me back in a great measure my strength. Now we are busy at work again. We opened the new session in the training home with five old students. One had left us in May for work in Hyderabad, and one leaves us for Kolar in the Mysore State. Two new students have joined us, so that we have still six. Of the four who have been in training for three years, one goes to Tinnevelly at Christmas. We ask your definite prayers for those who have left and those who will be leaving, and that spheres of work may be opened up for the three, and that other girls may hear the call to come and be trained. We have the same cause for regret here that you have at home, viz., the lack of missionary zeal among the English-speaking churches. At the end of camps and conventions there be many who say: "I will work for God"; but alas, alas! when they go back to their homes, they go back from their promise; their easy-going ways and the world are stronger, and have greater attractions for them than souls and God's work. All such are much on our hearts just now. So many who have been to Keswick are now undergoing the test. Pray for them.

This session promises to be a very busy one, as my husband has consented to fill the place of pastor for six months in the Congregational Church where he used to minister when first coming to India. It is a small flock; but they are true-hearted and faithful. It says a great deal for that little church that, out of its small membership, four have gone forth as missionaries. We have been reading lately Miss Amy Wilson Carmichael's book, "Things as They Are," and we have prayed much for its circulation at home as well as in India; for it comes as a God-sent message to the churches. It is all so true and sad, and must be faced by those who are seeking to help to bring India to Christ.

Lebanon Hospital for the Insane.

THE following are a few extracts from Mr. Waldmeier's review of the year's work:—

"We have had sufficient food and clothing for our large number of patients, which at the present moment number seventy-four, twelve of whom are old chronic cases, while four have been here from the beginning. We have had an overflow of patients lately . . . 'How different Asfuriyeh is to Kuzheya,' people would say, after being shown round and seeing what kindness and love is shown to these 'dead, which cannot be buried,' to use old Dr. Van Dyke's expression. 'They have even beds,' some would say, and cannot understand that we do not keep them under restraint, and ask to see the chains and ropes, which they say ought to be used to tame the excited cases. We have received many tokens from the relatives of patients in return for kindness shown.

"It is a very strange thing how the natives of all classes and denominations have so quickly changed their opinion with regard to the Institution; we were asked, often quite sarcastically, whilst building the hospital, 'Do you think there are such people as insane, and that they will be brought to your hospital?' But what a change has taken place in such a short time—what an overflow of applications we get, so that we cannot take them all in! Even monks and priests from the very Cave of Kuzheya are brought to Asfuriyeh. The fanatical Maronite Patriarch sent his favourite priest, Bulus Akury, to be treated at Asfuriyeh! Seven Maronite priests accompanied him, saying they would rather have him treated here than by their own monks at the Cave of Kuzheya. When expressing our surprise, the Prior answered 'that they had heard of the love and care of the patients, that they are greatly indebted to Mr. Waldmeier for having started such a necessary institution, a refuge for the poor and forsaken insane of Palestine.'

"Before I close, I would mention what we need most for the patients—(1) Thick, strong stuff for dresses for destructive patients (this is specially made for this purpose); and (2) All kinds of flannel, calico, shirting, clothes, &c."

The secretary, Mr. F. C. Brading, 35, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C., will gladly send new report, and furnish all information desired.

Automobile Evangelization.

I READ with much interest a notice under the above heading. It has lately been my privilege to spend some weeks in France, evangelizing in this way. A French brother, M. Sainton, has had a motor-car lent to him, and now for twelve months he has been travelling with the Gospel. He has been aided by an English brother, and the two together have traversed all parts of Normandy and Brittany, the Bay of Biscay provinces, and the whole of the district between Paris and Nantes. They have been remarkably blessed in the effort, and during this year the Scripture Gift Mission has kept them supplied with French Gospels for distribution. Unfortunately that Mission is now coming to the end of its funds for that part of the mission-field, and unless others come forward with help the supply will have to cease.

Among the Tibetans.—In a short account of his labours in this almost entirely closed land, Mr. Thomas A. Judd (Tibetan Faith Mission), says: "Since working among these people I have had much suffering. In spite of my weakness, however, I have kept up services every day, and have done all I could to win precious souls for the Master. My work is chiefly among the Tibetans, and I live right in their midst. To those who can read I give portions of the Bible (in Tibetan). The people are Buddhists and worship idols. They have flags fixed up on poles near their houses, and believe that when the wind blows it wafts their prayers up to heaven. They spend much of their time in smoking, drinking, and fighting."

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, September 27. Psalm cxxxii.

The Psalm of Temple Dedication.

SURELY this psalm was prepared to celebrate the completion of Solomon's Temple, at which David's care and sacrifice on the behalf of the sacred shrine was lovingly remembered. God is not unrighteous to forget the work of His saints. Their names are found written on the foundations of the new Jerusalem. May we not be rebuked by David's love for God's service? Wearied with the storms that had swept over him, he might well have left the work to others. If he was not to have the glory of it, why should he have the pains! Instead of reasoning thus, he consecrated to God the spoils he had won in war, the revenues he had acquired in peace, and with unswerving continuity of purpose pursued his life-plan.

11-18. First, God's promises to David are recited, which were Yea and Amen. His people dwell upon the assurances which He had given. The Psalmist had asked Him to arise into His rest. He answers it by promising to abide in it for ever (v. 14). He had asked that the priests might be clothed in righteousness; but the answer promises robes of salvation (v. 16). Verse 9 is answered by verse 16, verse 10 by verses 17, 18.

What does all this mean to us, except that God waits to do exceeding abundantly, above all we ask or think? And the power that lives in the Risen Lord is the measure of what the Father is prepared to do for all who are united with Him by a living faith.

MONDAY, September 28. Psalm cxxxiii.

The Psalm of Brotherly Love.

Perhaps this Psalm was written after the return from Babylon, when men of different tribes were united in the spirit of a common devotion towards Jehovah and the newly-founded Temple.

"Behold!" cries the Psalmist. And indeed it is a sight to see, when, in spite of minor differences, those who love the same Saviour realize that the points in which they agree eminently preponderate above those in which they differ.

2. The consecrating oil poured upon the head of the High Priest represents the Oil of the Holy Spirit, shed without measure on our Lord. For where the Spirit is, there is always the fruit of love. The oil on Aaron's head poured down to the opening or mouth of his robe, that is, the upper edge or collar through which his head passed. And the Holy Spirit with which the Father anointed the Great Head of the Church, descended to His immediate followers, and is our portion by faith. Have you claimed your share in the Paraclete, given to the Head on behalf of all the members?

3. The distilling of dew is an exquisite metaphor for the work of the Holy Spirit which is so quiet, gentle, and refreshing. It gathers on each lowly blade of grass, and never yet snapped the most slender stem. The Psalmist says that the dew of Hermon reached the mountains of Zion. It may be that the abundant dews of Jerusalem were accounted for by the effect upon the atmosphere of the snowy crests of Hermon. Or it may be that with a poetical licence the Psalmist averred that high though Hermon was, compared with the lowliness of Zion, the same dew was vouchsafed to each. It is at least true that whether a man towers into the blue, or nestles into the plains, he may alike share the blessing of love, which is indeed the blessing of life for evermore.

TUESDAY, September 29. Psalm cxxxiv.

The Psalm of Good Night.

This is the last of the Pilgrim Songs. It would appear that the congregation, composed largely of pilgrims from all parts, is about to leave the Temple. And as it does so, the people exhort the priests of the night-watch to fill the dark hours with prayer and praise, and to let their hearts go up in blessing. Let the voice of praise echo through the silent night, and breathe through the heavenly spaces.

Again, we may apply these words to our own circumstances. With us also God has His night-watch. Those who lie upon their beds through sleepless hours, who watch in hospital wards by sick beds, or like policemen are compelled to spend long hours in the silent streets, may be compared to the night-watch coming on duty whilst most of us sleep. And as we close our eyes in slumber, we may well utter the words of the Psalm and bid them fill the dark hours with praise.

The closing verse of the psalm is addressed to each individual of the congregation, and passes the Divine blessing forth. The blessing of God does not linger in the sanctuary alone, and they who remain there may not monopolise it for themselves. It streams out by day and night to all who love God.

WEDNESDAY, September 30. Psalm cxxxv.

A Psalm of Praise.

Like some preceding psalms (xcvii., xcviii.) this is a bouquet of flowers, or a mosaic of precious stones; for the most part it consists of quotations.

1-4. We are reminded of the preceding psalm. It is as though the priestly choirs of the Temple were to express for their people and the world the praises which craved for utterance. Have you never realized, when standing in the midst of some exquisite natural scene, that you were expressing in human phrase the prayer and praise with which all things were overflowing, but inarticulately? So Israel in the old time, and the Church to-day, speaks for all mankind.

5-7. God's majesty as set forth in nature is hymned to sacred music. Haydn's Creation is anticipated in these words. From heaven, and earth, and seas, revenues of thank-offering and adoration accumulate.

8-12. God's goodness as set forth in the history of His people, is hymned as the second main source of thanksgiving and praise. Whatever nature may say, the story of God's dealings with men can never be exceeded in pathos and power. For us, such events as the Armada and Waterloo stand in British history as the exodus and conquest of Canaan in Israel's.

13-18. God's superiority to the idols of the heathen is chanted to noble music. There is no God save the Lord. All the gods of the heathen are idols, but our God made the heavens. The superiority of Christianity to the religions of heathendom must be a matter for thankful pride to every child of God.

19-21. At the end of the Psalm we are led back to its beginning. From the congregation and the priests and the Levites and the proselytes, one great cloud of blessing arises to Jehovah.

THURSDAY, October 1. Psalm cxxxvi.

The Psalm of Eternal Lovingkindness.

This psalm was evidently intended to be used as a liturgy. Do we praise enough? It is true that the choirs of our cathedrals have their matins; but do individual Christians realize the importance of acting as the High Priests of the world? By Him let us offer the sacrifice of praise continually. It is good to stay in the house of people who make their voices to be heard in the morning in praise.

4-9. Praise God's love in Creation. The Psalmist views the spreading forth of the heavens and the earth, the creation of sun, moon, and stars, as due to the love of God. It was love that made the theatre upon which the great revelation of love was to be completed. The tint upon the sky at dawn and the crimson tips to the daisy's petals are due to the love of the Creator.

10-22. Praise God's love in His dealings with His people. The exodus, the wanderings in the desert, and the conquest of Canaan, are the three themes of this strophe. There are some remarkable expressions here. In v. 13 the Psalmist uses the verb of Gen. xv. 17. It was as though God hewed the sea in two, as Abram clave the carcases, and the people passed between, as in covenant. In v. 15, the word describing Pharaoh's destruction is taken from Ex. xiv. 27. There was certainly love to Israel, you say, but was there love to Sihon and Og? Yes, somehow, because God loves the world, and Christ is the propitiation for the sins of all mankind. Clearly, it was better to cut off Sihon and Og, rather than to allow the nations to waste through the effect of their sin.

23-26. Praise God for His beneficence. He brings exiles back from captivity, and gives bread to all. Praise Him.

FRIDAY, October 2. Psalm cxxxvii.

The Psalm of the Captives.

This is one of the tenderest of the Psalms in its first notes, but it ends in an outburst of terrible imprecation.

1-6. By the Streams of Babylon. What a picture is this of the exiles! Listless, careless of the unfamiliar landscape around them, so unlike the dear land of their birth with its hills and glens. The fame of their temple music had preceded them, and caused their captors to demand songs, but how could they sing when Jerusalem was waste, and they so far from her ruins? How true it is that exile from the presence of God takes the song from our heart, and music from our lips. Only the holy soul in fellowship with God can sing the songs of Zion. Directly it is carried captive into the strange land of worldliness, it ceases to sing.

The Psalmist had Jerusalem written upon his heart. A passion of loyalty swept over him as he thought about the Holy City. Would that we loved the Church of God with equal fondness, and made her prosperity the crown and summit of our endeavour—"above the head of our joy"!

7-9. The Destruction of Babylon. This desire for the destruction of the enemies of the chosen people is of course far beneath the standard of Christ, but how well we can understand it. As we read of 30,000 Christians having been immolated by the merciless barbarity of the Turk, it is impossible to repress the desire that that empire should be demolished. We have no vindictive feelings towards individual Turks, but we solemnly ask that God would vindicate his justice by sweeping the empire away with the besom of destruction. The children of Edom had rejoiced over the captivity of their hereditary foes, and God could not forget them; at least, such was the distinct belief of this singer who, in prophetic mood, proclaimed God's judgments even more than he uttered personal revenge.

SATURDAY, October 3. Psalm cxxxviii.

The Psalm of the Lowly.

1-3. God's wondrous dealing. Evidently some great blessing had been recently bestowed on David, to whom the Psalm is ascribed. In the esteem of the singer, this recent manifestation of the love of God was even greater than the Divine name and character as it had been revealed in former days. Are there not times in your life when it appears as though God has outdone Himself in some special act of deliverance which rears itself above all the tableland of mercy, on which you have been long accustomed to dwell?

4-6. The effect of the story of God's wondrous dealings. The singer goes forth to be the world's evangelist, carrying with him the story of the words which Jehovah has fulfilled in his case to the lowliest of the lowly. And as the tidings spread, it seems to him that the kings of the earth turn to Him with adoration, and sing of His ways. It is a prevision of the day when the story of the love of God in Christ will compel the homage of the kings of the realms of science, art, and commerce.

7, 8. The comfort of the thoughts of God's wonderful love. We may have to walk in the midst of trouble, but God will keep us from death. We may be surrounded by the wrath of our enemies, but the strong hand of omnipotent love shall save us.

The last verse is specially beautiful. I think it is more often on my own lips than any verse in the Psalter. What God begins, He perfects. Our security rests not on anything that we are, but on His changeless and enduring love.

GOSPEL PROGRESS IN BIBLE LANDS.

ALTHOUGH the blight of Islam remains upon the Bible Lands, and there is no whit of falling off in the propagandist efforts of the followers of Mohammed, it is evident that the collapse of the Turkish power, with its corrupt and degrading system, and its hatred of Christianity, becomes more and more imminent. In the day of its downfall we may prayerfully anticipate that freedom for Gospel preaching will obtain; meantime, much is being accomplished for the cause of Christ by the educational and Samaritan enterprises of societies and individuals, and these with one voice heartily recognise the timely help afforded them by the Lord's people in this country, through the medium of the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society.

MOHAMMEDAN DARKNESS.

On the present deplorable condition of the Bible Lands, from a Christian standpoint, there is little need to dwell, for where Mohammedanism is, there, to adopt the phrase of Livingstone, is an "open sore of the world." As Sir William Muir wrote:—

> Three radical evils flow from this faith: (1) Polygamy, divorce and slavery are maintained and perpetuated, striking at the root of public morals, poisoning domestic life, and disorganizing society. (2) Freedom of thought and private judgment in religion are crushed and annihilated. The sword still is, and must remain, the inevitable penalty for the renunciation of Islam. Toleration is unknown. (3) A barrier has been interposed against the reception of Christianity. They labour under a miserable delusion who suppose that Mohammedanism paves the way to a purer faith. No system could have been devised with more consummate skill for shutting out the nations over which it has sway from the light of truth.

Moreover, the sad condition of the professedly Christian sects is an important feature of the position. As Dr. H. H. Jessup has pointed out:—

> They have never felt the impulse of such an awakening as shook all Europe in the days of the Reformation. They are among the greatest obstacles to the conversion of their Mohammedan neighbours. They all hold the doctrines of transubstantiation, of baptismal regeneration, priestly absolution, Mariolatry and saint worship, auricular confession, and prayers for the dead. Instruction in the Scriptures is unknown.

Evangelical Christianity had its pioneer workers in the near East in the second decade of the nineteenth century, when agents of the Church Missionary Society endeavoured to evangelize the Mohammedan population. But the hopes of the first founders of the Society were not fulfilled. Moslem fanaticism utterly repudiated the Gospel when presented in a pure form. In 1820, however, two agents of the American Board of Foreign Missions began, at Smyrna, the great work which has spread in so remarkable a manner, until the pupils of its educational institutions are to be counted by thousands.

THE SOCIETY INAUGURATED.

It was in 1854 that a meeting was called, in London, by Rev. C. G. Young, to discuss the situation. Many prominent men attended, and the outcome was the inauguration, at a public meeting in Exeter Hall, of the Turkish Missions Aid Society. The Earl of Shaftesbury occupied the chair as president of the new organization, and the co-operation was secured of Christians representing many communities. In 1893 it was decided to alter the title of the society to that which it now bears. Its sphere includes Greece, wherein an Evangelical Church needs fostering help; Macedonia, famed in Apostolic story; Asia Minor; Persia, once covered by Nestorian churches; Arabia, the cradle of Islam; Egypt, where the American Presbyterian Mission has been prospered of God; and, finally, Palestine, Syria, and Cyprus, fragrant with precious memories of our Lord or His Apostles. The funds obtained are devoted to sustaining native churches, orphanages and other Samaritan enterprises, and to evangelistic, educational, and medical work. Both the American, and the many other active toilers whose names are more familiar to us in Britain, have been strengthened to go forward. The Society has been the channel through which a stream of fertilizing aid has flowed into one of the dryest of the world's fields of missionary labour.

REV. W. A. ESSERY.

The present honorary secretary, Rev. W. A. Essery, who took up his work in 1893, had to face peculiar difficulties, of which the declining income was by no means the least; but his enthusiasm and faculty for organization have stood him in good stead, as he has ardently pleaded for the Turk-ridden peoples. He had long been an industrious member of the committee, and was, indeed, one of those appointed to select a new secretary when the post became vacant in 1893. The outlook for some time was dark, for there seemed no likelihood of obtaining a suitable man; but in this period of trial Mr. Essery generously undertook to fulfil the onerous duties without emolument. Thus the way was cleared for renewed progress.

Mr. Essery was born at Bristol, and as a child he attended a Wesleyan chapel with his godly parents. Desires after righteousness were early stirred within him; and while listening to a sermon from a Methodist minister, the light of heaven broke in upon his soul, and he realized the forgiveness of sin. His name was placed upon the prayer-leaders' plan. Visitation, evangelistic labours, and close study, engrossed such time as could be spared from the daily round of business. He preached his first sermon but two months after attaining the age of seventeen, and was soon an active local preacher. The year 1849, it will be remembered, was a disturbed one in the history of Methodism. Mr. Essery sided with the Reformers, and left the old body; still, of course, maintaining his devotion to the cause of Christ. Next year he joined the Independents, and became a preacher of the Bristol Itinerant Society, devoting much time to evangelization in the villages. In 1856 he was accepted as a student at Cheshunt College.

A FRUITFUL MINISTRY.

Mr. Essery had but one pastorate—at that well-known sanctuary, Marlborough Chapel, Old Kent Road, S.E. Although a young man he had already possessed a long experience as preacher and evangelist, and the church, which had fallen upon difficult days, gradually filled. In fact, such progress was made that ultimately there were 500 communicants on the roll. Local stations were established, and soon there were three preaching places and three Sunday-schools. The atmosphere was one of evangelistic fervour. The members threw themselves with ardour into soul-winning work, taking prominent part in the great mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in 1875.

After twenty years, however, Mr. Essery's health broke down, doubtless one contributory cause being the heavy responsibility arising from a re-building scheme. The chapel lease was shortly to expire, and the friends naturally desired to buy the freehold, but that belonged to the Corporation of London, which, with all other Corporations, was by law prohibited from selling freehold sites for Nonconformist places of worship. There was but one solution of the problem—to alter the law, and so Mr. Essery set himself to secure such amendment. This was accomplished by the Act of 1883, which, to the manifest advantage of religious work, empowered corporations and others "to grant sites for places of worship, residences for ministers, and burial grounds." Ultimately, the freehold was purchased and the church rebuilt; but the pastor felt compelled to resign, after a term of twenty-three years of unbroken harmony. Then, subsequent to a season of rest, came the opening for service in connection with the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society.

Mr. Essery was already personally familiar with those lands and their spiritual needs, so that he brought knowledge as well as earnestness to the position which he has so usefully filled during the past ten years. To-day, despite the Sultan and other hindrances, there are tokens of Divine blessing in many parts. Asia Minor, the great field of the American Board, is divided into three sections, Western, Central, and Eastern Turkey Missions; the first is the largest, with seven stations, 116 out-stations, and a native agency of nearly 400 workers. This area includes Broussa Orphanage and the Greek Evangelical Union of Smyrna (under Dr. Moschou), and to each the Society has sent timely help. The gratitude of the American Board was recently expressed by Rev. Dr. Barton, who said, in the course of a striking letter:—

> I am profoundly impressed with the great amount of substantial aid the Society has rendered, during the almost half century of its existence, to the cause of missions in Bible lands. The real extent of this aid and the good accomplished can never be measured by figures or records. Your labours have already become a part of the intellectual and spiritual life of those sacred countries.
> The American Board, because it is conducting a more extensive mission work in those lands, is probably under more direct obligations to you than any other single missionary organization. Our files contain countless letters from our missionaries in Armenia, in northern Syria, in Cappadocia, Pontus, Bithynia, Asia and Macedonia, speaking in terms of sincerest appreciation of the way in which appropriations from your society have tided them over most trying conditions, and, in cases not a few, warded off threatening disaster. You will never know how you have stayed up the hands of weary missionaries as they were almost ready to yield the battle.

Need I assure you that the officers of the American Board, as its missionaries, profoundly appreciate the work you are doing, and wish you large success and great joy in your efforts to reclaim those lands for Jesus Christ?

"SYRIA, PALESTINE AND EGYPT."

Syria and Palestine are, of course, to the Christian heart "the Holy Land" above all others. When the American Mission withdrew from Palestine, all their strength came to the Syrian field, and consequently most of the aids are distributed in Syria. Miss Procter's schools at Schwifat, the British Syrian Mission, the hospital in the Lebanon established by Mrs. Meredith; Miss Taylor's Orphan Schools, and many other enterprises, share in the benefits bestowed through the society. Egypt is becoming the most open and hopeful of all the Moslem Bible lands, and under this profound conviction the committee have given their best efforts to obtain special help for the splendid evangelistic work of the American Presbyterian Mission. Evangelical work in Persia and Greece has also been helped; in the latter a Greek Evangelical Church has been planted by Transatlantic labourers, and has some five or six communities, and four or five out-stations.

THE CRY OF MACEDONIA.

Particular interest necessarily attaches at the present time to Macedonia and Bulgaria. Strong mission centres had been established by bodies of Protestants at Monastir, Salonica, Samokov and Philippopolis; but of the present state of these, more particularly of Monastir, who shall tell? That political revenge has been made the excuse for the wholesale massacre of Christians is clear. Surely, however, the blood of the martyrs shall once again prove the seed of the Church, and from the scene of fiendish outrages which sorely afflict the hearts and minds of believers, there shall arise a new force of Christian evangelists for the propagation of the Gospel in the East. In all that may be undertaken at this time for the relief of God's sufferers in these smitten districts, the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society will assuredly have the earnest support of its friends in the homeland.

During the nearly fifty years of its existence the Society has been entrusted with more than £100,000 to distribute, and it speaks well for the economy with which the funds are administered that during the past ten years, while the total income has been £31,772 19s. 2d., the entire working expenses for that period have been less than £2,360. In 1904 the Society's Jubilee is to be celebrated, when increased efforts are to be put forth to remove the spiritual desolation of the Bible Lands, and to prosecute with intensified zeal the blessed work of their evangelization. A Memorial Volume for Fifty Years by Mr. Essery is already well forward, and may be expected early next year.

Young Christians' Missionary Union.—In connection with the North London Council of this Union, a missionary convention has been arranged to be held at Vernon Chapel, King's Cross Road, W.C., on Saturday next, September 26. The afternoon rally of boys and girls is to be presided over by Mr. Arthur Pye-Smith, when addresses will be given by missionaries, and a missionary demonstration by junior Endeavourers of Vernon Chapel. At the conference and public meeting after tea the chair will be occupied by Rev. Alex. Connell, and the speakers will represent many parts of the mission field.

SOME INCIDENTS.

By Marechale BOOTH-CLIBBORN.

"DO see Mr. X.", said an elderly lady to me one day in the midst of a wonderful work in the town; "he has been attending your meetings in the theatre, and so convinced is he, that he cannot eat, and I hear him pacing his room half the night." "Encourage him to come and see me here," I replied. He came—a very sad story was told with the deepest feeling, a story of sin and of wild, riotous living, followed by real repentance, and works meet for repentance! Since then he has never looked back, but has gone steadily forward, and occupies a prominent position in France to-day in work for the outcast and fallen.

Another strong man follows. "Sit down. I am glad to see you." A burst of tears is the response. I wait. Again my visitor attempts to speak, but fails, and deep sobs shake his manly frame. "Do not trouble to tell me your sorrow. I know it. You are a sinner." "I am a devil, a monster!" he groans. "That may be," I reply; "but you are a prodigal returned to the Father's house. I am so glad to see you." "Me! to see me? You don't know who I am or you would never speak to me!" "That I certainly would. You make me so happy." "Oh, don't say that! I dare not tell you my crimes." "You need not. You have come home, and you are going to be washed, purified, and saved." "But"—with a sob and clenched teeth—"I have done so much evil to other souls." "And you are going to do so much good. You are going to give out blessing where you have cursed and blighted. The Redeemer is rejoicing, and the angels, because you are repenting."

And on our knees together we went to the Father's house, where he was received, and where he is to-day.

. . . . . .

A lady, closely veiled, came to see me. She was young and beautiful, and had three little children, one an infant in arms. Her case was one of the saddest to which I have ever listened, and I have heard thousands. She and her innocent child were suffering from a terrible disease through her husband's misdemeanour. She had tried all that human power and science could do for healing, but in vain, and she was very bitter. A struggle followed, and then a perfectly Divine influence filled the room, and a Divine presence, when that little wife and mother prayed, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive them that trespass against us." The hatred had gone, she had peace—such a peace that her whole face beamed before she left me.

"I am so ashamed, too ashamed to tell you madam, of my horrible sin. I thought it was forgotten, buried, but since listening to you it has come before me, and so great is my anguish of heart that I wish to die." And then in a few brief words, a deed committed twenty years ago, with all its eternal consequences, was told.

"Can I be forgiven? Will you absolve me?" "I can tell you of One who gives absolution." The dear old man accepted Christ as his Saviour there and then. "And now," I said, "leave this room determined to let your life become His so completely that He can give you His Spirit, that henceforth He may inspire all your thoughts and words."

. . . . . .

"Yes, it is I. You have seen me night after night in the reserved seats. You know who I am—one of the first society ladies of the city. But I have come to say who I really am—only a Magdalene, and since I have been listening to you, it has been hard to bear the usual respect and deference of all my friends. I am a fallen woman, no better than one on the streets, and no one, no one in the city, and no one in the family, knows it!" After a few minutes' perfect silence, only disturbed by her weeping, I said, "Yes, but He can raise the lowest highest, and can transform a devi into an angel."

I could go on and multiply, but this is enough to illustrate what I mean by the office of the true priest, who is to unbind souls on earth that they may be unbound in heaven.

The advice I have given with regard to the past has been to make restitution when possible, and we have had remarkable instances of the carrying out of this law.

For example, murders have been confessed to the authorities, anarchists have publicly denounced their infernal theories at the risk of their lives, and have begun to preach the Gospel. Another, who had been engaged in a secret plot against the President of the French Republic, sobbed it all out with tears, burned the fatal documents, and handed over his revolver to us. Several men have been stopped from carrying out the most deadly plans of crime. One man, instead of killing his father at the time appointed, was weeping over his sins.

Another of the most beautiful, touching acts of restitution was in the case of parents, who for years had refused to acknowledge their child, wilfully lost sight of as a thing of shame. Once the grace of God touched their hearts, their sin rose before them, and they did everything in their power to find her. At last they succeeded, and the woman with whom the child lived wrote how she had been longing to see her mother. They went to the station to meet her on arrival. What tears of joy as they embraced each other for the first time! She was reinstalled with her sisters and brothers before the whole town. "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound."

A Plea for Macedonian Christians.

Alas! what agonizing cries
From Macedonian saints arise!
The cruel Turks, intent to crush,
With sword and rifle on them rush;
Our help and sympathy they need,
And for the same devoutly plead;
Their exercise, let them obtain,
In this, their hour of grief and pain!

Britons for Turks have nobly fought,
But friendship shown, now goes for nought;
Unmindful of the debt they owe,
They every trace of thanks forego.
Like wanton tigers, all they seek
Is, on the helpless ones to wreak
Their love to torture and torment—
On ruin and injustice bent!

Britain looks on—not void of tears,
But hasty interference fears;
A choking sense of wrong she feels,
But, her emotions deep, conceals!
She looks—she weeps—she longs to aid
To check the demons—she's afraid!
And Europe in its wide extent
At heart distressed, yet seems content!

Ye British Christians, what for you
Remains, as worthy men to do?
A Throne of Grace there is, and there
Relief is found in ardent prayer;
There guidance, too, as well demands
Compliance of our hearts and hands.
To that refrain—for not in vain,
Believers to their Lord complain.

Egypt, and Babylon, and Rome
(Absorbed—like ocean's transient foam),
Express his mighty power to chase
Presuming tyrants from their place;
And will He spare His cruel foes
Who now His chosen ones oppose?
Impossible! their doom is sure,
Though long His patience may endure.

Jesus! Thy energies exceed
All human thought—for these we plead.
"All power in Heaven and earth is Thine,"
To counteract each base design.
When human passions rage and swell,
Fomented by the heats of hell,
Like angry billows—Thou canst say
"Be still!" and lo! they own Thy sway!

Momentous issues on us crowd,
And far and near, in accents loud,
Thy suffering ones upon Thee call,
Whose power extends through regions all.
All barriers to Thy rightful reign
Break down, and man's strong foe enchain!
Thy gracious promises fulfil
When love the spacious earth shall fill.

R. Aikenhead.

Moseley Village, near Birmingham.

"After Many Days."

A BEAUTIFUL story in connection with the Jewish Mission is unfolded in the following letter written by one missionary to another:—

"My dear Mr. Bergmann,—I recently had occasion to address a Christian Endeavour meeting at a mission hall in Walthamstow. When the meeting was over, the superintendent introduced to me an elderly man, as a Hebrew-Christian who had lately come out on the Lord's side. This new-born brother expressed a wish that I should visit him, as he was anxious to know more about the Way of Life. When I called upon him, we had a very happy time; and as I was blessed in my own soul, I feel you ought to have a share in that blessing, because the Lord revealed your labours in His own way.

"During our conversation this new brother remarked: 'I wonder whether you could tell me anything about a missionary whom I knew more than thirty years ago! Before he became a believer, he was the Rabbi of our synagogue.' (At this point I was all ears, and your name came across my mind, but I thought I had better listen quietly without interrupting). 'One day,' he continued, 'this young man was taken ill, and went into the German Hospital. When he came out, he disappeared. We all wondered what had become of him, and I suggested that we, the members of the synagogue, should go and look for him among the missionaries. We did so, and on coming to Palestine Place we discovered our man. We tried to persuade him to come away with us, but he would not listen. Seeing that we could not succeed, I suggested that we should charge him with theft, in the hope that this would disgrace him in the eyes of the Christians, and that they would turn him out. A policeman was called, and the young man was taken to Bishopsgate Street Police Station, where he was detained overnight, as the theft was supposed to have been committed in that district. It was on the first day of the Passover Feast. I took some passover cakes and fish to him at the police station, and asked him to reconsider his position—either to renounce Christ or go to prison. He refused to withdraw his confession of Christ, nor would he accept the food. The next day he was brought before the Lord Mayor at the Mansion House and charged. The evidence was contradictory, and the Lord Mayor saw through it all, with the result that the case was dismissed.'

"I asked whether my new acquaintance could tell the name of the young man, and he replied that he only knew his Jewish name 'Marcus,' but he did not know his surname. He then went on to say: 'I saw this young man once after the case was tried; he called at my house to see me, but as he preached to me about Christ, I forbade him ever to come to see me again.' Having read your biography, I was prepared to answer the question as to the identity of 'Marcus.' I told the man that the missionary in question was still a faithful witness for the Master, and that the Lord had blessed him greatly. Seeing on the table the Yiddish Psalter and the 'Promised Messiah' in Hebrew, I asked him to hand me the books, and opening them, pointed out your name on the title pages as translator. 'I never!' he exclaimed, with tears in his eyes. 'To have his works here, and drink from the living waters, without knowing that it is he whom I wronged that is ministering to me words of Life! I should like to ask him to forgive me.'

"I promised to go with you to see him. Not only is he himself a converted man, but his wife and children have come out on the Lord's side, and they are very anxious to confess Christ publicly by baptism. He and his wife read the Scriptures to their Jewish neighbours. He is an employer of labour, and preaches Christ to his Jewish employés. Trusting this will cheer you on the way, and that the Lord will continue to bless your ministry amongst our Jewish brethren, believe me yours sincerely in the Lord Jesus, "P. L. Dornbusch.

"371, Hoe Street, Walthamstow."

[We understand that since the above letter was written, the aged Hebrew Christian referred to has submitted to the ordinance of Baptism. Reflecting upon the past and looking forward to the future, he says he is not likely to be called upon to suffer half so much persecution as befell those of his brethren according to the flesh whom he sought to hinder from following Christ during many years!]

Jews in East London.

AMONG the numerous agencies at work for the evangelization of London Jews, we would not overlook one which has stations in the West as well as the East, and is carried on by Messrs. D. C. Joseph and H. Barnett. These are brethren of the quiet order; but with their quietness they combine a large measure of persistence and devotion to the Gospel cause in the midst of Israel.

The meeting on Saturday last, in the hall of the George Yard Mission, Whitechapel, had many features in common with those of other missions to the Jews; but the personality of the workers infused a distinctive solemnity into the proceedings. Within a few hours the Jews were to enter upon the feasts and fasts of the month Tishri, and this fact gave colour to the various addresses that were delivered. The audience was not without its restless members, but this did not disturb or daunt the speakers, who had definite Gospel messages, which they delivered in a faithful and impressive manner.

First came Mr. Joseph, who has been before the world for many years in this particular line of service. He called upon his brethren, while exercised in mind, as at the present season, regarding the Divine scrutiny into their lives during the past year, to consider the claims of Christ. He preached Him as the Messiah of ancient promise—at once Saviour and Judge. Only through Him can the soul be cleansed; in Him and His salvation Jew and Gentle alike may find peace and joy. The aged believer's words were received with marked deference and attention.

Mr. Barnett followed with an address upon the words spoken by Isaiah, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because He hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek," &c. (Isa. lxi. 1). He dealt seriatim with the clauses of this lively oracle, and described the incident at Nazareth in which Christ applied the words to Himself, and added, "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears." All the points of the text were pressed in a loving manner. Both in argument and appeal, Mr. Barnett was earnest and cogent, and he was listened to with encouraging attention.

Last came Mr. M. Saison, formerly of Jerusalem. He spoke on words suggested by the observances of the opening month—Repentance, Prayer, Righteousness. There is a world of difference between the Christian view of these things and the corresponding Rabbinical conceptions; and the speaker presented sound teaching in an eloquent and striking way.

Of course, the addresses were in Yiddish. The audience was made up of men who had been personally invited in by helpers around the door of the hall. Troops of Jews were passing up and down in a leisurely way, and though those who entered were not the most stylish, they were possibly some of the most open-minded, and therefore most ready to give a hearing to the "strange things" proclaimed by the evangelists.

London Missionary Society.—While the dominant note of the newly-issued report of the London Missionary Society is one of gratitude for the removal of the burden of debt, there is matter for grave searching of heart in the accounts of reduced and restricted work. All will rejoice in indications of elasticity in income; and the self-sacrificing spirit of the missionaries ought to spur many on to renewed effort for their support. Country after country is passed under review in the most interesting fashion, and the fact brought home that God has not forgotten any one of His faithful servants; but is working in and through them in the measure of His own mighty power. The book should be in every Christian household.

Ministering to the Blind.

FOR sixty-eight years the Indigent Blind Visiting Society has concerned itself with the needs of London's sightless poor, and in every part of the Metropolis there are those who have derived benefit from its ministrations. To the wide circle of friends who have a warm regard for Mr. Mead, the superintendent, and his work, nothing is more cheering than to learn of the continued experience of Divine favour and blessing in this branch of Christian service. The recently published report takes account of many interesting cases dealt with by the workers in the course of visiting, educating, and relieving the blind poor:—

One of our cases, a mat-maker, was brought to a stop in his work by the breaking down of his loom. The Society paid half the expense of a new one, a friend paying the remainder. The new loom was made by another of our blind men, who is a carpenter by trade, and although the mat-maker was very doubtful as to the result when it was first suggested by the visitor that the carpenter in question should undertake the work, he is now delighted by the possession of a good and substantial new loom so completely to his satisfaction that he regards the construction of it as a surprising feat on the part of his blind friend.

Another case is that of a man who for years chopped wood and sold it from door to door. As his wife also earned something by her sewing-machine, the couple managed to make a fair living. To better his position he took a small shop, with a stable and good yard connected with it. Unfortunately as he moved into his new premises there was much distress owing to want of work among the poor people in the neighbourhood, and in consequence his receipts fell considerably, and the man became discouraged. Our visitor had a talk with him about his troubles, and as it seemed likely that by adding to his business the sale of coal, coke, &c., he would do well, money was found for the purchase of scales, weights, and the necessary stock. He is now fairly started, and we hope will do well.

The Society's operations are singularly beneficent. Not the least interesting of these is the organization of excursions and holidays for the blind poor. A thousand men and women, with guides, are taken into the country for a day; and many are sent to the seaside for a fortnight's stay. Towards these departments special help is given by supporters of the Society. One poor fellow, whose life has recently been brightened in this way, was not only sightless but had lost the use of both legs. He is a happy Christian; and, provided with a bath-chair, he and his wife were sent to Southend, where the monotony of their lives was most pleasantly broken. Another person similarly benefited was a woman of seventy, a pensioner on the funds of the Society. The holiday put new life into her, and at the close she declared that it made her feel "like a young 'gal' again!"

It has been decided to hold another special mission for the blind and their guides of London and its suburbs. It will be held under the auspices of the Society, and the expense will be borne by a lady friend of the work. The meetings will be held at eleven different centres, and a free tea will be provided on each occasion. Last autumn the number reached by such a mission was over 4,000. From testimony given by the blind themselves, and by letters received through the Society's missionaries, it is clear that distinct blessing was experienced in many cases. Names and addresses of blind persons residing in London and its suburbs, not known to the Society, will be thankfully received at the office, 8, Red Lion Square, Holborn, W.C., or by Mr. W. Mead, Superintendent, 95, Gurney Road, Stratford, E.

Dublin Christian Convention.—The programme has been issued of the annual Dublin Christian Convention to be held (D.V.) from Monday, 28th inst., to Friday, October 2. Among others, Revs. S. A. Selwyn, E. J. Kennedy, George Jackson, J. G. Train, E. L. Hamilton, Llewellyn Lloyd, and Stephen Thomas, Dr. Baedeker, and Canon O'Connor, are expected to take part. Prayer is being offered for much blessing upon the Convention, and on the mission to be conducted by Gipsy Smith shortly after.

Torrey-Alexander Mission.

SECOND WEEK IN LIVERPOOL.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THOSE responsible for the arrangements for the mission have found their hands more than full in dealing with the surging crowds seeking admission during the second week of the meetings. On several nights as many people have been shut out as have gained admission to the hall. No such crowds have been seen in Liverpool at Gospel meetings for many years past. As soon as the afternoon meetings have been over, people have begun to surround the doors, and a few minutes after the opening every bit of standing room has been occupied. In order to give working men an opportunity of being present, the floor of the hall has been reserved for men—an arrangement which has been much appreciated and fully taken advantage of.

THE CLAIMS OF THE BIBLE.

A special feature of the week has been the doctor's lectures to business men on "Why I believe the Bible to be the Word of God." These have been attended by large and increasing audiences, who have listened with interest to the cogent arguments by which he has sought to demonstrate the claims of the Bible upon men as the Word of God. Not a few have pressed round the doctor to express their thanks for the light thrown upon points which had hitherto perplexed them. The most sceptical must have been impressed by the strength of the case presented. In these lectures Dr. Torrey is seen at his best; all his training, early experiences, and later work have combined to equip him for this special warfare against unbelief.

The afternoon meetings have been attended more largely than in the first week. Dr. Torrey's Bible talks on Prayer occupied the first three days, as he multiplied telling points, and with apt illustrations imparted a new impetus and reality to prayer in the minds of those who heard, Nothing is more helpful than the clear ring of certainty that characterises the doctor's utterances. Another result of these afternoon meetings has been the laying of the burden of souls upon the hearts of believers.

The week has shown that the Gospel clearly, earnestly, and lovingly presented, has as much power to fascinate the masculine intelligence, and win the masculine heart as the feminine, in spite of all that is said to the contrary. It is impossible to describe the effect of these addresses, winged as they were by the power of the Holy Spirit. At times the whole audience was swayed by an unseen Presence. Men felt that eternal issues were being decided, and when the invitation was given to those who were willing to accept the Lord Jesus Christ to come to the front of the Hall, troops of men and women of all ages responded.

YOUNG CONVERTS AT WORK.

During the week about 500 men and an equal number of women have professed faith in Jesus Christ, many of the men having been brought to the meetings by those converted in the first week. Dr. Torrey's work has been greatly aided by the singing of Mr. Alexander and his choir, which has not only lent interest and life to the meetings, but has helped to spread the influence of the mission through the whole district. The testimonies given in writing and by spoken word abundantly prove that these songs have been greatly used already; and certainly no man has ever brought as much music out of a Liverpool audience as Mr. Alexander has succeeded in producing. He uses his splendid choir to teach the people to sing, until both combine in a great outburst of praise.

The arrangements for reaching the employés in factories and workshops have been effectively carried out. Day by day quite an army of preachers have gone forth, and have been received very heartily by the toilers, who have listened with respectful attention to the Gospel message, which some of them have not heard for many a year. Mr. Alexander went out to Aintree on Wednesday, and addressed about 1,000 working men and women, a goodly number of whom professed to accept Christ. In several cases a very gracious work has been done through these noonday meetings. They have greatly increased the interest of the working-people in the mission, which will necessitate holding special sectional meetings, so great is the desire to hear the Word.

LARGE GATHERING OF WORKERS.

Hundreds of Liverpool's Christian workers were early astir on Sunday morning, looking forward to a busy and happy day. At eight o'clock about 2,000 were gathered together in the Philharmonic Hall, when Dr. Torrey had promised to explain "How each one could win a Soul for Christ." At this meeting the card, "Get right with God," was distributed among the workers, more than 100,000 copies being eagerly taken, and during the day busy hands were distributing them in all parts of the city.

The afternoon meeting for women was crowded long before the time of commencing, hundreds finding their way to the overflow meeting. Dr. Torrey spoke on the "Cost of not being a Christian," and at the close a great number of women came forward to confess faith in Christ.

The evening witnessed another packed meeting. This time every niche of seating or standing room was occupied by men. Nothing has been more remarkable during this mission than the way in which Dr. Torrey has been able to lay hold of and impress hard-headed men. They have come in ever-increasing crowds, and listened with rapt attention to the manly, straightforward addresses given by the doctor. On Sunday evening about 200 publicly professed their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. This third Sunday has been the most remarkable day of the Liverpool meetings. About 1,500 up to the present have come out, as evidence that they have accepted Christ.

A Cry from Budapest.

AT Budapest, the oldest station of our Scottish Mission to the Jews, we are often led to think of the past, and to pray, "Renew our days as of old!" We have been recently stirred by accounts of revival from places in Great Britain and Ireland, formerly visited with showers of blessing, and now refreshed thus again; and we are moved to ask friends to plead that we may have quickening here also, as in the memorable days of the beginning of our mission.

The Archduke Joseph, on receiving from me a copy of "Israel's Return and Other Verses," was pleased graciously to reply that "it recalled past happy days," and it encouraged us greatly that His Imperial and Royal Highness felt free to send such a message to our Mission. The prayers of his reverend mother, the Archduchess Maria Dorothea, were a link in the chain which united the Hungarian and Scottish Churches, and the prayer of many a humble saint, whose name we have never known, has doubtless ascended since, and through the Lord's answer brought us help.

We have re-opened our school with nearly 300 children, many of whom are of the House of Israel, and were it not for the active opposition of the Jewish officials we might have many more. We have also begun the evangelistic meetings of the new season with a large attendance. Recent baptisms have likewise cheered us. A heavy deficit on the general fund of the mission causes, however, unexpected difficulty. With a view to meet this I have suggested to our committee a self-denial week, to commence on the Jewish Day of Atonement, October 1. Our convener makes the proposal known to our church in this month's number of our Missionary Record, and in a warm appeal invites response.

By the kindness of the editor, I have the privilege of asking readers of THE CHRISTIAN to join us "for Zion's sake," and in doing so I call to mind those lines from the history of the early Church (Acts iv. 32, 34): "Neither said any that ought of the things which he possessed was his own;" "neither was there any among them that lacked."

Bible-Class Federation.

THE eighth annual meeting of the Bible Class Federation was held at Exeter Hall on Saturday. A large company drawn from many parts of the kingdom listened to an encouraging report presented by the secretary. It indicated that in the course of the year there has been an increase of thirty-five classes, and that progress has been made in every direction.

Mr. HERBERT E. BINSTEAD introduced the Federation Forward Movement. This organization aims at conducting a vigorous campaign throughout the country to secure the affiliation of all Bible classes, and for this purpose is seeking to raise a guarantee fund of £350 per annum for the next three years.

An impressive address by the president, Rev. W. J. DAWSON, dealt with the "Uses of Bible Classes." Among the many reasons which may be advanced in support of this branch of Christian work, Mr. Dawson emphasized the following: (1) The Bible class is a distinct stimulus to thought; (2) It plays an important part in relation to piety; (3) It has far-reaching effect in the building of character; (4) the social bond created by it is the highest possible value. Rev. David Walker, of Belle Isle, followed with practical experience in the conduct of Bible classes.

Harley House Activities.

FRIENDS of Harley House and the Regions Beyond Missionary Union will read with unfeigned pleasure the following particulars, embodied in a circular bearing the signatures of Rev. F. B. Meyer and Dr. Harry Guinness:—

Although day by day during the vacation we were bearing before the Lord the spiritual and financial needs of the work, and knew that our Heavenly Father had heard our requests, nevertheless the dawn of September came to us almost with a shock of surprise. We remembered that within four days the large Congo party was due to sail, and as far as we were aware sufficient funds had not come to hand. We hastened to London in order to see if some of the party ought not to be delayed. After prolonged consultation and prayer, it was felt to be imperative that all should be sent to the front, and we were glad to find that at the various farewell meetings friends had helped to make this possible; and early on September 4, our brethren and sisters were waving their farewells as the train steamed out of Waterloo for Southampton.

Deeply interesting news has just reached us from the Congo with regard to the blessing vouchsafed at some of our up-river stations in answer to many prayers. May the Lord grant a continuance and deepening of this gracious movement, and greatly encourage the hearts of the brave men and women who for His sake are toiling in the high places of the field.

Concerning the work in London, we are glad to say that the number of suitable applicants for training has been more numerous than for some years past, so that both Doric Lodge and Harley College will be crowded, and some promising candidates have had to be postponed for want of room.

October 2 will be the occasion of the inaugural services of the session. At the afternoon prayer-meeting (3.30) an address will be delivered by Pastor Wright Hay. Tea is to be at five o'clock, and from six to eight we hope to continue our devotional meetings, and to hear messages from Mr. Walter B. Sloan (C.I.M.) and other workers. Although during the summer months the colleges are empty, our current expenditure is only slightly reduced, as the main responsibilities of the Union are in the foreign field, and these continue the same all the year round. We shall be immensely relieved in facing the toil and obligations of a new session if our friends throughout the country will rally to our help at this juncture. Many have done nobly, and we are their debtors. We feel sure that this plea will not fall unheeded on the hearts of those who really long for the advent of the kingdom.

Dr. Campbell Morgan's Visit.

IMPRESSIONS OF AMERICA.

NEW COURT CHAPEL, Tollington Park, was crowded with an appreciative audience on Friday evening last to hear Rev. Dr. G. Campbell Morgan give some "Observations on Things American." From the outset the complexity of the problem presented on the religious side of the life of the Republic had impressed him deeply; and in order to find a basis for the better understanding of it he had made a systematic study of American history from the American standpoint, which he had found fascinating. To his surprise he learned that the predominating element in the original colonization was not Puritan, but "Pilgrim"; and, in addition to the Protestant settlements (including those of Anglican origin) seeking liberty to worship God according to their consciences, Maryland was colonized by Roman Catholics with the same end in view. From the fact that the original colonies were founded on a religious basis, there grew up a connection between church membership and public office which led to Rationalism and Unitarianism in more than one direction, in others to persecution on ecclesiastical lines which drove certain companies further out in search of a larger freedom.

PRECEPT WITHOUT PRACTICE.

Referring to the foundation of Philadelphia by William Penn, and the assertion in Pennsylvania of the two great legal principles—(1) the liberty of the people to make their own laws, (2) obedience to the laws they had made—Dr. Morgan deserbed as one of the saddest things in America that, while the first principle is still operative by the enactment, for instance, of restrictions of the drink traffic, it is found impossible to enforce these. This state of municipal corruption he traced to the marvellous growth of the country, and the rapid accumulation of wealth.

Since going to America two years ago Dr. Morgan said he had conducted meetings for Bible teaching in fifty-two cities, had travelled by railway 67,855 miles, and had addressed two-and-three-quarter millions of people. He had been told that he would find sectarianism more marked than at home. In certain respects, such as the intermingling of congregations, this was true; but on the other hand, there was a readiness to invite pastors from one denomination to another unknown in this country. His own meetings had been nearly all union gatherings, but this was so exceptional that the success of the experiment had in many places excited surprise. The Free Church Federation Movement has not yet taken hold, but it is coming, and the best results are to be expected from it.

Religious conviction had, he believed, in no way suffered from the absence of a State Church. Turning to the effect of the nominally secular educational system, he found that Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations flourished in the Universities in a fashion that was new to him, and have a greater hold on the young people than anything with which he was previously familiar.

SIGNS OF AWAKENING.

There is, unfortunately, a great lack of reverence in worship, and it was noticeable how seldom family life and church life came into touch. Pulpit oratory of an old-fashioned type is more common than in England, but there is much less expository preaching or real Bible teaching. There were, however, signs that the tide had turned in this respect. In fact he had found a great hunger for Bible teaching, and it had been his privilege to address many meetings of ministers who desired to preach the Word of God, and to know how to deal with the Word.

Looking at the masses of the people rather than the churches, the word which characterized the religious outlook was Indifference. This has been caused by the note of uncertainty in preaching. There has been an absence of passion; but in proportion as preachers are coming back to certainty and authority, and they are doing so, there has been a revival of fire and enthusiasm, with an arousing of interest outside and a crowding of men to hear the Message so preached. The country is on the eve of a deep spiritual revival, which is coming not only in the church, but also outside in most unexpected ways.

FREEDOM AND ROMAN CATHOLICISM.

As a striking illustration of the rapidity and completeness with which immigrants become Americanised and imbibe the spirit of freedom, Dr. Morgan instanced the fact that the Romish hierarchy declared for America in the war with Spain. The spirit of freedom has so permeated Roman Catholicism that he would not be surprised to see a complete rupture between the Roman Catholics of America and the great mother Church. He had himself met a priest returning after a visit to Europe, and found the man broken-hearted at what he had seen, especially in Rome—wishing with all his heart that he had never come into contact with the actualities, and that Rome had remained to him an ideal.

Corruption is to a Christian the outstanding feature of American civic life. For a second time Tammany has been ousted from the government of New York, but it looks as though Tammany would be able to go back again with more power than ever. The evil influences never rest, but Christian sentiment thinks that because it has won a victory it has done so for ever, forgetting that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." It is terribly hard to arouse Christian men to their duty in this respect; but the only way in which an American city will be saved will be by the quickening of the Christian conscience about matters municipal and political.

THE SECRET OF POWER.

Sunday morning brought fresh evidence of Dr. Morgan's popularity in North London. Before the time came for opening the service New Court Chapel was crowded in every part. The sermon was a powerful appeal for a complete surrender to Christ on the part of Christians who cannot understand the fruitlessness of their own efforts among others. As the audience was very largely composed of persons on the younger side of life, the sermon had a special significance as a trumpet call to service.

After reading Ezekiel xvii. and John iv. 4-14, the text was found in John vii. 37, 38. With a few vivid touches the position of the Lord Jesus at the Feast of Tabernacles was made clear, as He came not to set aside the old, but to fulfil and carry on to fruition that which had been strictly limited. The marching every day for seven days to the Kedron to draw water, which was then poured out in the Temple, was taken as God's showing forth of a new age or dispensation—an age symbolised by water, by its being poured forth, by its being sprinkled among men for their cleansing, by its turning deserts into gardens. Because there was no pouring forth of water on the eighth, "the last day of the feast," because the time typified had not yet come, it was chosen by the Lord for His great invitation to every thirsty one to come and drink.

Attention was mainly devoted to "the law of the spiritual life as revealed in the text"—that personal thirst must be quenched before any individual can become a source of blessing to others. As a summing up came the deduction that thirsty souls cannot be sources of blessing. The magnificence of the text lies in the fact that it does not define the thirst—not even as spiritual; but presents a challenge to the need of the world, in a word addressed to human nature which makes a claim of ability to deal with every kind of thirst of which a man may be conscious.

Thirst may be sensual: that is, it may have to do with the life of the senses. The child of God may, for instance, become inspired with a passion for gold, for fame, for excitement, for companionship, for rest, even for purity. Taking the first as typical, it was used as an illustration of a claim that every evil thing manifested in this way is based upon right, wrong being always the prostitution of right. The thirst will be lifted to a higher plane, and the foolishness shown of setting the heart on things that moths or rust can spoil, or thieves carry away. Toil, work, strive, but look for your dividends on the eternal morning. The appreciation of the audience became audible as the preacher applied in the most matter-of-fact and personal way the Lord's injunction to make friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, by using it in such a way that when the shadows are falling there may be some to welcome us on the portal of the other world whom we blessed with it here.

In the evening the chapel was more thronged than ever, large numbers being turned away from the doors. Addressing himself to those who knew not the Saviour, Dr. Morgan preached an impassioned discourse from the words, "One thing thou lackest." The word was with power. God's people were deeply stirred, and in answer to a simple invitation, more than thirty anxious inquirers came forward seeking counsel and guidance in spiritual things.

AT EXETER HALL.

Under the auspices of the Central Y.M.C.A., Dr. Morgan is conducting a Bible Reading each afternoon this week, with a meeting in the evening for young men only, at Exeter Hall. A similar mission conducted last winter gave a great impetus to the work of the Association. The primary intention is to bring the Christian young men together that their own spiritual life may be quickened and revived, in order that they may then go forth among their fellows with fresh power; and experience has shown that such times were followed by seasons of activity and fruitfulness.

On Monday afternoon there was an excellent gathering. Dr. Morgan explained that, while in no way under-valuing the work of the preacher or teacher, he had recently been more deeply impressed than ever with the need for personal study of the Word of God. His subject for the day was "How to Study the Divine Library," and on the later afternoons he hoped to point out some definite lines of study therein. At the outset he explained that he had nothing to say to any who did not regard the Bible as the Word of God, instead of merely containing the Word. It is the speech of God to man, and the purpose of study is to discover His will.

No man can study the Word of God until he has learned that he needs for every part of it the guidance of the great Author; while the law of advance in the study of Scripture is the law of obedience to, and realization in character of all light already received. Then there must be the disciple's heart, with willingness to learn and readiness to work. We can never know the Word of God save as we settle down and are prepared to put it into practice.

We must (1) read the Bible, (2) examine it, and (3) meditate upon it—not only think but bring the life into the light of the thing discovered. Dr. Morgan insisted that all mechanical arrangements must be swept away, getting into our minds the general scope of the Book, and realising that it has a system, that the structure of the Old Testament is the structure of the New. Let the student take a single book, read it again and again until he has got a clear idea of the argument, analyse, and examine. Then each section should be taken more minutely in the same fashion; and lastly, the book must be taken word for word until the structure and purpose of each has been appreciated. Then there ought to follow prayerful meditation.

Monday evening was a solemn time, the excellent gathering of young men showing that a deep interest had been aroused in the movement. On the words "Born of God" (John i. 14), an address was based which searched the hearts of the hearers, as the tremendous demands of Christ were powerfully driven home.

Trinitarian Bible Society.—Recalling a recent report, it may be remarked that the version of the Basque New Testament which this Society has published is that of Leicarraga, which is the first re-production of that translation since the Reformation. The new feature of the Gospel being issued for the Kabyles of North Africa is that it is in Arabic characters, with accents and points.

Boys and Girls in Macedonia.

I AM going to write, dear young readers, about the distressed land of Macedonia in South-Eastern Europe, a mountainous country, not unlike Switzerland, which has Roumelia on the east, Albania on the west, Servia on the north-west, and Bulgaria on the north-east, while the blue sparkling waves of the Ægean Sea wash its southern shores. In the highland region of Macedonia a fertile soil and beautiful scenery abound, making it hard to believe there is almost everywhere suffering and terror. In fact, only about half of the soil of Macedonia is tilled, the remainder being uncultivated, awaiting means of irrigation and a better Government. If these were secured Macedonia would be one of the fairest and wealthiest countries in Europe, whereas it is one of the saddest and most wretched, owing to Turkish misrule.

For many centuries Macedonia has been oppressed by the Turks, and, notwithstanding many promises of change, nothing has been done in the way of lightened taxation and a just rule. Hence, at the present hour, the Macedonian peasants and mountaineers are fighting to secure freedom. Unhappily it seems as though they would be crushed by the tens of thousands of Turkish soldiers pouring into the land, who are committing the most dreadful massacres even upon the women and children. Let us pray that in Macedonia's dark day our Heavenly Father may raise up protectors and guardians from the nations of Europe on behalf of these poor people.

My young friends ought specially to be interested in the spiritual welfare of Macedonia, because it was the first country in Europe where the Gospel was preached. The Apostle Paul, as it is recorded in that wonderful sixteenth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, saw in a vision a man of Macedonia, who prayed him, "Come over into Macedonia and help us." Promptly he replied by setting sail over the Ægean waters, and landed at Neapolis (Caralla), and afterwards went to Philippi (Filiba), to spread His Master's message. In those days the call sounded for help from the heathen West to the Christian East; now it sounds from the heathen East to the Christian West.

Since 1850, noble missionaries of the American (Congregational) Board of Missions have carried on Gospel work in Bulgaria and Macedonia, having some fifteen missionaries and their wives in the former country, and seven in the latter, besides a large number of Bible-women and native teachers. In Macedonia, which has a population of 2,000,000, about 1,000,000 are termed Christians, though they are only, for the most part, Christians outwardly. As members of the ancient Eastern Orthodox Church, which is crowded with ceremonies and pictures of the Virgin, they know little of Christ's blessed Gospel, and hence the missionaries have laboured hard to show forth Christ, the Way, the Truth, and the Life, and have some thousands of Protestant adherents scattered throughout Bulgaria and Macedonia. These small Evangelical communities have been a power for the moral and spiritual uplifting of the people in the present disturbed provinces of European Turkey,

In Macedonian cities each nationality has its school, supported by its own Government, and the privilege is allowed the American Board to open Protestant schools. Formerly a girl, because she was a girl, was kept in ignorance, but within the last twenty-five years schools for girls, as well as for boys, have been widely established. An educated girl is found to have advantages over her more ignorant sisters.

The girls in the American schools are good looking, often handsome, with clear expression, elastic step, flowing hair, and winning manner. They are bright and attentive, even more so, it is said, than Western girls. On leaving school they carry their influence far and wide through the darkness of Macedonia. Mrs. Tsilka, who was taken captive with Miss Stone two years ago by brigands, was formerly a pupil at Samokov, in Bulgaria. Macedonian girls have excellent memories, but weak thinking powers. They are, however, very fond of anything beautiful in school lessons, in art, or nature, especially astronomy. They learn languages quickly; and not infrequently, in the higher schools, a girl knows three languages. Much attention is given to domestic training, to fit them for home duties.

While the girls are admirably taught in general education, their growth of character and love for spiritual things are never forgotten in the day schools. The Sunday-schools are notable centres of light, whose members have many Christian Endeavour Societies, Circles of King's Daughters, &c. Scores of these girls have become teachers and nurses, whose Christian lives will be spent for the down-trodden provinces of European Turkey.

As in all Eastern lands, so the girls of Macedonia are fond of bright-coloured dresses. Each village has its own pattern of female dress, and hence a traveller can tell from which village a woman comes, if he knows the style of the different villages.

Macedonian boys are quick, energetic, and industrious, sturdy little fellows who begin to toil from early boyhood. They are courageous and happy, enjoy dancing, and have the gaiety common among European boys. Their usual employment is in the field, principally driving the carts. These carts are curious solid-wheeled vehicles, which differ little from those described by Cæsar long ages ago, or those which the hordes of Arpad used in the conquest of Hungary.

Upon the lives of thousands of Macedonian boys and girls, the horrors of war and bloodshed have fallen. Hundreds of them who have already lost fathers and brothers in battle, have been driven for refuge into the mountains, and dare not come forth again lest they should be slain by the cruel Turk. I hope, now that appeals are being made for help to feed and clothe these homeless wanderers in the mountainous recesses, that many boys and girls all over England will forward their gifts to "Uncle Tom," who will send it on to these sufferers, who belong to the same great human family and Heavenly Father as ourselves.

We should all try to make the earth better before we leave it, otherwise there is something in our life hindering God from coming to us with power and using us for His glory. Let us each learn, as a good American minister once said, "Never to say 'No' to God."

An Evening with Japanese Missions. Jonah iii.; Malachi iv. 2, 3.

JAPAN has been called the Great Britain of Asia It consists of four islands, with a population of 43,000,000. The ancient and state religion is Shintoism, which demands implicit obedience to the Emperor as the descendant and representative of the gods. There are no images or idols, but the sun and various sacred symbols receive homage. The people, however, for the most part were Buddhists, the one aim of that religion being to promote the absorption of the soul into deity as a drop into the ocean.

In 1893 Shintoism had 193,430 temples and shrines, and Buddhism 108,104. In a certain Buddhist temple at Kyoto there are 336 gilded wooden idols, and a carpenter may often be seen inside the temple mending the broken images of these gods.

It is stated in the magazine of the Young Christians' Missionary Union, which furnished these particulars, that at the end of 1897, of the forty-two million people then in Japan, not more than ten million had heard anything about the Gospel. In 1901 there was not a single male missionary resident among a population of 1,200,000 souls in the county of Chiba in the close neighbourhood of Tokyo, the capital city of the Empire.

The first Protestant missionaries, who were Americans, arrived in 1859; ten years later Rev. G. Ensor, the first English and C.M.S. missionary to the country, began work at Nagasaki. The first convert was baptized in 1864, but by the close of 1871 there had been only ten baptisms of Japanese. The translation of the New Testament was finished in November, 1879. Eight years later, the Old Testament was published, two million copies of the Word of God being distributed.

The Christians in Japan are only one-half per cent. of the population; but out of the Christian community have come one Cabinet Minister, two Justices of the Supreme Court, two Speakers of the lower House of Parliament, and several judges in the courts of appeal. Three per cent. of the officers in the army are Christians, and three of the great daily papers in Tokyo are in the hands of Christian men.

A Japanese officer recently gave the following testimony to the good conduct of the Christians among the troops at Port Arthur during the war between China and Japan:—"I am not a believer myself, but I have noted among the troops the good conduct of those who are Christians—the quiet, fearless way in which they go bravely into battle and the orderly, collected way in which they bear themselves afterwards, free from excitement, prejudicial to discipline. I think it would be a good thing for the army if all the rank and file became Christians."

As we all should know, Japan is now our ally in the far East, and it becomes us to help this wonderful nation to embrace to the full the Gospel of our Lord.

It is difficult to see why Jonah iii. is selected for the lesson; the chapter itself is well worthy of consideration as showing the love in the heart of God for a great heathen nation. He was not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance, and we cannot but believe that the heart of Christ is yearning to gather the children of Japan into His fold.

Mal. iv. 2, 3, has been probably selected because Japan and the far East catches the first rays of the morning sun. Oh, that the true Sun may arise upon that land, with healing in His beams! F. B. M.

David Brings up the Ark (2 Sam. vi. 1-12). Golden Text (Psa. lxxxiv. 4).

THE death of Saul and David's anointing at Hebron by Judah (ii. 4) was immediately followed by the election of Ish-bosheth, Saul's surviving son, as King of Israel by Abner at Mahanaim (ii. 8, 9). Two years later Ish-bosheth alienated his first general, and was assassinated by two of his officers (iv. 7, 8). Abner was killed in revenge for the death of Asahel (iii. 30). The leaders of the opposition had passed away, and the northern tribes anointed David as King of all Israel at Hebron (v. 1-4). Jerusalem was captured from the Jebusites (v. 7), and called "the city of David." Two desperate battles. The Philistines were defeated, and Israel ceased to pay tribute to them. The country was free, the people united, and Jerusalem became the royal city, and centre of political and governmental life. David desired to make it also the centre of the religious life of his kingdom (Psa. cxxxii. 2, 6, 8) by bringing into it

"The Ark of the Covenant"

(Ex. xxv. 10-22), containing "the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant" (Heb. ix. 4, 5). The most sacred thing in "the most Holy place" of the tabernacle, because the golden cover between the Cherubims was the mercy-seat whereon Jehovah manifested His presence in the Shekinah (Ex. xxv. 22; Ex. xxix. 43-45; Lev. xvi. 2). The High Priest could not come at all times before it (Lev. xvi. 2, 11-13, 15). Only with Holy incense and the blood of atonement.

Rules for Transport (Num. iv.).

(1) Aaron and his sons to cover the ark of testimony with the vail (Ex. xxvi. 31-34), with the badgers' skins and cloth of blue.

(2) "Sons of Kohath shall come and bear it."

(3) "Not touch any holy thing lest they die."

(4) "Not go in to see holy things covered."

(5) "Waggons and oxen for the service of Levites."

(6) "None unto the sons of Kohath" (v. 9).

(7) "They should bear upon their shoulders" (Num. x. 21).

"The Tabernacle of the congregation" set up at—Shiloh (John xviii. 1; 1 Sam. i. 3).

Aphek.—The ark was separated from the Tabernacle by the sons of Eli (1 Sam. iv. 1, 4); 30,000 men slain; the ark taken, and the news killed Eli.

Ashdod and Ekron, fearful scourge.

Bethshemesh, taken on a new cart by the Philistines in fear. Men of the city smitten for looking into it (vi. 19).

Kirjath-jearim, fetched by the men of this city, placed in Abinadab's house (xii. 1). Seventy years remained in "the field of the forest" (Psa. cxxxii. 6).

Abinadab kept the ark of God many years, but no special blessing is mentioned. "Israel lamented after the Lord" (1 Sam. vii. 2). Saul took no heed, the people turned to strange gods (vii. 3). Obed-edom had a special blessing (v. 10); was probably a Levite of Gath-rimmon (Jos. xxi. 24-26), afterwards mentioned in 1 Chron. xv. 24. David desired to bring the ark into Jerusalem (Psa. cxxxii.).

God's Work in God's Way.

David's purpose was noble, to establish the worship of Jehovah in his royal city. His preparations elaborate (1 Chron. xiii. 1). His officers, people, gather the Levites, 30,000 soldiers and the sympathy of the whole nation with unnumbered musicians and singers. A new cart (did David take the idea from 1 Sam. vi. 7?). Priests to guard the ark. The king himself led the singing. Plan well intended and heartily carried out, but not according to the Lord's law. God will be reverenced and obeyed.

Special Points.

1. Jerusalem with prosperity, security, peace and a royal palace, was empty without the symbol of the presence of the Lord to David's true heart. The heart is empty who has not a Saviour in the Lord Jesus Christ. "A friend that loveth at all times."

2. Were David and his people so taken up with the music and grand processions that they lost sight of God's orders? High ritual, ornaments, ceremonies, music, singing, dress, are as powerful to-day to catch our thoughts from God and his worship as then. "I will seek thee with my whole heart."

3. Do I reverence God's name? His house? His Holy Word? In prayer and singing His praise with my heart as well as my lips?

Of the seraphim we read (Isa. vi.1, 3). Of Ezekiel and John, "I fell on my face" (Ezek. i. 28; iii. 23; Rev. i. 17); of the men even who came to arrest Jesus, "they fell to the ground" (John xviii. 6).

RECEIVING GOD THROUGH HIS PEOPLE.

During the reign of Queen Elizabeth many Protestants were driven from France and found a refuge in Canterbury. Beneath the Cathedral the Huguenots were permitted to hold their services, and in the year 1600 more than two thousand congregated. In Canterbury the Huguenots have ever found a sanctuary, a house of God, and both the city and the country at large have prospered by the introduction of many trades hitherto confined to France. The Protestant refugees were blessed in that they were able to dwell in the Lord's house, and there they will be still praising Him (Golden Text). As this country was blessed by the presence of God through His persecuted people, so Obed-edom was blessed by the presence of the ark.

THE FUNGUS OF SIN.

In providing wood-paving for the thoroughfares of our cities, the municipal authorities often experience peculiar difficulties. It is said that trouble arises from the fact that the wood blocks are susceptible to a species of fungus which rapidly deteriorates the quality of the wood. Consequently a close examination is needed before the blocks are laid, for should contaminated wood be laid, the fungus might immediately spread to the surrounding paving, with a disastrous result to the whole. When God smote Uzzah for his error in taking hold of the ark (v. 7), the punishment was inflicted to prevent the sinful fungus from spreading throughout Israel. God in His wisdom sees further than we with our circumscribed vision; and as in our public thoroughfares the evil has to be eradicated ere it spreads, so in our daily lives God often inflicts punishment to prevent the further spread of sin.

PUTTING GOD FIRST.

When William Carey was in India, the Baptist Missionary Society committee were alarmed lest "the spirit of the missionary should be swallowed up in the pursuits of the merchant." They wrote a letter to that effect to William Carey, and he, in his reply, assured the committee that his first thought was for God and His service among the heathen. As a matter of fact, he was devoting nearly the whole of his income to the support of those who were translating the Bible into the native languages. David, in our lesson, placed the ark of God in his own city with gladness (v. 12), and William Carey, in common with all true home and foreign missionaries, gave God and His Word a place of prominence in all his doings.

THE BLESSEDNESS OF SERVICE.

Sir Frederick Treves, the famous surgeon, put aside a great London practice during the recent war and joined the troops in South Africa. He accompanied the Ladysmith relief column through all the dangers of that enterprise. He was decorated for his noble self-sacrifice, and returning, received a knighthood, and was appointed surgeon to the King. God will not overlook service rendered to Him, and as the Lord blessed Obed-edom, and all that pertained unto him (v. 12), because of the ark, so we, in our devotion to Him, shall be blessed. Our country may be slow to acknowledge our devotion; God will never be any man's debtor.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

UDDINGSTON.

THE mission just concluded at Uddingston, N.B., by Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and Mr. T. Armon Jones, has proved remarkably effective.

Rev. Frank Rae writes, from Chalmers Manse:—

On Friday evening of last week, Dr. Henry, the famous temperance evangelist, accompanied by Mr. T. Armon Jones, concluded a mission that was eagerly looked forward to, and will now be looked back upon as one of the most remarkable movements which Uddingston has seen.

It was arranged under the auspices of the Progressive Union, representing all sections of the community, and was carefully prepared for; but, while much interest and blessing was expected and prayed for, the results have been far beyond anything that was anticipated.

The mission began on Saturday, 11th, with an afternoon meeting for children, at which the attendance was very large, notwithstanding a heavy fall of rain, and the impression was such that over 200 pledges were secured. The meetings were continued on Sabbath afternoon and evening and every evening during the week, and grew steadily in numbers, interest, and results, till on Friday evening at the lecture on "Public-house Life in America," for which one shilling admission was charged, the Public Hall was filled to overflowing, and an impression made which will not soon be effaced.

There had been careful preparation and much prayer, but Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones are men of profound spiritual earnestness, who have consecrated their gifts and strength to this work, out of intense zeal for God and the welfare of man. Dr. Henry has all the temperament and passion of the orator, but it is not in that the secret of his great power lies. It is rather in the weight and force of his addresses, and the strength of his appeals to reason and conscience, backed from first to last by the authority of God's Word. There is absolutely nothing emotional or superficial in his work; it is remarkable for its intellectual solidity and strength, for grasp of the drink problem in all its complexity, and clear view of Scripture testimony.

Mr. W. Turnbull writes:—Never before in its history has this place been so deeply stirred as during the last few days, when Dr. Henry and Mr. T. Armon Jones conducted an Evangelistic and temperance mission.

Uddingston has been regarded as a veritable publican's stronghold, but since the visit of Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones there has been an upheaval, and over 1,000 persons outside of Temperance Societies have now pledged themselves to abstain from all intoxicating liquors as beverages and to discountenance their use by others. This result has exceeded the most sanguine anticipations and indicates that deep spiritual impressions have been produced, which must impart a nobler tone to many lives. The Progressive Union, at whose invitation Dr. Henry came, regret that he was only able to stay one short week. The beautiful singing of Mr. Armon Jones produced a deep impression on all, and many came night after night to hear him tell the Gospel story in song. It is not too much to say that never before has such singing been heard here.

Looking back on Dr. Henry's work, one cannot fail to be struck by his wealth of language, his convincing arguments, effectively founded on Bible truths, and his power to drive home the message which God has given him to deliver. His address on "The Great Red Dragon," especially, was deeply impressive. On Friday evening last—the closing night—the subject taken was, "Public-house Life in America." Long before the starting hour, the hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, and many, rather than miss the lecture, were content to stand along the passages. It was, indeed, a fitting conclusion to such a glorious mission and was a sufficient testimony, were such needed, that Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones endeared themselves to the hearts of many during their short visit. That God will spare them to come again at no distant date is the prayer of many Christians. The mission so successfully carried on by Dr. Henry is being continued for another week by Rev. George Hayton, of Annan, and Mrs. and Miss Westmorland (vocalists).

Rev. Thos. H. Walker (Congregationalist) says:—The meetings, for interest, enthusiasm, and numbers, have surely passed all anticipation. Dr. Henry dealt with the drink question in many of its lurid aspects. It is only when these are brought before the minds of his hearers by the force of such eloquence as fires the heart and flows from the lips of the speaker that one realizes the enormity of intemperance and the multitudinous ways in which it affects our daily lives and the interests of the nation as a whole. The pledges taken now number over 1,000. This record in a town of scarcely 8,000 inhabitants must be reckoned of an entirely satisfactory nature. The Christian conscience of the place has been thoroughly awakened.

The Uddingston Standard, in a long report, says: "On all occasions Dr. Henry displayed a firm grasp of his subject, basing his remarks on the irrevocable Word of God. His knowledge is immense, his logic unassailable, and his eloquence sets one on fire. In all his addresses he conclusively proved that strong drink is the strenuous and bitter foe of all that makes for the permanent well-being of the people. It is the worst foe of the individual, the family, the Church, and the State. Throughout the mission the presence of Mr. T. Armon Jones, the celebrated vocalist, no doubt had the effect of greatly drawing the people to the meetings. There is no question but that the Christian conscience of Uddingston has been thoroughly roused. We earnestly trust the time is not far distant when Dr. Henry will visit us again."

MOTHERWELL.

Such an impetus was given to Gospel Temperance work in Motherwell by the visit of Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones in January last that it was soon after resolved to seek another week's help from them, and this second mission has just commenced under the most hopeful circumstances.

By the kindness of Mrs. Colville, of Cleland, nearly 300 of the workers and other friends were invited to a garden party in her beautiful grounds on the afternoon of Saturday last to welcome the evangelists. Happily the weather proved all that could be desired, and some delightful hours were spent.

The mission began in a prayer and conference meeting next morning (Sabbath) at eight, when an hour of fervent fellowship fired the workers for the privileges and duties of the day. At 11.30 Dr. Henry preached to a crowded congregation in Cairns United Free Church on the subject of "Christian Fruitfulness." Then came a great P.S.A. meeting, when the Town Hall was filled with an assemblage of some 1,400 or 1,500 men, who were very earnestly urged by Dr. Henry to the open confession of Christ. In the evening the same hall was crowded to its utmost capacity with a mixed audience, on whom a very deep impression was made by Dr. Henry's most solemn presentation of the eternal issues of life. A large number remained to an after-meeting, and in several instances persons showed themselves deeply moved by what they had heard. At each of the meetings solos were sung by Mr. Jones, and his efforts contributed in a marked way to deepen the effect of the truth proclaimed. At each service Dr. Henry made an earnest appeal for Christian Temperance; and there were over 150 signatures to the pledge in the course of the day.

(Rev.) T. F. Whillas.

ROME AND THE SCRIPTURES.

I WAS glad to see the article about "Rome and the Scriptures" in The Christian this week. I hope that it may do much good. The most serious part of the matter is not the mistranslations, but the misleading "Notes." No Protestant ought to help to spread these Gospels till he has read them or a translation of them.

It seems to me that this Italian issue means more than we are apt to think. If the Church of Rome can get Protestants to believe in and help to spread this, they will accomplish much, and be likely to issue translations in other languages. J. D. Kilburn.

THE MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

THE success of the Missionary Association is a most cheering sign. It indicates not merely the desire of missionaries for sympathy and spiritual help, but also their desire to show themselves united in aim and sympathy. The conflict of feeling awakened by the differences of the denominations becomes often a hindrance to frank fellowship and whole-hearted co-operation. This constraint of the sects must show itself to the heathen, and seriously mar their responsiveness to the missionary's message. As the Missionary Association grows and becomes generally known, not only at home, but among the heathen also, it may do more than all else to hearten and prosper the missionary cause in every direction by unifying missionary operations.

In accord with its object, the Association might give special attention to those missionaries who work in very isolated parts, and who, therefore, seldom see visitors from home as those do who work near the world's highways. To a man who toils in loneliness and privation, the occasional visit to his field of labour of an independent witness and warm sympathizer would do more to refresh him than perhaps a furlough at home, where he finds friends indeed, but friends whose interest and words lack the inspiring glow of immediate knowledge. Sympathy on the spot—conference amid the maze—prayer amid the raging strife, these are best, by far the best. Now, could not the Missionary Association have one or two missionaries of its own for this one purpose—to visit the valiant but over-tried toilers in the far-off and lonely fields; to become familiar with their life and work; to be the peculiar and confidential friend of such missionaries, and to be for them the Missionary Association's referees at home? This would require a comparatively small fund. The Association might begin with one representative of this kind, sending him only to a few of the most isolated fields. Experience would prove the guide in further action.

The Association has many fine possibilities of usefulness before it. It signalizes the unity of all work and workers in the cause of carrying the Gospel to "all creatures"; it betokens the sympathy and prayer of the universal Church; it will inspirit the missionaries; it will invigorate individual missions; it will serve to arouse missionary zeal throughout the churches, and by the simultaneous agreement of thousands it will, by intercession, bring abounding blessing from the hand of God.

Your Missionary Association Number should be of great service. J. H. C.

Danish Magdalen Asylum.—Rev. J. Lazarus, who recently visited the Danish Magdalen Asylum, at Lyngby, nine miles from Copenhagen, writes that Miss Esche and her helpers are doing an excellent work. He found sixty-eight inmates in the three houses—Zoar, Pella, and Ebenezer. Sad to say the ages ranged down as low as thirteen years; but during the twenty-five years just closed many have been saved to society, and have been led out into the liberty of the children of God. As a missionary from India Mr. Lazarus was deeply impressed with the contrast in the help given to women in Europe compared with their sisters in the East. Every inmate is made to feel that the officials are her sisters.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Mr. Frank Weaver at Elgin.

THE largest hall in Elgin had an immense crowd awaiting Mr. Frank Weaver on the evening of Sunday, September 6. The mission had been looked forward to with great interest by many who knew Mr. Weaver as singer when he visited Elgin last year with his brother.

The opening meeting was one that will doubtless live in the memory of many who were privileged to hear the soul-stirring address from the words, "And Samson went down to Timnath." The preacher spoke in a very effective way of the downward path to destruction, and proclaimed the ability of the Lord Jesus Christ to save to the uttermost.

Throughout the week the meetings were continued. The singing, which proves a potent agency, is well taken up. In this direction Mr. Weaver is being greatly assisted by one of our best local singers, Mr. Smith, who shows great spirit in the leadership of the choir. Mr. Weaver's solos are always highly appreciated, the words being easily followed even in the singing of solos not heard before. One young man says that a verse of one hymn sung by Mr. Weaver at the mission last year brought him to Christ:

Oh, the wondrous Gospel story,
There is life in every word—
There is hope and consolation,
When the message sweet is heard.
Let us tell it to the weary,
And its beauties all unfold,
'Tis the only guide to heaven,
And the story must be told.

Mr. Weaver believes "The story must be told," and he tells it out with great simplicity, freedom, and with power from on high. Preacher and workers are looking forward to a rich harvest in the concluding nights of the mission. It is worth recording also as to the thoroughness of the Weaver Brothers' mission in the town last year, that many who were then rescued from the paths of sin, and had their feet planted on the rock, Christ Jesus, are taking a prominent part in the singing and distribution of bills, and are living testimonies to the saving and keeping power of the Saviour. G. Robertson.

Mr. John M. Scott (secretary) writes:—The Sunday evening meetings were held in the Town Hall (which seats 1,200). Mr. Weaver arrested and held fast the attention of the large crowds who gathered to listen to the Gospel story. A very encouraging men's meeting was held on afternoon of Sunday, 13th inst., when Mr. Weaver spoke on "Remarkable Conversions." Week night meetings were held in the Parish Church Hall. Many gave indication of their conviction of sin, and not a few (principally young men and women) professed acceptance of the Lord Jesus Christ as Saviour. Mr. Weaver's bright and winning personality and enthusiasm in the service of the Master had a most stimulating effect on all who came into contact with him in connection with the mission. The musical part of the mission was under charge of Mr. W. Mitchell Smith, Miss Jeannie Smith acting as accompanist.

Mr. Samuel Levermore at Londonderry.

The mission which is being conducted at Londonderry by Mr. S. Levermore is exciting deep and widespread interest among all classes, and there can be no doubt that a deep work of God is going on. The largest hall in our city, the immense Guildhall, was crowded (many having to be turned away) on September 6, and the Union Hall (seating about 1,000 persons) has been filled to overflowing every night. On the Friday night numbers were unable to gain admission. Many stay to the after service, which is impressively conducted by the evangelist. It was found necessary to secure the Guildhall for the following Sabbaths, and prayer is earnestly requested for those gatherings.

Numbers are turning to God at the services, many being awakened and saved whilst the preaching is going on, not waiting for the after service. All the addresses are doctrinal and thoroughly Scriptural, and every appeal is based upon some definite Scripture statement.

It is a most refreshing sight to see a crowded audience of clear-headed Northerners night by night following point by point the logical reasoning and fervent appeals of the preacher. Every night the local ministers and prominent Christian workers of the city support the preacher, while the churches are open to him on the Sabbath mornings. An effective auxiliary to the work is the splendidly-trained Londonderry "Union" Choir, composed, as it is, of Christian vocalists consecrated to this work, and under the able leadership of a conductor whose heart and soul seems to be in God's service.

One of the Audience.

The Awakening at Uckfield.

God is abundantly answering the prayers of His people for many years past in this neighbourhood. After six weeks' patient ploughing and sowing in the great tent, with ever-increasingly encouraging results, Mr. Fegan felt on Sunday evening last that the fruit was ripe for harvest and thrusting in the sickle.

Those present will never forget how after Mr. Fegan's address on "Christ our Passover" scores rose all over the tent to confess, to God's glory, the blessing they had received through the services.

In response to Mr. Fegan's invitation, the inquiry-room was immediately crowded with seeking souls, many of them melted in tears. In the solemn hush of God's overpowering presence more than fifty anxious ones surrendered and accepted the Lamb of God as their "Passover," and confessed Him as "both Lord and Christ." The help rendered by Mr. H. H. Saunders both in conducting the choir and in solo singing has been very valuable.

Mr. Henry Varley's Visit to Norway.

On the eve of bringing to a termination his evangelistic tour in Norway, Mr. Varley writes from Christiania:—The meetings held in this city form a fitting close to the brief visit I have been permitted to pay this wonderful land. The meetings have been remarkable from first to last, crowded to the doors with deeply-interested audiences. Sunday morning saw Turne Hall packed with 2,000 people, and each day since the capacity of church or hall has given the measure of attendance. We have had a hallowed series of daily meetings at noon for Bible study, and the concluding days of the mission give promise of record attendances. We have secured for Sunday the building known as Calmyer Garden, which holds from 4,500 to 5,000 people. The Free Church, the Mission Halls, Baptists, Methodists, and Salvation Army are all sharing in the work, and there is great joy amongst God's people in the city. There is great poverty here as in England, mainly in consequence of intemperance, and the folly of the Government borrowing enormous sums of money, the interest of which has to be paid by the people. Another cause is the constant drain upon the population, the result of tens of thousands of the young Norwegians leaving for the United States.

Mr. F. Penfold's Tent Work.

During the summer Mr. F. Penfold has conducted missions in various parts of the country with much acceptance, and during the season some hundreds of persons have been pointed to Christ. At Aylesbury, "showers of blessing" were given, and an auspicious opening was made a few weeks ago at High Wycombe. On September 10, however, the tent was wrecked by the gale which prevailed on that day and wrought so much havoc. Mr. Penfold's evangelistic services are given entirely free, but he seeks help to repair the damage to the tent, for which about £100 will be required.

Scottish Y.M.C.A.'s.

THE thirty-third Annual Scottish Y.M.C.A. Convention was held at Motherwell, September 15-17, when over 200 delegates and a number of visitors assembled from all parts of the country. The handsome and convenient Young Men's Institute, erected through the initiative of the late much esteemed Mr. John Colville, met all the requirements of the occasion.

The great public meetings, which met in the Town Hall, drew crowded audiences. Provost Alex. Findlay presided at the reception, and speaking from long experience as a Y.M.C.A. man, and in his civic capacity, he extended to the delegates a very hearty welcome. A sympathetic and wise word was spoken by Rev. David Scott (Dalziel Parish Church) in welcoming the delegates in name of the churches. Mr. John Craig, president of the local Association, speaking on its behalf, looked for a breath of fresh enthusiasm in the work and life in Motherwell as a result of their gatherings. Mr. George Kydd, president of the National Council, responding for the delegates, recalled their indebtedness in Christian work in Scotland to the late Mr. John Colville, and he expected that one result of the Conference would be to strengthen the resolution of others to follow in the footsteps of such men of God. In a closing address Rev. William Muir, B.D., B.L., of Blairgowrie, urged the young men to be young men—hopeful, enterprising, and zealous. Too many good causes had been killed by caution. He was more afraid of young men being wanting in zeal than in discretion, although so much was said to the contrary.

Lord Kinnaird occupied the chair at the public demonstration. He made an appeal for support for the National Council, that they might undertake work among the soldiers in the volunteer camps, a work which they had under their consideration. Dr. Hastings, of Bible Dictionary fame, spoke very suggestively to young men on doing their own work, seeing to it that they were not too much taken up with the work of others, and that their work was done from a Christian standpoint and with Christian motives. Rev. J. T. Forbes reviewed in an eloquent address the social movements of last century, contrasting their failure to satisfy or elevate men with the better results of Christianity, which alone contained the secret of true success as revealing the love of God in the Divine Father, and the power to raise men through the sympathy and sacrifice of Jesus Christ. Rev. John Douglas (Nagpur) followed with an impressive address on the outlook in India, and the call of the native young men of that vast dependency to the Christian young men of Scotland.

A characteristic address on the words of 1 Chron. xii. 22, was delivered by Rev. John McNeill in the Cairns United Free Church, to a very large congregation.

The chief point of interest at the business meeting was the evident turn of the tide in the progress of the work in Scotland, the membership being 23,105, an increase on the previous year of 705. Depopulation in country districts had slightly reduced the number of associations. The hands of the Council were strengthened with respect to the work in the volunteer camps by a resolution submitted by Mr. R. Henderson Smith. Lord Kinnaird very earnestly commended this work to the National Council. His Lordship assured them that they might expect the fullest sympathy at the Army headquarters.

A meeting devoted to the foreign department of the work was addressed, in a most admirable and comprehensive paper by Mr. William Stewart, which was followed by an address on the work in India by Mr. Anderson.

At no previous conference in Scotland has there been experienced a stronger and more hopeful uplifting influence, or a more gratifying record of work accomplished for Christ among the young men. The influence of the spirit of revival that has been abroad, and especially of the movement associated with Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander, found thankful acknowledgment more than once throughout the proceedings.

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of spiritual progress and effort in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and not trivialities; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

When the "Oxford Martyrs" van of the Church Association visited Thorpe-le-Soken, the vicar gave the evangelist in charge a hearty welcome, and announced the meetings in church, with the result that two successful Gospel services were conducted on the Lord's Day.

The Seven Dials Mission Church in West Street, W.C., has been re-opened after being closed for substantial repairs. The sermon in the morning was preached by the missioner, Rev. A. C. Holthouse, who gave a short sketch of the history of the church. It was built in 1700 by the French Huguenots, was used by John Wesley for fifty years, and for a short time was occupied by an Irish-speaking clergyman who preached in their own tongue to the population around. In the evening Bishop Goe preached to a large and attentive congregation on "The Fruits of the Spirit." The repairs have cost about £250, the greater part of which has been already collected.

Congregational.

Mr. Stanley J. Cox has relinquished the pastorate of Sutherland Church, Walworth (which he has held for the past year), in order to take up missionary work in India.

Rev. G. H. R. Garcia, of Sunderland, whose health broke down some time ago, has been strongly counselled by medical experts not to return to Sunderland, so that even when he recovers he will not resume his ministry there.

The deputation to China on behalf of the London Missionary Society, consisting of Rev. William Bolton, of Acton, and Rev. G. Cousins, one of the foreign secretaries of the Society, started from London last Thursday. No deputation has been to China on behalf of the Society for twenty years, the last occasion having been in 1883, when Rev. R. Wardlaw-Thompson went out to visit the mission stations.

The Rev. F. B. Meyer recently visited Eastbourne in connection with the settlement as pastor at the Pevensey Road Church of his old friend and neighbour, Rev. Henry Hewett, formerly of Claylands Church, Clapham Road. At the recognition service of the new pastor the church was filled with an enthusiastic audience. The service was presided over by Rev. Thomas Towers, of St. Leonards, who was supported by other leading ministers,

Rev. H. J. Perkins, the new pastor of New Court Church, Tollington Park, N., has addressed a letter to the members of the congregation, asking them to pray for one another every day and for the future prosperity of the church, that his coming amongst them may be the commencement of many years of happy and successful work. The welcome meeting on Wednesday, September 30, is to be in the nature of a family gathering, no one outside the congregation being invited. On October 21 the public recognition will take place, when many happy associations of the past will be revived by the presence of some of the previous pastors of New Court, viz., Revs. William Park, J. Ossian Davies, and William Pierce.

The recently-published report of the Congregational Church Aid and Home Missionary Society shows that in the course of the year grants under the Emergency Fund amounted to £350. The applications for aid from the New Pastorates Fund were more numerous, and eight grants, amounting to £685, were made. A notable achievement of the year was the unanimous adoption of rules relating to the recognition of churches and ministers—a matter which lies at the root of the question of the closer cohesion of the churches. Another subject which is receiving special attention is that of lay-preaching. Emphasis is laid on the importance of organizing centres of evangelization and seeking out and training suitable young men as lay preachers.

Baptist.

Rev. J. H. Shakespeare reports that only the sum of £11,000 is needed to be paid in to complete the Baptist Union Centenary Fund of £250,000.

Rev. C. Spurgeon took up his new duties as pastor of Salem Chapel, Cheltenham, on his birthday, September 20. In the course of his sermon (on Acts ii. 42) he said: "Work for God needs a solid foundation, and my aim among you will be to maintain earnest, plodding, persevering work, to quarry down deep in the Rock of the Word, and lay the foundation with the granite blocks of the doctrines of God's everlasting Truth."

The autumn meetings of the Northern Group of Churches, in connection with the London Baptist Association, has been held at Vernon Chapel, King's Cross. A large and appreciative audience listened to a helpful sermon, preached by Rev. J. R. Wood, who took for his subject, "Partnership with Jesus Christ." At the evening meeting the president, Rev. B. J. Gibbon, explained the work undertaken by the Association, and pleaded for a deeper interest in all its departments of denominational undertaking.

Methodist.

About 120 Primitive Methodist ministers attended the Oxford summer conference. Mr. W. P. Hartley contributed generously towards the expenses.

At the meeting of the Third London Wesleyan Synod, held a few days ago, it was reported, with reference to the Victoria Hall, Deptford, the outlay of which will not be short of £25,000, that only some £4,000 was necessary to complete the scheme, and that Mr. J. E. Vanner had promised to contribute an additional £1,000, leaving only £3,000 to raise at the opening services.

The minutes of the annual assembly of the United Methodist Free Churches have just been published. The statistics show advance which, if small in some instances, is encouraging. The Home Mission secretary reports that during the year nineteen chapels have been built, fifteen enlarged, thirteen schoolrooms and seven ministers' houses erected or purchased. The total amount raised for these and other purposes connected with Home Missions total over £70,000.

At Mile-end, in the Oswestry section of the Wesleyan Severn Valley Mission, a blessed revival took place last winter, with the result the society was doubled in membership. The chapel was a cold, damp, dilapidated building, and the revival led to a determination to improve the place of worship. The result is that the old building has been pulled down, and an enlarged and beautiful new chapel erected on the old site. This was opened on Thursday last by Rev. Dr. Henry J. Pope.

The opening of the new Central Hall at Birmingham took place a few days since. Mr. Reginald Stanley, J.P., of Nuneaton, turned the key and opened the hall, and Mr. W. Bayliss, J.P., of Wolverhampton, discharged a similar office in relation to the Church House. The Lord Mayors of Birmingham and Manchester also took part. Rev. Marshall Hartley (President of Conference) preached the dedicatory sermon, and Dr. Davison offered the dedicatory prayer. There were 2,000 present at the afternoon service, which opened with the Hallelujah chorus, Rev. F. L. Wiseman conducting.

The operations of the Primitive Methodist Church Extension Fund are producing much benefit throughout the denomination; up to the present about eighty cases have been assisted, representing a total expenditure on new churches of, roughly speaking, £200,000. As the result of three years' work this is a distinctly encouraging result. Its procedure may be illustrated by the instance of the congregation at Quarry Bank, where, owing to the undermining of the old chapel through mining operations, a new place has been erected. Here the church obtains £1,000 free of interest for ten years. The aim of the secretary, Rev. Thomas Mitchell, is to increase the annual subscriptions by another £1,000.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Stephen Bond having been appointed to missionary service in China, the young men connected with Claughton church, Birkenhead, have made themselves responsible for his support.

Rev. D. F. Mackenzie, pastor of the congregation at Bromley, Kent, is rapidly recovering from the effects of a recent illness; Dr. Moinet, the former pastor, is to conduct the services for him on Sunday next. Mr. Mackenzie hopes to resume work at the beginning of October.

Mr. Charles Olliffe, senior elder of the Dulwich congregation, has offered a contribution of £500, provided that £2,500 additional be subscribed within twelve months, the object being to purchase the freehold of the site, extinguish the church debt, and open the hall and class-rooms without encumbrance.

Rev. Dr. Meharry has resumed his ministry at Crouch Hill, N. He urged the congregation to do better than ever before for the Foreign Missions Fund, the Sustentation Fund, the Home Mission Fund, and the Andover Road Mission. He was encouraged to do this by the fact that the church is now free from debt. Moreover, a considerable number of sittings have been taken recently.

Society of Friends.

Edward A. and Edith M. Annett have reached England from Ceylon, where they have been obliged to relinquish their work on account of Edward Annett's poor health. Joseph and Frances Malcomson and Sidney Long are the only Friend missionaries now in Ceylon, and the furlough of the two former is already due. Reinforcements for the mission are greatly needed.

At Morley, Yorkshire, meetings have been conducted by William and Elizabeth Hobson, who were present at Friends' meetings, at Adult School, at Children's School, and evening mission meetings, much to the encouragement and help of many who attended. Meetings were held on week evenings for adults and for children, and Bible-readings on some afternoons, with a special meeting for mothers, while on the Saturday evening a comprehensive lecture on "Roots and Fruits of the Quaker Movement" was listened to by a thoughtful and attentive audience. E. Hobson's ministry, especially to mothers and children, was felt to be the concern of a true "mother in Israel," and met with a warm response. Many visits were paid to families, and they will be long remembered.

A summer campaign at West Worthing has had encouraging results. During the season open-air meetings have been held at Elm Grove, W. Worthing, by workers from the Tabernacle, Montague Street, assisted by visitors. The preaching of the Word has been blessed to many, and the need and opening for a work of a permanent nature has become evident. A large room having been placed at the disposal of the workers, arrangements are being made for Sunday evening services to be held throughout the winter months. A feature of the mission is the deep interest evinced by the children, who rally to the services in large numbers, and through them it is hoped that the parents of many families will be reached.

The Beacon Light Village Missions in Derbyshire, superintended by Pastor R. Howton, are now reaching out to some of the most remote localities of the country. The work has its centre at Glossop, and embraces Gospel car and Bible carriage efforts, evangelistic missions, poor children's free breakfasts, lodging-house visitation, &c. In and around the neighbourhood there are some thousands of mill hands, and numbers of these who were in the habit of attending no place of worship are now found in the mission hall. During the past year there have been over one hundred baptisms. The number of young people who are joining the fellowship is a happy augury for the future of the church. There is also a Home of Rest in connection with the mission, which is resorted to by Christians needing physical rest and spiritual refreshment.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. John Mills Walker, formerly vicar of Harrold, Beds., aged fifty-nine. Mr. Walker held Evangelical views. In 1866 he became curate of Holy Trinity, Marylebone. In 1871 he went out to India, and for twenty years acted as chaplain on the Madras Ecclesiastical Establishment. He returned to England in 1891, and from 1895 till 1900 was vicar of Harrold.—At Hobart, Tasmania, Rev. Robert Ricards, in his eighty-fifth year. Mr. Ricards first held a nine years' pastorage at Ware, and at the request of the L.M.S. undertook the secretaryship of the Berbice Mission in British Guiana, and stayed there seven years. He held subsequent pastorates at Jarrow-on-Tyne, Acock's-green, and Paignton.—Rev. T. Wickham Tozer, of Ipswich, aged seventy-six. He had been a familiar figure in the East Anglican town for nearly thirty years as Congregational minister.—Rev. Thos. Fisk, the much-loved pastor of the Baptist-Congregational Church, Church Street, Kidderminster. The pastorate thus brought to a close had continued without interruption for upwards of forty-one years, during which long period Mr. Fisk retained the unabated love and esteem of his people, and the affectionate regard of his fellow-townsmen.—Mr. George Scrivens, who was for forty-three years a city missionary, thirty-five of which were spent the district of Mount Pleasant, Clerkenwell, E.C. Mr. Scrivens retired at the beginning of the year, and removed with his family to Laindon, Essex, where he passed away on the 14th inst.

Giants, Grasshoppers, and God. Amid the turbulent scenes, the apparently impassable difficulties, of our national, family, and personal life, we are often apt to join the ranks of the weak-kneed men whom Moses sent to spy out the land (Num. xiii.), and to say :—

> We saw the giants . . . and we were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so we were in their sight.

But men of God, like Caleb and Joshua, see more than that, and pin their faith to this :—

> If the Lord delight in us, then He will bring us into this land, and give it us . . . the Lord is with us ; fear not.

Whether, as a nation, we tremble at the possible consequences of taking our stand against the Turk ; or, as individuals, are terrified and despondent at the forces of evil or of circumstance arrayed against us—let us remember there is a still greater force upon our side ; let us take fast hold on GOD.

The Revival of Courage. The ministers who gathered at Christ Church, Westminster, last Thursday, for their annual "Quiet Day," were greatly delighted and encouraged by the address of Rev. J. G. Train on "The Revival of Courage." Mr. Train took his hearers through the Bible, and showed that everywhere the Divine command to God's servants was "Be of good courage," and that this courage resulted from the sense of the Divine Presence—"I AM with thee." A message such as this is needed to save men from pessimism, especially at a time when the clouds are gathering in many directions, and the powers of evil seem to be exercising themselves at will. We need to be continually reminded of the elementary truth that the universe has a Master, and that He knows what He is doing. Our short vision cannot see the perfect plan at which He is working, but we know that He is working at it. No man who fully believes this can be other than courageous.

Whitewashing Islam. There would seem to be no end to the process of whitewashing the dark spots and characters of history. Judge Jeffreys, Napoleon I., and even Judas Iscariot have, within recent years, found, if not exactly admirers, at least apologists. And now, whilst streams of human blood are flowing in the near Orient, we have the apologist for Islam. We do not envy the conscience of those who can pass a resolution thanking the Sultan for his humane efforts to end strife in Macedonia ; and it is difficult to appraise the instinct of a man who can prevail upon a leading newspaper to admit, in a column's length, that there may be some mistake, after all, in saying that Islam has been propagated by the sword. The Twentieth-Century Englishman, who will believe anything, so long as it is novel, will surely draw the line here. History cannot be so falsified. The first victories of Islam were victories of blood ; all the Mahdis have drawn the sword, and "Holy Wars" tell the same tale. The symbol of Islam throughout has been the Scimitar. It is shameful that any civilized man should help to divert attention from the real facts which underlie so much misery in the East.

The "Tolerance" of Islam. The learned Mohammedan who was once Professor of Arabic at Cambridge was surely sporting with his newspaper interviewer when he caused him to report that "Islam is the most tolerant faith of all." His exact words are :—

> Islam is the most tolerant faith of all. There has never been such absolute toleration under any other religion. In Turkey, if a subject pays his taxes and discharges his civil obligations, he is absolutely free as to faith. Missionaries of all religions are tolerated

We should be sorry if the British public believed this. "Islam the most tolerant faith of all!" Many reports in our own paper from the pens of competent and truthful witnesses who have worked for Christ in Moslem countries, testify to the exact opposite of all this. The missionaries of the North Africa Mission have declared over and over again how immense are the difficulties in the way of their work. Many secret disciples of Christ in these countries dare not confess their faith publicly, because of the revenge that would strike them. And missionaries of other bodies in Turkey continually speak of the way in which their work is harassed by the officials. By all means let us be just towards our opponents, and credit them with whatever virtues they possess ; but what are we to say when oppression is distorted into a virtue, and facts are falsified ?

Lasting Hymnology. The death of Prebendary Godfrey Thring, a week or two ago, at the age of eighty, after a ministerial service of forty-seven years, has not received so much notice in the Press as might have been expected from the value of his contributions to hymnology. Some of Mr. Thring's hymns have found a place in most collections, as, for instance : "Fierce raged the tempest o'er the deep" ; "Blessed Saviour, Thou hast taught us" ; "Hail, sacred day of earthly rest," and others—a position they owe to the grand use the author made of Holy Scripture, his firm faith, and his exulting hopefulness. The writer passes away when his task is ended, but the hymns continue to be helpful to those who worship God in the church or in the home.

The Enemy at the Gates. Another large irruption of the alien monks, expelled from France, has taken place, this time into a locality near Canterbury. As a matter of fact, much of the forty millions accumulated by these non-productive persons in our neighbouring country (too often by such means as those made public in the recent disgraceful Mdlle. La Nouvelle will case), is being quietly expended in the purchase of estates in Great Britain. Yet little notice is being taken of the matter. Bearing the late Cardinal Manning's words in mind, we may well ask, What will the end be ! In a sermon on "The Perpetual Office of the Council of Trent," preached to the Third Provincial Council of Westminster, the Cardinal said :—

> And, lastly, it is good to be here in England. It is yours, Right Reverend Fathers, to subjugate and subdue, to bend and to break, the will of an imperial race, the will which, as the will of Rome of old, rules over nations invincible and inflexible. You have a great commission to fulfil, and great is the prize for which you strive. . . . . It is the head of Protestantism, the centre of its movements, and the stronghold of its power. Weakened in England, it is paralysed everywhere ; conquered in England, it is conquered throughout the world ; once overthrown here, all is a war of detail. . . . . It is the key of the whole position of modern error. England once restored to faith becomes the evangelist of the world.

An Italian on Romanism. The new Pope is stated to be as firmly attached to the unpatriotic idea of the recovery of the Temporal Power as was his predecessor. How far this idea is from the feeling of the educated and patriotic Italians becomes more and more evident every day. Speaking at the recent dinner of the English and Italian Garibaldian veterans, Signor Pizzi voiced the national feeling clearly when he said :—

> Rome now is ours. But in order that Rome may be truly ours, and ours for ever, we must not forget that the source of the Vatican's enormous influence lies in the ignorance of the people. It is our duty still to apply the antidotes by giving a new and strong impulse to education, and by inculcating a love of work, study, truth, and union, and above all by teaching our countrymen to be masters of their own minds.

What stronger indictment of Romanism could be made than that which comes from within a few doors of the Vatican itself ?

Rome Intolerant as Ever. Those who desire to keep au courant with the petty tyrannies of the priest as manifested in Ireland to-day should read the Banner of Truth, the quarterly journal of the Irish Church Missions (1d., 11, Buckingham Street, Adelphi, W.C.). It is almost incredible that a Christian physician like Dr. Long, because he is a Christian, should be subjected to the treatment described at the hands of the priests and at their instigation.

A Specious Fallacy. The two brothers, Messrs. Joseph and Arthur Chamberlain, stand at opposite poles upon the burning question of Temperance legislation. Nothing has been more striking than the manner in which the latter has discarded all party politics, and dealt with this question upon the broad lines of humanity and justice. His worst enemy cannot accuse him of fanaticism. The solution he has suggested of the difficulties which beset effective legislation, have commended themselves to earnest men of all schools. But Mr. Joseph Chamberlain's attitude is most disappointing. People generally will hardly avoid the conclusion that it is an electioneering trick, to gain the publicans and their beer-sodden friends, who were so heavily hit by the Bill of last year. His letter, just made public, declares that it is unjust to place property, which has been bought and sold and assessed and treated as a continuing interest, at the disposal of "arbitrary" magistrates. This contention is unworthy of a statesman. The fallacy is too specious. The introduction of the word "arbitrary" is grossly unjust, and is meant to blind people to the real facts. As for a "continuing interest," the yearly renewal of the licence is proof that it was never contemplated. When shall we have common fairness on the part of responsible statesmen in dealing with this most serious question?

The Distress in Lancashire. Things are very serious in Lancashire, where, owing to the cotton shortage, a number of mills have been closed, and thousands of people are in dire need. Relief has been distributed, but the people want work so as to earn their own living. All this misery is due to the "corner" which a group of Americans have made, which simply means that a few men are to reap a harvest of money at the expense of the food and comfort of thousands of poor toilers in the North of England. The men who make these "corners" have no conscience concerning their fellowmen; their business is wholly destitute of humanity. The love of gold seems to sterilize the heart and to make men enemies both of God and man. Sooner or later there must be a terrible nemesis for this sort of thing. The words of the Apostle James come back to us —"Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days . . . and the cries of them that reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth."

"The Next Revival." Dr. John Watson, of Liverpool, said some wise and important things when addressing the students of the Bristol Baptist College; but he set himself the uncalled-for and difficult task of proving that the evangelistic methods of this generation are played out, and that the revival needed is one conducted on philanthropic lines for the social betterment of the people. It is strange that a minister residing in the city which at the present time is so deeply moved by the ministry of Dr. Torrey, for instance, should state in all seriousness, that "the evangelist, I submit, is a spent force, and his peculiar methods are obsolete." (This remark is made of evangelists generally, not of Dr. Torrey in particular). Truly, none are so blind as those who will not see; but it is deplorable that such fallacious statements should be presented to our future ministers, either in a college lecture, or in the columns of the British Weekly which gives to them the importance of a leading article in its columns.

The Need for Philanthropy. Against Dr. Watson's plea that the Christian Church should concern itself to a greater extent with the social well-being of the people, we have not a word to say. It is true. But the greater includes the less, and when men's consciences are reached, their social conditions speedily improve; mere philanthropy is but a scratching at the surface, so long as the heart is untouched. Dr. Watson draws a lurid and pitifully accurate picture of the horrors of the slums. But what is their chief cause? Drink. And who fights that great enemy of souls and every other form of sin more insistently than the evangelist? The message of the Gospel goes deeper down than mere social endeavour, and it is the message of the Master Himself—"I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me." When the sinner is converted, his whole life is changed; and if ministers like Dr. Watson would train their people to do their Master's bidding and "go out into the highways" after the lapsed masses, then to a great extent the evangelist might be dispensed with. As it is, the charge of "obsolete methods" and "spent forces" is even more applicable to the churches themselves—with, of course, happily notable exceptions.

The True Evolution. By a singular coincidence, our contention was borne out in the interesting paper on "The Evolution of the Negro," read by Miss Burry at the recent meeting of the British Association, as proving that the true evolution is that which necessarily follows the reception of the truth of Jesus Christ. Miss Burry points out that, barely a couple of generations ago, the blacks in Jamaica were "savages of the most elemental type, with brains of the most elemental stage of development;" whereas now "they are proving themselves fit to compete with white men in the professions, and their better types are undistinguishable from the Europeans." This marvellous change she attributes to several causes, security of government, widespread education by a good school system, a wise solution of the land difficulty by State-aided settlements, and last, but far from least, "an active religious propaganda." It is by developments such as this that Britain truly justifies her rule, but the only lasting foundation for them is the Gospel of Christ.

The Congo, Then and Now. And even from the far-off Congo region the same truth presents itself. Rev. W. H. Leslie, M.D., of the American Baptist Missionary Union, has just published a striking summary of the changes which have taken place in Congoland since the first proclamation there of the Gospel of Christ. Of the tribes among whom Mr. Leslie has been labouring, Stanley, the explorer, said they were more like tribes of demons than human beings, so sunk were they in immorality and superstition. To-day, however, after years of weary seed-sowing, the great interior, with its millions of inhabitants, has had its language reduced to writing, and the New Testament and parts of the Old, also text-books for schools, have been translated into it. Amongst many other encouraging things, Dr. Leslie says:—

> Thousands of Christians are learning to read the Word of God for themselves, thousands of others have already become more or less proficient. In many sections polygamy and slavery are passing away. Women are being raised to their proper level as the companions and helpmates of the men. (The Gospel is the physical salvation of Congo.) Many of the children in the schools are becoming Christians in their childhood days, giving evidence of real change of heart. The knowledge of the New Testament that these children have acquired, surpasses anything I have found in Christian America. About two thousand pupils in about forty village schools are being taught by consecrated spiritual natives.

The Briton in India. A letter from the secretary of the Women's Temperance Union of India, which appears in the Daily News, may well bring a blush of shame to those who take any interest in the moral and spiritual development of our fellow subjects. Miss Dunhill, writing from Bangalore, states that, in the midst of a population of 300,000,000 natives, "the drink habit of Europeans is becoming an appalling hindrance to the free course of the Gospel." Unhappily, the administration, like our own at home, bolsters up the traffic for pecuniary reasons. In one presidency recently, Miss Dunhill says, in which the excise revenue was not increasing, the Government arranged for the opening of 500 more drink shops, the licences being, as usual, sold by auction! To such an extent is the drink evil evident, that many of the people "consider the term Christian and drunkard synonymous." If this evil continues to be associated with Imperialism, a fate like that which followed the Imperialism of Rome must needs follow, in God's justice. Yet it is next to impossible to influence our Members of Parliament to take up these vital Indian questions!

Objectionable Athletics. The increasing degeneracy of English sports is a subject that week by week assumes graver importance, and now that the season has set in for one of the roughest of these games, a further development of coarseness and of the betting evil which surrounds it, unhappily seems inevitable. A writer in one of the weeklies has said of this "amusement":—

> With the First of September the epidemic of football breaks out with all its old virulence all over the country . . . Again the yelling crowds shout encouragement to the twenty-two hired men in the ring, as the mob shouted at the gladiators in old Rome . . . Athletics are good things in themselves, but when the multitude does not take part in them, but merely watches, shouts, drinks, and bets on the result, they bode no good to a nation. And when the brewers and the drink trade are so closely identified with "sport" as they are with football, the fever of the game is disastrously pernicious.

Local effort on the part of earnest Christian people might do much to counteract and minimise the evils in question. The effort is, at any rate, worth making.

A Farthingsworth of Sparrows. Following closely upon the announcement that in several provinces of India the slaughter of birds for their plumage has been made illegal, it is stated in some of the "fashion papers" that the wearing of birds and of birds' feathers is again coming largely into vogue in England. It is gratifying to know that Queen Alexandra, and a number of titled ladies who live noble lives in the midst of a decadent society, refuse to follow the fashion complained of. The fact that even Christian women yield to the craze for the unbecoming decorations, is difficult to understand in face of our Lord's words as to the little birds: "One of them shall not fall to the ground without your Father" (Matt. x. 29).

The Beatific Vision.

Changer of all things, yet immutable;
Before and after all, the First and Last:
That, moving all, is yet immovable;
Great without quantity; in whose forecast
Things past are present; things to come are past:
Swift without motion; to whose open eye
The hearts of wicked men unbreasted lie,
At once absent and present to them, far and nigh.

It is no flaming lustre, made of light;
No sweet consent, or well-timed harmony;
Ambrosia, for to feast the appetite,
Or flowery odour, mixed with spicery;
No soft embrace, or pleasure bodily:
And yet it is a kind of inward feast,
A harmony that sounds within the breast,
An odour, light, embrace, in which the soul doth rest.

A heavenly feast no hunger can consume;
A light unseen, yet shines in every place;
A sound no time can steal; a sweet perfume
No winds can scatter; an entire embrace
That no satiety can e'er unlace,
Engraced into so high a favour, there
The saints with their beau-peers whole worlds outwear,
And things unseen do see, and things unheard do hear.

Ye blessed souls, grown richer by your spoil,
Whose loss, though great, is cause of greater gains;
Here may your weary spirits rest from toil,
Spending your endless evening that remains
Amongst those white flocks and celestial trains
That feed upon their Shepherd's eyes, and frame
That heavenly music of so wondrous fame,
Psalming aloud the holy honours of His Name!

Giles Fletcher (died 1623).

The Balkan Rebellion.

THE news of the week from Macedonia has added greatly to the anxiety that distresses the Christian conscience of our nation, and this unhappily is not allayed by the published letter of the Prime Minister to the Archbishop of Canterbury. In view of the state of public feeling, and the widespread conviction that Great Britain should take a leading part in calling Turkey to order, if not to account, it is humiliating and disappointing to find that our Government has no more practical suggestion to offer than passive support to "the continued co-operation of Russia and Austria," whose scheme, good so far as it goes, falls far short of the urgent necessities of the case.

It would, of course, be foolish to be blind to the difficulties which, from a statesman's point of view, bar the way. The danger of a general European or Mohammedan conflagration; the fact that the local Christian forces opposed to the Turk are themselves "rent into fragments by differences of race, aggravated by differences of religion" (and, therefore, jealous of each other); the contention that—

> The revolutionary committees have set themselves to work violence, not for the purpose of repelling the violence of their opponents, but for the purpose of provoking it. They thought, and with but too much reason, that if Turkey was compelled in self-defence to send in large bodies of troops, excesses would assuredly be committed which would justly excite general horror —all these are points of moment which it would be futile to ignore.

But what is to be said upon the other side? These subject peoples have been so ground beneath the Turkish heel that they have come to despair of any deliverance wrought by fair and civilized means; and, being what they are, they are not to be measured by a Western rule. Despairing men are willing even to face suicide rather than drag out the weary years of an intolerable existence. Europe has shown itself so lethargic while the Turk has been so villainously active, that a programme born of desperation is not to be wondered at. In any case, that the "balance of criminality" is to be laid to the door of the Turk has been attested by all newspaper correspondents on the spot, to whichever side their antecedent preference inclined.

One of the most informing and judicial utterances that we have seen on this subject is from the pen of Mr. H. N. Brailsford, in the Fortnightly Review. This writer gives fullest weight to all that can be charged against the insurgents in favour of the Turk, whose misrule, however, he describes as—> not the simple fruit of incompetence or stupidity, but a calculated and organized system which enables a small ruling caste of Turkish landlords and officials, Albanian brigand chiefs, and Jewish tax-farmers, to live on the labour of a subject population of Christian serfs.

Bearing in mind that our Government was mainly responsible for the alteration in the Treaty of San Stefano, which placed Macedonia again under the oppression of Turkey, it is not unreasonable that we should now take effective measures to secure her emancipation in a manner which is not provided for by the understanding between Russia and Austria. It is not a time for irresponsible hysterics on the one hand, nor of philosophic doubts on the other; it is a matter of common humanity. The voice of the people was heard unmistakably at the City Temple last week, and declared itself again at St. James's Hall on Tuesday last—in this, at least, Nonconformists and Churchmen are agreed. What we have to remember is that "the Most High ruleth in the kingdoms of men," and that He can overcome all the difficulties that loom so large to human sight. To this end let His people give themselves to effectual fervent prayer, that the hearts of our rulers may be Divinely directed and governed, "that all things may be so ordered and settled by their endeavours upon the best and surest foundations, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established"—and that soon.

THE UNVEILING.

EXPOSITION OF SYMBOLS.

THE throne of God, the King of the ages, is in the Temple (viii. 3; xv. 5-8) of the Tabernacle of the Witness in Heaven (of which the Tabernacle in the wilderness and the Temple in the Land were alike the symbol). The promise to the overcomer in the Philadelphian Church connects the sevenfold Church with the Temple. Those who come out of the Great Tribulation serve Him day and night in His Temple (whether the Great Tribulation means the "much tribulation" of the Christian ages, "through which we must inherit the Kingdom," or the acute crisis at the close, or both). The Angel who came and stood at the golden altar, that He should offer much incense with the prayers of all the saints, fulfilled His priestly ministry within the Temple.

John, our brother and companion in the tribulation and in the Kingdom and endurance in Jesus, who wrote these things unto the Churches, was, in vision, given a measuring reed like unto a rod, and bidden to rise and measure the Temple of God, and the altar, and the worshippers therein. In the vision of the coming Kingdom, when the great voices in Heaven hail His reign, and the elders give thanks, and the nations are angry and God's anger comes, and the dead are judged, the Temple of God in Heaven is opened, and there is seen the Ark of His Covenant in His Temple.

When the harvest of the earth is ripened, and the grapes of her vintage are fully ripe, the commands to reap the harvest and to gather the clusters of the vintage come out from the Temple which is in Heaven. The seven angels with the seven last plagues come out of the Temple; and the Temple is filled with smoke from the glory of God and from His power; and no one is able to enter into the Temple until the seven bowls full of the wrath of God have been emptied upon the earth.

When the seventh angel pours out his bowl upon the air (in judgment upon the prince of the powers of the air?), a great voice out of the Temple from the throne says, "It is done." When John sees in vision the Holy City, New Jerusalem, come down out of Heaven from God, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband, he hears a great voice out of the throne saying: "Behold the Tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell among them, and they shall be His peoples, and God Himself shall be with them, their God." But in the Holy City he saw no Temple, for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the Temple of it.

Thus the Tabernacle, or Temple, is vital to the whole structure and event of the prophecy, and we learn from the first vision, with its Divine explanation, that its candlesticks are symbols of the Churches; and in the first chapter and the last the whole book, the entire prophecy is declared to be sent to His servants, testified by His angel to the Churches.

As the throne with Him that sitteth upon it (between the cherubim, Psa. xcix. 1; Rev. viii. 3) was in the Temple, and as the Throne occurs thirty-five times in the prophecy, we have more than thirty allusions to the Temple, besides those passages where it is specifically mentioned. Now, in the Epistles the individual Christian believer is declared to be a temple of the Holy Ghost; and the Church of Christ to be a building fitly framed together which groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord, for a habitation of God through the Spirit (1 Cor. vi.: Eph. ii. 19-22).

We are therefore (without calling in question any other interpretation) abundantly justified in regarding the Revelation as intended for the guidance of the Church of Christ, during the period in which she is showing her Lord's death until He come.

SYMBOLS IN REVELATION IV.

A door opened in Heaven.—The image of a door set open before him appeared to John in vision.

A voice talking with me, which said, "Come up hither." And immediately I was in the spirit.—In the vision he received this command, and in spirit he entered the open door. Just as Ezekiel in spirit was lifted up by the Spirit and brought to Jerusalem (Ezek. xi. 1).

One sat on the throne.—God on his throne. Eleven times in this Book God is spoken of as "He that sitteth on the throne," in evident allusive contrast to the usurper who aspired to the throne of the Most High (Isa. xiv.; Ezek. xxviii.).

A jasper and a sardine stone.—The last and the first stones in the breastplate; here reversed. Jasper clear as crystal (ch. xxi.). Sardius, blood-red=mercy and judgment—or holiness and justice.

A rainbow.—The rainbow of God's covenant with the earth (Gen. ix.) encircles the throne.

Like in appearance to an emerald.—The emerald is green, the colour of grass. Ireland is called the Emerald Isle. The earth is an emerald isle in the blue ocean above our heads.

Four-and-twenty elders. — The Church in her priestly character. There were twenty-four courses of Jewish priests.

On their heads crowns of gold.—"The holy crown of pure gold" was the peculiar possession of the Levitical priests (Exod. xxxix. 30). The word signifies a chaplet of victory: also a badge of office or distinction.

Seven lamps of fire.—The seven spirits of God.

A glassy sea—like unto crystal.—Under the feet of the God of Israel a work of bright sapphire, as it were the body of heaven in its clearness (Exod. xxiv. 10; Ezek. i. 26; x. 1).

Four living beings.—The cherubim of Gen. iii. 24: Exod. xxxvii. 7; Ezek. i. 10. They represent the redeemed in governmental activity, though not yet crowned; as the elders represent them in priestly worship and service. "He hath made us unto our God kings and priests." M.

"The Same—For Ever."

(Heb. xiii. 8.)

Our Saviour, God, we bless Thy Name,
Time cannot from Thee sever;
Thou art from age to age the same,
Of old—today—for ever.
(Rom. viii. 39; Heb. i. 12.)

Too oft our feelings ebb and flow,
Our faith and hope may falter;
But Thou "abidest faithful" still,
Thy love can never alter.
(Psa. lvi. 8-13; 2 Tim. ii. 13.)

Earth's friendships are but shifting sand,
None can be here abiding;
Our hope is anchored safe to land,
And Thou our barque art guiding.
(Psa. lxxxviii. 18; Heb. vi. 18, 19.)

This life is but a transit o'er
The waves of care and sorrow;
The friends we miss, on yonder shore
Will welcome us to-morrow.
(Job viii. 9, marg.; 1 Thess. iv. 17.)

"But Thou remainest"—word of cheer!
Thou canst not fail or leave us;
Thou art our Pilot, true and dear,
One who will ne'er deceive us.
(Heb. i. 11; Psa. cvii. 30.)

Until beyond life's ebbing tide—
Where friends are parted never—
Thou who hast been our Guard and Guide,
Wilt be our Home for ever.
(Rev. xxi. 4; 2 Cor. v. 8, R.V.)

THE

Directory of the Devout Life.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

"Perfect as God."

(Matt. v. 43-48.)

IN the garden, the serpent suggested to our first parents that they should be as God, in knowing good and evil; but the Master tells us that we are to be as God in the character and temper of our inner life. If His words here are compared with the parallel ones in Luke vi. we discover that He desires us to resemble our Heavenly Father, not in our knowledge, which would, of course, be impossible, but in our love and mercy. The perfection on which He insists is a perfection of love Our natures are, of course, limited in extent and shallow in depth, as compared to the ocean fulness of the Infinite God; but a cup may be in its measure as brimming full as an ocean when the tide is high. Up to our measure, we may become full of Love, as, in His far greater measure, our Father is; and this is what Christ demands when He says: "Be ye therefore perfect, as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

. . . . . .

This is the fifth illustration which He gives, that He is come, not to destroy but to fulfil the Law, by shedding abroad in our hearts that love which is the fulfilling of the Law; and it is interesting to notice exactly the change which He wrought in the ancient code.

The precept which our Lord quotes, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour and hate thine enemy," cannot be found in the Old Testament. On the contrary, its pages are strewn with the most moving exhortations to love. If any of my readers would take the pains to investigate the matter, they would be startled to find the numerous exhortations to love which are scattered through the ancient code—generally considered so rigorous and severe. "If," said Moses, "thou meet thine enemy's ox or his ass going astray, thou shalt surely bring it back to him again." And again, "If thou see the ass of him that hateth thee lying under his burden, wouldst thou forbear to help him? Thou shalt surely help him" (Ex. xxiii. 4, 5). In a later age, the same kindly spirit appears in the injunction of the preacher: "Rejoice not when thine enemy falleth, and let not thine heart be glad when he stumbleth; lest the Lord see it, and it displease Him." When, therefore, our Lord said: "Ye have heard that it hath been said, 'Love your neighbour, and hate your enemy,'" He did not mean to refer to the inspired teachers of His people, but to those later Rabbis and Scribes who had overlaid the pure gold of Moses with their own incrustations.

There were two ways in which the teachers of the corrupt periods of Hebrew history had vitiated the scope of these ancient laws. First, they had obliterated the words "as thyself," and whittled down the precept from "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself," to "Thou shalt love thy neighbour." Next, they had, out of their own bad hearts, added the words, "and hate thine enemy"—lowering the Word of God to suit their own tradition.

Was it not high time that the moss and grit of centuries should be removed from the ancient characters, which the Spirit of God had cut in the legislation of Sinai, and that Christ should re-edit the old law, doing away with the hateful additions, and enlarging the significance of that word "neighbour"? They had delighted in limiting it. He rejoiced to level the walls of religious bigotry, jealousy, and national exclusivism, and taught that our neighbour is simply anyone to whom we can show kindness.

(1) The Inspiration of a great Nature. "Sons of your Father which is in heaven"; "Sons of the Highest," (Luke vi. 35). Men count much on ancestry. To be connected, however distantly, with the great of bygone times, is a subject of never-ceasing congratulation. How much more must it not count, when we stand face to face with urgent duty, that the capacity for its due discharge is certainly within us by virtue of our relationship to God through Jesus Christ?

We have been born again by the Word and the Spirit. From the family of the first Adam we have become grafted into the family of the second. We are all the children of God by faith in Him, and if children then heirs, heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ. And because we are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of His Son into our hearts. Since, then, we are partakers of the Divine Nature, we have within us the capacity for Divine Love. We may not be aware of its presence within us, but it is there, and if only we would dare to give it exercise, and allow it to make for itself an outlet in our kindly advances towards those who have served us ill, we should find that through the channels of outward expression the very fountains of Divine Love which are within us would pour their crystal tides.

You can love as God, because God's own nature has been begotten in you, and awaits the opportunity of approving itself before men and angels.

(2) But we need, also, The Inspiration of a great Example. Who is there that has not sometimes stood on the mountain of Transfiguration with Moses and Elias? A study of some celestial nature, a biography, a noble act, a reunion which has revealed depths of emotion that surpass all previous experiences—these have greatly influenced our lives, and made us resolve that life should henceforth be new. And so our Lord brings us face to face with a marvellous illustration of the love which He desires us to show.

Of course He Himself, as He sat there, was the supreme instance of God's impartial love. But the time had not arrived when He could speak plainly of Himself; so He selected His example from the humbler book of Nature, which He had often studied in His highland home, and which lies open before all men's eyes.

Life is like an April day. It is not all sun, nor all cloud. The saddest lives have some patches of blue, some hours of sun. The happiest have some showers, and are overspread now and again with shadow. And surely this is best, for those characters are not the noblest which are spent always on the tableland, and never descend unto the valley of shadow. For Sun, you have had love at home, a happy childhood, a loving wife, sweet children, prosperous years in business, long spells of good health, happy episodes, weeks and months of country or sea. For Rain, you have had seasons of ill-health, of business anxiety, and of bereavement. Now if we were to compare experiences between the men and women of our acquaintance in the same position of life, putting away all considerations of the inner peace of heart which religion gives, I do not suppose that in the outward life there would be much apparent difference. There are thousands of homes, where God's name is not honoured, but where goodness and mercy, like guardian angels, follow the inmates all the days of their lives.

Why? Because the course of events in this world moves by a blind machinery? No. Because God has no special care whether a man be good or bad? No. But because God loves His enemies, blesses those that curse Him, and is kind to the unthankful and unloving. If anything, He seems more bountiful to those who oppose Him most, that by His mercy He may lead them to repentance.

But God has given us another and better Sun than that which He has hung in heaven's porch. "He commendeth His Love towards us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." And the benefits of the death of the Redeemer are for the world. Therefore it was possible to carry the Gospel, in the first instance, to Jerusalem. The men who had used Him most despitefully lived there; therefore the Master bade His disciples to begin at Jerusalem. "Tell Caiaphas, who sneered at my royalty, that I love him. Tell the grey-haired Annas, the irresolute Pilate, and the mocking Herod, that I desire to bless them. Go and find out the men who drove the nails into my hands and laughed at my dying anguish; say that I will pray for them." So the Master left us an example that we should follow in His steps.

And God has given another and better Rain than that which fertilizes the fields—the rain of the Holy Spirit's influence and grace, which is for the most stubborn and obdurate offenders. Did He not descend in copious effusion upon the city of Jerusalem at the first, though it had but lately crucified the world's Redeemer? Take heart, you who think that you have grieved Him away, who have done Him despite, who fear that you have committed the unpardonable sin; even to you He comes with a shower of grace, falling with refreshing bounty. We are called to be imitators of God, as dear children, walking in love, as Christ also hath loved us, even to the point of giving Himself for us (Eph. v. 1, 2). Anything short of this is not Christianity as our Lord taught it.

(3) We require, lastly, The Inspiration of a great Hope. What animates a woman to spend her life on some brutal husband, or ungrateful son? Is it not the hope that, at last, her love will conquer? And is it not this, in an infinitely higher sphere, that leads God, our Father, to pour out the ceaseless tides of His heart on the disobedient and rebellious? Does He not see the consummation when the heavens and the earth shall have become new, as the result of His unstinted love? And ought not the same purpose to animate us?

It is recorded of a certain Chinese emperor that, on being apprised that his enemies had raised an insurrection in a distant province, he said to his officers: "Come, follow me, and we shall quickly destroy them." On his arrival the rebels submitted to him, and all expected that he would take the most signal revenge. Instead of this, the captives were treated with the utmost humanity. "How!" cried his first Minister of State, "is this the manner in which your promise is fulfilled? Your royal word was given that your enemies should be destroyed, and, lo, you have pardoned them all, and even some of them have been caressed." "I promised," said the Emperor, generously, "to destroy my enemies. I have fulfilled my word, for, see, they are enemies no longer; I have made friends of them."

Is there some one in our life who envies and hates us? We must be willing to be kind and good so long as we are sure that our behaviour is not misinterpreted or hurtful to his independence and moral life.

Is there one who despitefully uses and persecutes us? We must compel ourselves to pray for him, until presently a warm feeling of compassion fills our hearts.

Thus you will reach perfection. It will not be the absolute and infinite perfection of God, for at the best it can be only relative and finite. It will not be the perfection of angels, for they have never left their first estate. It will not be a perfection of knowledge, for we are all liable to error. It will not be freedom from temptation, or from such infirmities as weakness of body, dullness of understanding, and incoherence of thought. But it will be after your measure a full-orbed, equable, and loving nature which shall go through the world shedding sunshine and rain on weary and hopeless souls until they be led to take up heart and hope again.

A little child gets into a railway carriage. In perfect simplicity she begins to play with some austere-looking man, until he relaxes and the two become friends; and from them the genial warmth steals through the carriage, until everyone begins to talk kindly with his neighbour, and the tedium of the journey is relaxed. Oh, to go through the world like that, with God's radiance on our faces, and His love in our hearts! Every day be sunshine or rain to someone, and especially to your enemies, and the people from whom you are naturally repelled.

SUNDAY, October 4. Psalm cxxxix.

The Psalm of Omniscience.

THE Psalmist speaks as though there were only two beings in the universe—himself and God; and in all literature there is no nobler conception of the attributes of the Almighty than this Psalm affords.

1-6. God's Omniscience. The "downsitting" and "uprising" correspond to "walking" and "lying down" in the following verse, but surely they may be applied to the alternations of the inner life. God knows our uprisings, in which we are strongest, when we rise up to unselfishness, consecration and prayer; and our downsittings, our failure, short-coming, inconsistency. Nothing can surprise Him. He goes before us, and all the future is full of Him; His presence lies behind us, as the wave follows in the wake of every bather, and fills up the space caused by his progress. I confess it sometimes fills me with awe as I realize how absolutely God knows all; the only marvel is that He does not cease to love!

7-12. God's Omnipresence. There is no escaping from God. However thick the foliage of the trees of paradise, they could not separate Adam from God. This thought is terrible to the sinner, but is full of inspiration to the saint. Be of good cheer, lonely one, thou art never alone! Thy night of sorrow is as the day, each being full of Him!

13-18. God's Creative Power. The Psalmist goes back to the beginning of life, and describes the weaving together of our body. Here, again, also, we may find a spiritual analogy; for, first the Body of Christ has been wrought in secret from the earliest beginnings, and next, it is still being built up until it is manifested. Remember, also, that the Christ-life in thy heart and mind is subject to the same secret processes.

19-24. The Saints' Antagonism to Evil. The thought of God delivers from the love of evil. Let this be our constant desire, to be delivered from the ways of evil men, separated from inward evil, and led in the everlasting way.

MONDAY, October 5. Psalm cxl.

The Cry of the Afflicted.

Here again is the image of a man beset by foes, with which the earlier Psalms are full. Around are slander and hatred, at the feet stratagems and traps, and there is no help for the soul but in Him who can cover the head in the day of battle. Surely these experiences are our lot still. Some of us are hunted by earthly foes, and some more especially by the evil spirits which haunt the heavenlies. God alone against foul fiends can ward us militant!

1-5. The Psalmist compares life to a path through a forest, where adders hide in the tangled undergrowth, and gins are laid in the glade to entrap the unwary. At any moment a movement in the brake on either hand of the darksome path may disclose a foe.

6-7. Faith lays hold on God. What a sweet term for Him, the strength of our salvation, and our helmet when the sword of the foe strikes at us to crash through our head. Cover us, O Son of God, as we go forth to the war, and not our head only, but our hearts, and all our sensitive and highly-strung nature!

8-12. This is a terrible outburst. None of us may dare to appropriate these words against our earthly enemies. The only coals of fire we can deal with are those of love, which we heap on their heads. But let us never forget that impenitent hearts are treasuring up for themselves wrath against the day of wrath (Rom. ii. 5).

13-14. The Psalmist ends with a gladder strain. He knows that God will not forsake him; and that there is an inner sanctuary where the upright may dwell, even when storms hurtle through the air.

TUESDAY, October 6. Psalm cxli.

A Dramatic Idyll.

Parts of this Psalm are very obscure, and commentators cannot explain the references of vv. 6, 7. It is supposed by some that the subject is Absalom's revolt, v. 2 alluding to the King's absence from the sanctuary, and v. 6 to the fate of the leaders of the revolt, and the return of the mass of the people to loyal submission.

1, 2. In prayer we speak after the manner of men, and ask God to hasten to our side, although we know that He is the very atmosphere of our existence. We call to Him, but He hears our whispers. How wonderful it is that our poor prayers can be compared to the cloud of fragrant incense, which Aaron swung from the golden censer morning and night. The fragrance is not ours, but His, to whom is given "much incense, that He should add it unto the prayers of all the saints upon the golden altar before the throne" (Rev. viii. 3, 4).

3-5. Here are two petitions which must enter into all true prayer—first, that God would put His restraining grace as a sentinel at the gate of the mouth, that we may not speak unseemly words which defile our own lips and other people's ears; and next, that the heart shall not feast on the "dainties of the wicked" or have any zest for the choice morsels which give them pleasure. Better to be corrected by the righteous than to feast with the wicked, from whose assaults the only refuge is prayer.

6-10. Here is a glimpse of widespread slaughter, like that which has lately soaked Macedonia with Christian blood; but when the leaders of revolt had met with condign punishment (compare 2 Kings ix. 32) the people were prepared to listen to the comfortable words of the Psalmist. God's words are sweet, sweeter than honey. Let us meditate on them.

WEDNESDAY, October 7. Psalm cxlii.

The Song of the Cave.

The Cave of Adullam, where David sheltered for so long from the hatred of Saul and his court, was made vocal by some of his sweetest Psalms. Dark sorrows have often given to the world the songs that can never die.

1-4. Is thy spirit overwhelmed within thee? Is thy path sown thick with pitfalls? Does refuge fail thee? Does no one seem to care whether thou shalt live or die? Then be of good cheer, God knows thy path. O, fainting heart, there is not one heart-throb, one sigh, one wound punctured by thorn or cut with jagged flint, that is not apparent to those loving eyes. Walk with Him along the path which He has planned before the foundation of the world, with special reference to thy need of training and teaching. Unite thyself with His plan for thee, and the bitterness of it will largely pass away.

5-7. When a man is deprived of help, friends, and hiding-place, what can he do but look up? And there he finds a Rock of Defence, a Refuge, a Hiding-place, which stands between him and his foes. No eye but his can see it, no onlooker can understand the source of the sudden calm which steals over him; but, he says thankfully, "Thou art my refuge." Under the influence of such meditations the heart is soothed and quieted. We begin to see that our sufferings have not been for ourselves only, but to give joy to the righteous; and the bountifulness of God will more than compensate, as in Job's case, for all the bitter pain. Look on and look up; thy prison shall be exchanged for a palace and thy sighs for songs.

THURSDAY, October 8. Psalm cxliii.

The Psalm of the Weary.

1-3. David realized and confessed that his affliction was deserved, and that God was using men as his chastening rod. It was clear, therefore, that matters must be put right between himself and God, by Divine forgiveness, before there could be any lessening of his trouble. His cry for pardon is based on those two great attributes of the Divine nature—faithfulness and righteousness—of which the Apostle says that "God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins." The purest life appears defiled when exposed to God's searching scrutiny, how much more those who in "the rough and tumble" of life are in constant collision with men and things?

4-6. It is impossible for the spirit not to faint amid such circumstances as David describes. The heart becomes stunned (so the Hebrew may be rendered), and almost ceases to beat. Perhaps the bitterest ingredient in the cup of sorrow is the memory of happier and better days. From all this there is no alternative for the child of God but to turn to Him, as the poor parched earth lays itself bare under the sky, mutely pleading for rain.

7-9. We long for the shining of God's face. Oh, that the warm beams of that face might even now visit us, and that we might be caused to hear the voice of His lovingkindness! Then shall we know the way in which to walk. We shall no longer walk in dark places, but have the morning light upon our path; we shall no longer fear our foes, knowing that we are hidden in God.

10-12. These petitions should often be on our lips. There is no limit to our prayers and peace when we have come to see God as our God, and to recognise His Spirit as good—always and only good.

FRIDAY, October 9. Psalm cxliv.

A Prayer for Victory.

In this Psalm we have excerpts from several other Psalms, presenting familiar words in new contrasts.

1-2 remind us of Psa. xviii. 2, 34, 46.

3-4 may be compared with Psa. viii., xxxix. 5, cii. 11.

5-8 is borrowed from Psa. xviii. 9, 14-16.

9-11 recalls Psa. xxxiii. 2, 3; xcviii. 1.

12-15 is, however, fresh. Here is a description of the blessings of peace, when the population begins to increase rapidly, agriculture prospers, and there is no fear of the breaking in of the foe, no need for the going forth of the soldier, and no outcry of the fugitive in the street when the enemy has forced entrance.

The strength of a nation does not consist in its battleships or standing army, but in God's blessing, resting like a shaft of sunshine upon the land. Let us pray that our countrymen may come to see this. Holy homes, in which children are taught to know and love God; well-kept Sabbaths, in which men refuse to do their own pleasure; mercy for the poor and oppressed—these are the true fortifications of a country against all foes.

SATURDAY, October 10. Psalm cxlv.

God's Greatness and Goodness.

This is an acrostic Psalm. Its theme is Jehovah in His character and doings.

1-6. His Greatness. Each scientist in his laboratory, or astronomer turning his telescope to the heavens whilst the world is veiled in darkness, or investigator of the marvels hidden in the minute, or angel winging his lonely flight from world to world on messages of mercy, may well join in these magnificent descriptions of God's greatness. But saints must meditate, extol, and praise. Like the Psalmist, they must incite to praise.

7-10. His Goodness. Greatness, splendour, magnificence, are not the inner nature of God. His graciousness and goodness are His essential Self. That goodness extends to all, even to thee, poor tempted and harried soul. Thou mayest not see it, because thine eyes are dim with tears, but the Lord is good to all, and thou art included there. Listen to the murmur of bee, the roll of breaker, the laughter in the voice of the child—these are notes in the mighty anthem of thanksgiving (10).

11-13. His Kingdom. I saw the words of verse 13 engraven above the doorway of a very old building in Damascus, which ages ago had been a Christian church, and is now a mosque. The words are not contradicted by the succeeding generations of unbelievers.

14-21. His Nearness. No creature whom God hath made is neglected, though sin has disturbed the universal harmony and method of creation. He is great, and good, and nigh. He has only to open His hand to satisfy your hunger, whether of heart or mouth. F. B. M.

Home Missions.

A New Forward Movement

IN LONDON.

THE historic edifice in Tottenham Court Road, fragrant with the memory of Whitefield's labours, was the scene of remarkable gatherings last week, when it was reopened as the headquarters of the Central Mission of the London Congregational Union. On Sunday the building was twice crowded, when Rev. C. Silvester Horne entered upon his new sphere as superintendent of the undertaking, and preached morning and evening. The former gathering was attended by many friends from Allen Street, Kensington, who had journeyed to Whitefield's to bid Mr. Horne God-speed in his new labours; while the evening service, at which all seats are free and unappropriated, drew together hundreds of young people.

THE WORLD'S POLICY—AND CHRIST'S.

Long before three o'clock on Tuesday afternoon the chapel was crowded for the service, at which Rev. J. H. Jowett preached. The sermon was a memorable and inspiring discourse on Matt. x. 39, "He that findeth his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life for My sake shall find it." A contrast was drawn between the policy of the world and the policy of Christ. The policy of the world is a policy of finding; the policy of Christ is a policy of losing. The world says, "keep your lips closed," "go with the stream," and "look after yourself." Against this threefold policy of the world Christ opposes the three-fold policy of expression, endurance and self-sacrifice. Mr. Jowett showed that the world's policy of silence in the realm of emotion ends in a man having no emotions to express. Feelings require outlet, or they dry up. Even love unexpressed shrivels up. The price of retention is expression. Truth never proclaimed is never really known. Truth reserves her rarest beauties for the moment when she is being given away.

Contrasting the world's policy of drifting with Christ's policy of resistance, Mr. Jowett insisted that drifting might be the secret of easy living, but it never gains entrance into any spacious life. You cannot drift into anything worth having. You cannot drift into rest, into joy, into strength. Life is energised by resistance. It is the man who takes up hard tasks hopefully, who finds his life full of the unspeakable riches of Christ. The world's policy of "looking after Number One" was then contrasted with Christ's policy of self-sacrifice. Life, declared the preacher, never becomes influential until it becomes self-sacrificial. Whenever the Church becomes easyful she loses her power to redeem; when she becomes self-sacrificial she becomes grandly influential. "It's the bleeding folk who tell. Nero, dead! his martyred prisoner, Paul, never more alive! Have you ever heard of Sir John Kellenge—the brutal justice who sent John Bunyan, to Bedford Gaol? You haven't. No. It's the bleeding folk who tell. Sir John Kellenge — his very name a riddle; John Bunyan, never more alive, a living inspiration." Mr. Jowett closed his sermon with a prayer for the fruitfulness of Whitefield's Mission, and a tribute to Mr. Horne's spirit of self-sacrifice.

The evening gathering drew together an even larger assembly than the afternoon, and an overflow meeting was held in Toplady Hall. Mr. George Spicer presided in the chapel, and addressed a few words of welcome to Mr. Silvester Horne, who, he said, had gone into the central zone of London. Speaking as a Churchman, Earl Carrington joined in the congratulations to Mr. Horne on his new departure. After some reference to the Fiscal Question and the Education Acts, he spoke of the overcrowding in the district around Whitefield's. "People," he said, "with souls like you and me, have to live like pigs under conditions in which no man can be honest, no woman can be pure, and no child can be innocent."

The next speaker was the superintendent of the West London Mission, Rev. C. Ensor Walters, who mentioned that he had spent seven years of hard work in Cleveland Street. "I envy Mr. Horne the glorious opportunity of planting the standard of Jesus Christ in this place. There is no more needy district for mission work than that in which we are gathered to-night. As an instance of the prevailing overcrowding, Mr. Walters said that a few days ago he went into an underground room within a stone's throw of Whitefield's, where a man, woman, and eight children lived and worked. They paid 7s. 6d. a week for rent, and the woman said that seven rats had been killed in the cellar that week. Just behind Tottenham Court Road, with its splendour and its luxury, there were 1,000 underground dwellings. We need Mr. Horne to join with us in calling for better housing for the people." Revs. Alex. Connell and R. J. Campbell also spoke.

Rev. J. H. Jowett, who took the place of Dr. Clifford, had a cordial reception. He begged his hearers to remember among all their labours that their PRIMARY WORK IS TO REDEEM MEN.

"The famous Spa of Scarborough was created by a little medicinal spring. It is there still, but quite obscured by the multitude of entertainments gathered round it. The central thing in this church will be the little medicinal spring—the well of water springing up into everlasting life."

In his reply, Rev. C. Silvester Horne referred to the demonstration of sympathy which had been shown to him, and which led him to say: "If this is the spirit, the victory is half won." He acknowledged the Christian greetings from his Episcopal, Methodist, Presbyterian, and Baptist friends on the platform, and declared, "We can at a pinch do at Whitefield's without distinguished men or moneyed men, but we cannot do at this centre without men and women who, for the sake of Christ and the Kingdom of God, will go headlong for righteousness. That is my programme—to go, without regard for consequences, headlong for righteousness. We are here to make friends in the name of Christ with all the young people and the working-classes in this district. We are here to make friends with all classes, and to forget that there are 'classes.'"

Other speakers included Mr. W. H. Brown, Revs. G. Suttle, J. P. Gledstone, and James Holmes (Mr. Horne's assistant at Whitefield's).

Bible Training Institute, Glasgow.

THE inaugural meeting of the twelfth session of the Bible Training Institute was held in the hall of the Institute on Thursday afternoon, 17th inst. Between students and friends the hall was crowded. Lord Overtoun occupied the chair. Beside him on the platform were Mr. John Anderson, Mr. William Quarrier, Mr. Alexander Mackeith, Revs. Dr. Boyd, George Green, James Brown, and others.

Lord Overtoun, in his remarks, gave a word of hearty greeting to the students, and asked them to remember that they were sure to meet with difficulties, but that they were to press on to success.

Statistics were given as to the past history of the institute, which showed that since its beginning in 1892 there had been 450 resident students, 170 outside students; while at the evening classes there has been a total of about 3,000 in attendance. Students from the Institute have gone forth to China, India, Persia, Africa, Queensland, New South Wales, Tasmania, Canada, and the United States, and a number have remained in the home field.

The session opens this year with 108 resident students, a larger number by a long way than has ever been in residence for any previous year.

Brief addresses were also given by Mr. Galloway, Mr. Anderson, Mr. Mackeith, and Mr. Quarrier. J. C.

A Grand Opportunity.

THE rise and progress of The Working Men's Mission in the New Cut, under the superintendence of the Brothers Young, is a matter which gives joy to all who watch with sympathetic concern the various endeavours of Christian organizations in this part of the metropolis. It origin, in 1876, was of the humblest description, but with rapid development and extensions, no departure has been made from the primary ideal—a working-men's mission by working-men. The little hall in which the movement found birth has long since disappeared, and in its place stands a structure capable of seating nearly 500, with a smaller hall with accommodation for 400 children, schoolrooms, &c.

A little company has grown into quite an army, and a large variety of agencies for good have sprung up in the locality. The different branches of Christian effort combine in the conflict against the power that rules with a crushing hand over the hearts and homes of the poor in this benighted neighbourhood. Ministers and other leaders in the churches have not been slow to recognize the value of this aggressive movement. The late Mr. C. H. Spurgeon warmly commended "the work done by our gracious God through the Brothers Young and their friends. Theirs has been a real Working Men's Mission, and has reached the persons aimed at."

Mr. J. W. C. Fegan says:—"On my way home from where I worship every Lord's Day morning I pass your open-air meeting; and as I see the big crowd of labouring men listening so eagerly to the earnest Gospel messages spoken by men of their own class, and the capital singing of your friends, I say in my heart: God bless the Brothers Young, and prosper the work at Collingwood Street."

Among others who have encouraged Messrs. Thomas and James Young in their labours are Mr. F. A. Bevan, Mr. E. M. Denny, Mr. T. A. Denny, and Mr. Augustus G. Grantham.

The growth of any movement naturally demands considerable changes as the years go on, and the time has arrived for another move in the locale of this work—a move which it is hoped, like all the others, will render the Mission even more useful than it has hitherto been. The lease of the present buildings in Collingwood Street expires in March, 1906, and the Brothers Young, with their customary business tact and devotion to the work, have secured a new site right in the midst of the "hooligan" district. We know no mission in the metropolis that more actually touches the raw and lawless masses.

A lady has placed to the credit of the building fund the sum of £1,000, on condition that the new hall is opened free of debt. Amounts promised by other friends total £600; but the sum required will not be less than £5,000. Every endeavour is being made by the workers to raise the fund, and the Brothers Young are hopeful that friends will rally to their aid in securing this improved centre for the varied operations of the Mission. An effort is being made to raise £2,000 before the New Year. The address of the Brothers Young is 33, Nelson Street, Southwark.

Protestant Reformation Society.—The representatives of this Society are meeting with much encouragement in connection with their educational classes. The necessity for these in every district has been increased by the activity of a Roman Catholic organization entitled the "Correspondence Guild for Inquiring Protestants." In an official paper it is stated that "the object of this Guild, which is composed entirely of lay members of the Catholic Church, is to explain the doctrines and practices of the Church to non-Catholics, chiefly by correspondence, with a view to removing their doubts and difficulties. Most of the members being converts, inquirers may rest assured that they will receive sympathetic assistance from those with whom they are put in communication. It should be known that the missionaries and workers of the Protestant Reformation Society will be happy to assist in the formation of educational classes, to give instructional addresses and lectures in connection with them, or to assist persons in difficulty or doubt who may desire information upon such topics.

Cripples at the Seaside.

THE R.S.U. SOUTHEND HOME.

AS one of the representatives of the Ragged School Union and Shaftesbury Society, it has been my privilege, in the interest of their beautiful Home for Crippled Children at Southend, to conduct Gospel services on the beach there during the past three months. Out of the little army of crippled children under the Society's care, numbering nearly 7,000, about thirty every fortnight find their way to this Home, making a total of some 200 during the three months, at a cost to the Society of from 10s. to 12s. per child. All of them are badly maimed, either from birth or by serious accident or enfeebled health.

How indescribable the joy of some of these pale-faced and helpless little ones as they behold for the first time a green field, or the inflowing sea, and breathe the free fresh breezes!

Matron and nurse are keenly alive to the spiritual needs of the children, and avail themselves of every opportunity to deal with such. It was my unspeakable joy on one occasion, when leading them in evening prayer, to find eighteen (twelve boys and six girls) of the children out of the thirty-four then present, ready and eager to testify to their having discovered, personally and for the first time, during their fortnight's stay in the Home, the precious love of Jesus. Their testimony began with the eldest, an intelligent and bright girl of thirteen years, and was interrupted by an equally bright boy of nine years, who said "there were other eight boys with him in the same room, that they had a prayer-meeting among themselves every night, that seven of them were converted, and that they were praying for the other two."

The children attended our services on the beach once a day, when weather and tide permitted; and their solo and united hymn-singing, together with their simple but telling repetition of texts or portions of Scripture, linked to the more extended and direct message of God delivered by those in charge of the services, have proved a means of grace to many with whom we conversed at the close, cheering us with the assurance that our labour had not been in vain in the Lord.

Working-Lads' Needs.

MANY besides Primitive Methodists watch, with interest and thankfulness, the unabated earnestness with which the operations at the Working Lads' Institute and Home are carried on. Rev. Thomas Jackson, hon. secretary and superientendent, is careful to observe unsectarian methods in the conduct of the work. The lads who have benefited by the Institute now number upwards of 8,000. It is open to all lads upon payment of a small subscription for card of membership, which entitles them to attend each evening in the week. During the winter months numerous educational classes are held, and popular gatherings and lectures occupy Saturday evenings. The membership roll at the present time contains 540 names.

A much more pathetic side of life is witnessed in the Home. Only those who are brought into personal contact with orphan lads of the poor know of their terrible fight for existence. During last year forty such cases were received into the Home, food, clothing, and lodging being provided for them until suitable situations could be found. The following extract from the latest report throws light on more than one phase of the ministry of the Home:—

To transform an outcast lad into a respectable citizen is a good thing, and benefits the community at large; but a better thing still is to bring such a lad into contact with spiritual forces that will produce "a new creature in Christ Jesus." Two lads recently admitted into our Home had each tramped from Newcastle-on-Tyne, and neither had slept in a bed for three weeks prior to visiting us. They had had to "rough it," as an experience of privation is termed, and were penniless, hungry, and in a wretched condition. A bath, disinfectants, and a change of clothing, produced a marked improvement in their appearance, and after a few weeks' probation in our Institute we were able to secure employment for them. Both are now in the ranks of those earning an honest livelihood. We know of a lad who is reported to have "lifted" (stolen) nine watches on Coronation Day, who is now earning an honest living, and is a member of a Christian Endeavour Society, through the ministry of the Working Lads' Institute. No department of our work demands so much of our time, thought, and energy as this work of rescuing lads from the social "gutter."

There are many friends who could assist us if they understood that any articles of cast-off clothing, suitable for lads from fourteen to eighteen years of age, would be gladly received by us. By giving a very poor but respectable lad suitable clothing and a new pair of boots a few days ago, he was so improved in appearance that he was successful the same day in obtaining a situation in the City, and is now not only supporting himself, but assisting his invalid mother.

When it is remembered that "one sinner destroyeth much good," it is encouraging to consider the evil to the individual and to society that is prevented when a lad exposed to the temptations of destitution and crime is befriended, and afforded an opportunity to become a respectable and godly citizen. It is expensive work saving even lads, but it is far more expensive as well as less satisfactory to neglect the lad and endeavour to save the man.

A valuable addition to Mr. Jackson's work is the Holiday Home at Southend-on-Sea. Many who have no means of otherwise procuring a holiday and rest are thus enabled to do so, and invariably derive physical and spiritual advantage. The address of the Institute is 279, Whitechapel Road, E.

Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway.

THE conditions of life in and around Ratcliff Highway have changed very considerably of late years. The population is now greatly foreign, and sailors do not form so large a proportion of it; but there are as many lost souls to be sought and saved as ever, and many will be glad to hear that the work at the Strangers' Rest is still being steadily and prayerfully carried on.

The "Rest" amply justifies its existence by the fact that many, even very recently, have had reason to praise the Lord for having there been led to put their trust in Him who is "mighty to save." Miss Cleaver (the resident deaconess), and the other workers, have a full week. To mention some branches of the work, there are meetings every night for sailors and others, when hymns are sung and the Gospel is preached; and as far as possible the men are dealt with individually. On Monday afternoons, endeavours are made to win the women of the neighbourhood; on Sundays and Thursdays, a German evangelist visits and preaches to his compatriots; part of Wednesday is given up to Jewish work, which has been blessed by God to the conversion of numbers of the "chosen people"; on Saturdays, well-nigh 1,000 tracts and papers are distributed at the dock gates, after which visits are paid to boarding-houses in the vicinity.

The work among the Scandinavians deserves special notice. The meetings on Tuesdays and Thursdays are well attended, and are conducted by a young fellow who was converted some two years ago, and whom the Lord is greatly using among his fellow countrymen. "Patient continuance" is necessary to all successful Christian work, and is a marked feature at the Strangers' Rest, and although the work is not sensational in character it is nearly every week owned by God in the conversion of one or more souls.

Operative Jewish Converts' Institution. —The sixty-eighth report of this work states that of seventeen candidates for admission, ten were admitted, seven of them on the recommendation of missionaries of the London Society for Promoting Christianity Among the Jews. In addition to these a former inmate, obliged to go away on account of his health, was allowed to return for a limited time, and with him the total number in residence was made up to twenty-four. Copies of the report may be had from the Institution, Palestine House, Bodney Road, Hackney, N.E.

Rome in Ireland.

THE proposed appointment of nuns on the staff of the Youghal Lunatic Asylum has been already referred to in these columns.

The committee of the Cork District Lunatic Asylum enlarged and confirmed its proposal at its last meeting. On the motion of the Roman Catholic Bishop of Cloyne it was unanimously resolved, "That the following offices in the Youghal Asylum be entrusted to a community of nuns at the salaries named—matron, who is to be superintendent of the asylum, £40; assistant matron, in charge of asylum store, £35; head hospital nurse, £35; clerk and bookkeeper, £35; laundry superintendent, £35; storekeeper, £35; head attendant, in charge of kitchen, £35; head attendant, £35." One member raised an unavailing protest against the ousting of the laity from these positions. "The people," he declared, "these positions would suit are passing your door every day going to America."

The Roman Catholic Bishop of Ross proposed the appointment of a visiting physician "at a salary of £100, without residence or emoluments." A doctor's residence had been erected, but the Bishop got over the difficulty by declaring that "the house was built for the superintendent, and the superintendent was going to be a lady." The Asylum was handed over to the care of the nuns!

The October number of The Catholic contains two interesting letters from ex-Roman Catholics. The first comes from a converted Catholic in Limerick, who, with his wife, was led out of Rome some time ago. He says:—"Some of my friends here have asked me to write to you with a view to your using your influence to obtain for me a position as clerk in a law agent's, merchant's, or shipping office in Dublin—in fact, any position of trust, as it is quite impossible to get on here. Protestant employers don't want me, for they say their business would be ruined if they took me on, and, of course, Roman Catholic employers would not touch me. Things are made fairly hot for me in this office, all the staff being Roman Catholics. Father———, the Superior of the confraternity, came to me a short time ago and offered 'to do anything on God's earth' for me, if my wife and I would only come back to the Church in which we were brought up. My own people have been all set against us."

The other was written by a girl who has undergone considerable persecution from her relatives. To a letter from her brother-in-law, she replies: "Thanks for your kind letter this morning. I was expecting it. It is true I have changed my religion; and I think I have a right to be what I wish. I have been brought up a Catholic, but that was not my choice; it was because my parents were Catholics, and then, when I could, I was justified in seeing for myself what way was right. If you get the Douay Testament, the one Roman Catholics are allowed to read, you will find the teachings of your Church wrong. I never in all my life before had or felt such happiness as in knowing I can go to Jesus with my sins, and not to a poor, sinful man. I love my mother and my sisters dearer than my own life. But our Lord Himself said we must give up all to follow Him. It breaks my heart to have to hurt you all, but I cannot help it. I know all my people, yourself among the number, will cut me now, but God will help me to bear it." This will afford an idea of what converts from Rome have to suffer in Ireland.

Mr. Geo. Moore, an author of considerable repute, has recently left Rome. He has been criticized, of course, and in reply he has said, among other things: "In the first year of the twentieth century, Maynooth and the Roman Catholic Archbishop (Dr. Walsh) deserted the Irish Parliamentary Party, one in the hope of getting a Catholic University, the other in order to get a cardinal's hat. Rome has been anti-national in every country; Rome has no care for any country, Rome is not national even in Italy; Rome aims at a wider corporation than nationality, and an English duke is more to Rome than the entire province of Connaught."

Befriending Criminals.

MRS. MEREDITH'S SUCCESSOR IN THE PRISON MISSION.

SOME forty years have passed away since it was laid on the heart of the late Mrs. Meredith to make the attempt by God's grace to gather disciples for Christ from the ranks of the slaves of vice and misery, and to lead citizens of a land of darkness into His kingdom of light, and His service of gladness and liberty. Time has wrought numerous changes, but the lapse of years has not removed the need for such a ministry as is exercised through Mrs. Meredith's institutions, and when in 1901 the home-call came to the beloved founder, a successor was found in her sister, Miss M. A. Lloyd, who has been associated with the work almost from its inception. What her sainted sister planned in faith and love, and carried out, often in discouragement and weakness, Miss Lloyd has been enabled to continue, and the seed sown both inside and outside prison walls has borne fruit in the consecrated lives of many who have become true-hearted disciples of the Son of God.

For the great mass of women coming out of prison, a net was spread which would admit all into it. The first step is by way of the invitation given in the prison cell; the next, admission into the Mission, in which daily work is given them. In the course of last year no fewer than fifty-three women discharged from prison were thus helped through the institutions at Clapham.

Experience of the methods of helping female criminals on their regaining liberty demonstrated their value. They were both few and simple: Work for every woman on coming out of prison, immediately on her discharge, and enough payment given for the work done to enable her to support herself. Mrs. Meredith's success in the reformation of some hundreds of erring members of her own sex, attests the value of her theories: and her institutions remain to-day a bridge by which those who are willing may retrace their footsteps, leaving paths of iniquity and darkness for those of righteousness and light. The women who behave badly in prison, and those who have conducted themselves well, are treated alike on discharge, no distinction being made on this point. The best description of her principle for their aid, the founder used to say, was "treating them when they come out of prison like children being taught to walk;" and this principle is followed by her successor, Miss Lloyd.

The discharged prisoners are not detained in homes, but daily work is given them, and they are suppliedwith boarding-houses to live in, at their liberty, while they earn their daily bread. Only for the young are Homes and penitentiaries recommended.

As in Mrs. Meredith's days, so at the present time, Miss Lloyd and her helpers are frequently cheered by women in the mission coming out as followers of Christ. One who had never done anything for an honest living was a notable instance. In a little time she grew industrious in slipper-making, and better still, showed interest in the homely evangelistic services which are held, and at one of these gatherings she decided to give herself to Christ. During the remainder of her sojourn at Clapham, the reality of her change of life was always apparent. Subsequently she took a situation, but slackness in business brought temptation and a severe trial of faith. Rather than do wrong, however, she willingly endured poverty, till new work was secured, in which she is now witnessing for her Master.

Another encouraging case is that of a nurse, the story of whose downfall is soon told. During a patient's unconsciousness she stole some jewellery, and was sentenced to serve a term of imprisonment. On her discharge she was taken to the institution, and in one of Miss Lloyd's meetings yielded herself fully to Christ. After she had been thoroughly proved, an opening was found for her to re-enter her profession as a nurse, in which she is exercising a wide influence for good. A young lady sold jewellery for a companion, not knowing it was stolen, she said; she got three months' imprisonment. With broken prospects and in despair, she found out Miss Lloyd. After some months of seclusion and quiet reflection on what life and its responsibilities really means, she returned to her friends, truly penitent, with but one desire for her future, and that to serve Him whom she had learned to love.

Of one of the oldest of those who are being helped by the Mission, Miss Lloyd writes: "She has been over twenty years with us, and though partially paralysed, comes to do her little share of daily work. When first she came to the Mission she was one of the worst conducted in it, going in and out of prison constantly, seemingly untouched by any kindness. She had one little girl whom we took into our Homes, feeling it to be good to separate the two. The girl grew up to be a nice steady young woman; we emigrated her, and she has been now for many years in the Colonies earning good wages, and came to see her mother last year. The mother's conversion was a remarkable one, and she has amply proved its sincerity by her good living. In order that her mother may not have to go into the workhouse for the remainder of her days through being paralysed, her daughter sends £1 regularly every month to the Mission to enable us to admit her mother into our workroom. We do it gladly, her influence is so good, and her advice to the young is wise from experience."

One of the most fruitful branches of Mrs. Meredith's institutions is the Christmas Letters to Prisoners. In 1902, men and women in British and Colonial prisons received 23,606 letters at Christmas, telling them of the One who alone could deliver them from the bondage of sin. Over 3,000 letters were written in French, German, Italian, Swedish, Polish, Greek, Russian, Dutch, Norwegian, Finnish, and Arabic, and sent to prisons abroad. No controversy is allowed in these messages, which contain simply the good news of the Gospel.

Of the happy results of these letters, testimony comes from the governors and chaplains of prisons, not infrequently from prisoners themselves, and often from unexpected quarters. A lady who has a large Bible-class for the working-men of the city in which she lives in the north of England, recently wrote as follows:—"A poor man came into my class on Sunday, ragged and not very respectable, but I was agreeably surprised to find that he responded to all I said on the subject of conversion most cordially. On my asking, 'How long is it since you knew conversion to be a real and true change of heart?' he replied promptly, 'Since I was in jail last Christmas, when the warder gave me a letter saying it was for me; I didn't believe it. No one writes to me when I am out of prison, and why should anyone do so when I am in jail? It was a wonderful letter,' he said; 'I always keep it in my pocket; would you like to see it?' and he showed me a dirty envelope with a soiled letter inside. It was a very simple letter telling the 'old, old story,' in the plainest language, but when I asked my friend to lend it to me he bluntly refused, saying, 'I can't; it helps me whenever I read it to myself, and I read it over and over again.'"

Miss Lloyd is always glad to learn of fresh openings for these letters at Christmas time, either in foreign prisons or at home, and also to welcome ladies and gentlemen willing to assist in this ministry by writing letters.

Friends who have followed with prayerful sympathy the work of the institutions in times gone by will learn with some concern of the present crisis through which Miss Lloyd and the Ladies' Association are passing. Finding the premises (so well known for many years as the central point of the missions) inconvenient for carrying on the work, it has been decided to sell the buildings, and thus set the Prison Mission free from the mortgage, as well as make a new departure for the benefit of the discharged women. This is according to the last wish of Mrs. Meredith. It has not been found possible to dispose of the premises up to the present; but the consent of the Charity Commissioners has been received, and efforts are now being made to realize the property, in order that premises may be acquired for the better carrying on of the work. The offices are now removed to 22, Albert Square, Clapham Road, S.W. Some laundry work is being continued for the older women. For the younger women other industries are promoted, including the making of felt slippers children's garments, hassocks, kneelers, and door mats.

Before the old premises were vacated large sums of money had to be spent on repairs, and this, with considerable outlay in other necessary directions, has brought about the present crisis. To meet current liabilities at least £300 is needed. Remembrance of the way in which the Lord's servants have come to the help of this cause in its time of need, inspires Miss Lloyd and her associates with the confidence that at this stage also practical sympathy will be shown by those who believe it to be the duty of the followers of Christ to seek the lost, and search diligently until they are found.

A Worker's Prayer.

Give me a word in season, Lord,
Dear Master straight from Thee;
Graven on heart and life and lip,
Let Thy royal mandates be.

Give me a word in season, Lord!
Such is my soul's request;
Speak through me to Thy troubled ones,
And let it be for rest.

Give me a word in season, Lord;
The tide of woe to still;
To point the sin-stained unto Thee,
And teach the meek Thy will.

Give me a word in season, Lord!
And grant Thy message may,
Be to Thy doubt-benighted ones,
The dawn of endless day.

Give me a word in season, Lord,
The precious golden seed;
That to Thy glory may redound,
In thought, and word, and deed.

Give me a word in season, Lord,
Glad chords of heaven's own psalm;
Sweet breaths from the enraptured air,
Of love's eternal balm.

A Scandinavian Evangelist.

PASTOR STORJOHANN, OF NORWAY.

MOST of the leaders in the Scandinavian revivals between 1850 and 1870 have entered into the joy of their Lord; but some veterans still remain, among them Pastor J. Storjohann, well known in other lands as well as at home. Born at Bergen in 1832, it was found necessary for the boy, when he reached the age of fourteen, to begin work in his father's shop. His training was thus of an entirely mercantile character till he reached his seventeenth year; but he looks back on these four years as being among the most useful in preparing him for his later pastoral work, especially on account of the knowledge of men, gained in the shop-life.

On account of his age, his studies, preparatory to entering the university, were pursued privately from 1849 to 1853. It was from deliberate personal choice, as well as with the consciousness of an inner call, that the future leader turned his attention to preparation for the Christian ministry; yet at the very beginning of his theological course a storm of doubt and scepticism seemed to overwhelm the young heart so lately overflowing with fervent and living faith. The earlier call had, however, been so clear that even in the darkness he went forward in obedience to it, though with a reservation that there could be no question of actual entrance to the ministry unless he had previously attained to a firm conviction of the inspiration and Divine authority of the Bible. The supposed contradictions of the four Gospels appeared to be specially alarming, and the mystery of the Atonement was another stumbling-block. Neglect of the reading of the Word of God and of prayer had really resulted in backsliding.

As a student Mr. Storjohann spent at Erlangen, in Bavaria, amid the most favourable surroundings, eighteen months out of his five and a half years of theological study. He also enjoyed at Christiania the thorough teaching of Professor Johnson and Professor Caspari, the latter being a converted Jew, whose lectures on the Old Testament did much to those Books throughout life his pupil's favourite study. The influence of Professor Von Hofmann on Mr. Storjohann was of a complex character. On one side a series of lectures on the Life of Christ saved the student for ever from the attack of criticism on the genuineness of the Gospels, by enabling him to gain a firm foothold in the Bible; but in 1857 a controversy broke out in Erlangen over a book—"A New Way of Teaching Old Truth"—in which Von Hofmann opposed the orthodox doctrine of the Atonement. At that time, in addition to the usual courses of lectures, Mr. Storjohann was allowed to join a private "conversatorium" at Von Hofmann's house, when the Bible proofs of the Atonement were considered. As the result student and professor arrived at opposite conclusions; and, freeing himself from Von Hofmann's influence, Mr. Storjohann was entirely convinced of the truth of the orthodox teaching on the great cardinal doctrines. Later in life he was enabled to oppose modern heterodox tendencies by publishing two books—"Neo-Evangelism," and "Atonement and Justification."

On leaving Erlangen Mr. Storjohann became headmaster of a large boys' school in Bergen; but he had not yet found his sphere, for in 1863 he felt impelled to make a lengthened visit to Scotland, in order to study the relations of church and school work, and to make his life choice between the two. Many scruples seemed at that time to bar his way into the ministerial office.

Advantage was taken of the opportunity for resuming theological study at the Edinburgh Free Church College, while at the same time careful inquiries pursued in many quarters laid the foundation of that knowledge of home and medical missions which was so useful in later life. By spending his Sundays at this period preaching to the Scandinavian sailors at Leith, Mr. Storjohann found his life work. His eyes had been opened to the spiritual needs of these fellow-countrymen, and after six months he removed to London to take for two months the services at the Swedish Ulrika Eleonora Church. Thereafter the Scandinavian residents at Leith announced their willingness to provide the salary of a Norwegian pastor for the ports on the Firth of Forth. This post Mr. Storjohann accepted, but a few months later resigned it to attend a foreign mission conference at Bergen. At that gathering he gave an address describing the medical mission in the Cowgate, Edinburgh. Through this, the young medical student, Borchgrevinck, received his call to become the first medical missionary of the Norwegian Church. He studied theology as well as medicine, and is now director of the Madagascar Mission.

In 1864 was founded the Society for the Preaching of the Gospel to Scandinavian Sailors in Foreign Ports. Mr. Storjohann was appointed secretary, and in two months he visited twenty-seven ports in order to open branches. No organization for Christian work has ever been received with greater enthusiasm in Norway. The sailor is the pet of the nation; so the Sailors' Mission developed with extraordinary rapidity. The Danes called it "Work for Northern Sailors," very properly including the Finlanders. It was found to be of immense advantage that the Lutheran form of Protestantism prevailed over all four countries; and that the similarity of the languages permitted the Finlanders to hold Swedish services as well, while Norwegians, Swedes, and Danes understand each other.

Mr. Storjohann was appointed in 1865 to the pastorate of St. Maria Church, Bergen. There it was necessary for him to preach in German every alternate Sunday, but thanks to his mercantile education he spoke the language like a native. At the same time he threw himself heart and soul into the home mission work which had just been begun in the town.

Systematic Christian effort among Scandinavian sailors in London was begun in 1868, and Mr. Storjohann was chosen to take charge. Reasons of health led in 1869 to a short visit to Constantinople, where there was a small church, built for the Legation, but unused. After his return, a year's labour was devoted to the sailors at Liverpool, as an outstation from London. The year 1871 saw the foundation-stone laid by King Oscar, of the Ebenezer Church at Commercial Docks, London, E.

At the end of 1872, Mr. Storjohann returned to his native land very much broken down through overwork. He undertook duty for the Lutheran Society; but in the autumn of the following year he was appointed chaplain of the corvette Nornen, then proceeding on a cruise to the ports of Spain. The three months spent on board not only restored the shattered nerves; but are still regarded by Pastor Storjohann as the flower of all his work. A gracious revival which had begun on board spread after the return of the ship to the naval port of Horten, through the testimony of the recently-converted men.

After the cruise in the Nornen, Pastor Storjohann became the first regularly-appointed clerical home missionary in Christiania. There for seven years he carried on a richly-blessed work, preaching in such places as hired dancing-saloons, as well as in churches. An effort which attracted much attention was the holding of brief services at seven factories every week, the proprietors allowing fifteen minutes of work time, and the workmen taking ten minutes off their dinner allowance. At Grünnerlökken the mission-hall Hauges Minde was built in 1874, and named after the great home missionary, Hans Nielsen Hauge, who died in the parish half a century before. The withdrawal after some time of the use of a large dancing-saloon led to the use for four years in different parts of the town of a large mission tent. Similar reasons led to the erection of another hall near the factories, called "Effata," while a third hall was built at Lilleströmmen, an hour by rail from Christiania.

A notable addition was made to the work at Hauges Minde in 1880 by the foundation of a school for those who at a more advanced age than usual desired to prepare for the ministry. A seminary was also founded in connection with the school to train ministers for Norwegians in America, and one set of students, numbering nineteen, went through a five years' course. When the United Norwegian Church was founded in America, Pastor Storjohann found that this branch of the teaching was no longer required. He has since devoted his attention to the original purpose, the number of students last reported being 142.

Having undertaken to make a journey round the world on behalf of the Santal Mission,

Pastor Storjohann proceeded in 1891 to India, to make himself personally acquainted with the work; and then travelled through China and Japan to America, enlisting the support of Scandinavians. The main object kept in view in this as in other journeyings was the preaching of the Gospel. Special attention was given to five States—Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Dakota—in which one-third of the Norwegian people now reside.

When teaching his students, Pastor Storjohann commenced the course of training with a study of the Psalms, against the background of David's life. His knowledge of the subject enabled him to propose new proof for the recognition of the genuineness of all the seventy-three Psalms ascribed to David. In 1896 he dealt in our columns with "the great fulfilment of David's prayer in the last Philistine war, and the Psalms referring to it;" and showed how the nineteen Psalms, of which Delitzsch had only recognised four as Davidic, fall into their places through taking into account one generally overlooked fact. We hope to publish in an early issue an article dealing with Psalms xl., lxxi., and lxix., the Davidic authorship of which has been often denied. Pastor Storjohann is the author of "King David, his Life and his Psalms;" and of a more popular book on the subject, published in Chicago while he was travelling round the world, which is about to be re-issued in Denmark.

In addition to his other labours, Pastor Storjohann acted from 1883 to 1890 as chaplain to the prison for women in Christiania. From 1890 to 1894 he was engaged in independent evangelistic work, and during the following five years he took charge of the country parish of Aas, resigning the latter position on the death of his wife in 1899. He added to his many travels by then undertaking a voyage to South America in the interests of the sailors; and by labouring in Bohemia among those who had seceded from the Church of Rome.

Since early days Pastor Storjohann's interest as a student has centred mainly in the Old Testament and its criticism. At the Scandinavian Home Missionary meeting at Copenhagen last summer he succeeded in inaugurating a Bible Union—to guard against "the higher criticism"—for the three northern lands, somewhat similar to the German "Bibelbund" and the English Bible League. He has also been lecturing in Sweden with the same object, and his words made a deep impression on crowds of listeners. The peace of faith was restored to many who had become infected with the writings of critics, and had thus had their minds unsettled.

Mr. F. S. Arnot.

MANY of our readers will be glad to know that Mr. F. S. Arnot hopes to return to Central Africa next spring. In a letter to us he asks for a prayerful interest in the work which has so long lain upon his heart. He says:—"The fallow fields are vast, and far beyond the reach and the capacity of the few missionaries at work there. Tribes visited by me as far back as 1883 and 1884, among whom some were found who pleaded for my return, are still untouched; they have not even been visited since. The sense of responsibility increases as the years go by to one of deep shame and reproach.

"My thoughts are not directed towards opening up new districts, but rather towards strengthening the hands of brethren and sisters now at work; and towards the native converts—some of whom give great promise of usefulness—that the few stations already established may become missionary centres."

In the Waldensian Valleys.

By Rev. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS, D.D.

FROM the roof of the beautiful cathedral of Milan, there is a magnificent view of the plain of Lombardy, and of the Alps which form its northern and western boundary. Looking in the direction of Turin, Monte Viso is seen; its snowy summit 10,000 feet in height, indicating the locality of the Waldensian Valleys. From Turin, the journey to La Tour can be accomplished in two hours.

La Tour is the centre from which most of the Waldensian Valleys radiate. Its sublime panorama is just now spread out before us. Save on one side, where its valley runs down to the plain of Lombardy, La Tour is encompassed with mountains. The nearer are conical hills, clothed with fir trees to their summits; over these other hills are seen, more stern and lofty; and over these again, others, range beyond range, whose irregular outlines rise here and there abruptly into sharp peaks, shut in to the west by the far heights of real Alps, commanding views both of Italy and France.

There is a solemn grandeur in the scene, and the impression which it makes, especially as viewed in the light of Waldensian history, is one never to be forgotten. Yet this is only one scene among many in the extraordinary maze of mountains, which constituted from the earliest times the home and hiding place of the "Israel of the Alps." Looking at this remote corner in the great mountain range dividing France from Italy, one seems to hear the words: "Take off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." For here, during long centuries, while, as Milton reminds us in his celebrated sonnet, "all our fathers worshipped stocks and stones," a pure and faithful Christian Church was preserved in existence. It burned in the fires of cruel and unceasing persecution, but was not consumed.

FAITH IN APOSTASY.

Here dwelt, in that marvellous burning bush, the presence of the great "I Am." Here walked the Son of God, amid the flames of the fiery furnace, with his faithful servants who refused to bow down to the idol image set up by the monarch of the modern Babylon. Here was composed, centuries before the time of Luther and Wickcliffe, that pure confession of faith which in its archaic language has come down to us as a priceless record, witnessing to the preservation of apostolic doctrine in the lonely valleys of the Alps throughout the darkest centuries of the mediæval apostasy. This labyrinth of mountains, whose highest summits are covered not unfrequently with the mantle of concealing clouds, formed the impregnable fastness in which God hid this remnant of His faithful saints during the Middle Ages, like Elijah hidden in the wilds of Judea by the brook Cherith from the relentless persecution of Ahab and Jezebel.

From their home on the mountains the Waldenses looked down on the plain of Lombardy and saw, glittering in the sunshine, the towers and palaces of Turin; while beyond their southern horizon, as they well knew, was Rome of the Seven Hills. The western heights of the Waldensian Alps commanded extensive views of France. There, comparatively near them, was the city of Lyons, plunged in superstition, and stained with the blood of martyrs.

Encompassed by the hostile armies of France on the one side, and Piedmont on the other, ready at any moment to carry out the cruel behests of implacable Rome, the little flock of the Waldenses, like a handful of sheep amid a host of wolves and lions, was decimated by slaughter again and again, but never completely destroyed; and here is that flock to-day, watched over by faithful pastors, keeping still the faith once delivered to the saints, and sending forth from its ancient fold missionaries to Italy, which so long and bitterly persecuted it, to lead its people into the paths of truth and salvation.

It was our privilege to attend the Sunday morning worship in the Waldensian Church of La Tour, and in the evening I addressed the large congregation there on the subject of Christian Missions. On the following day the first of the meetings of was held, the church being completely filled, including the galleries. Eight or nine hundred people were present. About fifty of the pastors and professors occupied the front seats, while three young men, candidates for ordination, were seated at the head of the central aisle in front of the pulpit.

The service was conducted in Italian, the hymns, the prayers, and the ordination address being eminently suited to the occasion. The subject of the address was the Christian Ministry, its text being taken from Peter's charge to the elders of the church, in 1 Pet. v. The three candidates, who had stood while answering questions and receiving the charge, knelt while the presiding minister addressed them by name; and as he laid his hands upon their heads, all the other ministers of the Synod stood in their places with upraised hands, as taking part in the ordination act. The presiding minister then gave to the three brethren thus ordained the hand of fellowship, and the kiss of brotherly recognition.

I felt as I stood there and witnessed it all that I had never seen a more touching and scriptural ordination service, and rejoiced that God had preserved so faithful a remnant of the early Church in these sequestered Alps. Would not the blessed Apostle who spoke of "joying and beholding your order and the stedfastness of your faith in Christ," have rejoiced in such a scene as this? I was interested to hear at the close of the service that two of the candidates thus ordained were converted Roman Catholics, and that all three had approved themselves, by their evangelistic labours and diligent studies, as men suited to the work of the Christian ministry.

A Prison-Palace.

IN the county of Culpepper, Virginia, U.S.A., in a street of the lower town, there stands a church. On this same ground more than a hundred years ago there stood a prison.

In this gaol in old Colonial days, a Baptist minister, James Ireland by name, was imprisoned for preaching the Gospel of Christ according to his own convictions, and not in accordance with the usages of the Church of the country as then by law established in America. Even while in gaol he would preach to the people from his barred windows, which overlooked the public thoroughfare. His enemies, in anger, made fires beneath the windows, and threw sulphur thereon to stifle the voice of this faithful witness; but this, like all other measures, failed to silence him.

Ireland wrote many letters from his prison cell, and dated them from "My Palace at Culpepper." There was a song he loved to sing, whose stirring tones rang out from centre to circumference of the great Colony, and to-day they are remembered by tens of thousands. It was from that hymn that he took his idea of a palace. Two verses of this grand old hymn are as follows:—

How tedious and useless the hours,
When Jesus no longer I see;
Sweet perfume, sweet birds, and sweet flowers,
Have all lost their sweetness to me.
The midsummer sun shines but dim,
The fields strive in vain to look gay;
But when I am happy in Him,
December's as pleasant as May.

Content with beholding His face,
My all to His pleasure resigned,
No changes of season or place
Could make any change in my mind.
While blest with a sense of His love,
A palace a toy would appear;
And prisons would Palaces prove,
If Jesus would dwell with me there.

The above story was told by Dr. H. M. Wharton, of America, at the City prayer-meeting on Monday week; and as many wished to see it in print, I thought it would prove interesting to my fellow-readers of our much valued paper, The Christian. Chas. Cook.

Evangelists in Council.

THE all-day Conference of Evangelists, held on Wednesday, September 23, at the Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A., was an occasion warmly welcomed by many for the consideration of the best methods of prosecuting the work of Evangelization.

The morning session was devoted almost entirely to prayer. It was a season of humiliation and confession, as well as of intercession for the unreached masses. Among those who voiced the deep longings of the assembly for a revival of God's work were Lord RADSTOCK and Mr. ALBERT A. HEAD.

In the course of a brief address, Mr. R. C. MORGAN, who presided, urged the necessity for closer study of the Bible, so that the evangelist, "eating the little book" (Rev. x. 10), may, like the householder (Matt. xiii. 52), "bring forth out of his treasure things new and old." Although we are in the centenary year of the Bible Society, and learn with satisfaction of millions of copies being circulated, and of translations into many languages and dialects, yet we need a deepening of interest in the precious Word of God. Those who rightly value and diligently ponder it, will never be at a loss for fresh and vivid discourses.

The usual Noon Prayer-Meeting was effectively utilized as a second session, when a large audience was addressed by Pastor R. WRIGHT HAY (Talbot Tabernacle, W.), who spoke on 1 Cor. xiii. The speaker reminded his hearers of the saying of Whitefield, that "he was prepared to preach, only when he had first preached to George Whitefield what he intended to say to the people"; and recalled the words of a minister who said, "Love envieth not; do I? Vaunteth not itself; do I? Is not puffed up; am I? Seeketh not her own; do I? Is not easily provoked; am I? Beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things; do I?" Dr. Cameron, of Boston, quoted the other day some striking words of Emerson's: "What you are speaks so loudly that I cannot hear what you say."

The afternoon was devoted to a consideration of "The recent Church Census in London, and its Lessons for Evangelists." Mr. M. H. HODDER occupied the chair.

The first speaker, Mr. W. R. LANE, suggested a few thoughts on the attitude of the Lord Jesus towards the crowds. The Lord's heart was always stirred with pity towards them. In Mathew's Gospel we have it thrice stated that he was moved with compassion (ix. 36, xiv. 14, xv. 32) for the multitudes. It was that love that brought Him from heaven, and that love was shown in His pity for every disheartened, tempted, beaten-down man. Yet sometimes he deliberately left the crowds. In Matt. iv. 25 we read that great multitudes followed Him, but He turns from them to his disciples, to whom He explains his purposes, and the work that lies before them, telling them: "Ye are the salt of the earth," and "Ye are the light of the world." In Matt. viii. 18, too, we see Him leaving the "great multitudes," and leading His workers from scenes of excitement that they may come to see the world's need as He sees it. "Give ye them to eat." Again our Lord sometimes isolated the individual: "If any man come to Me." In John vi. we read that He scattered the crowd. At the beginning a great multitude followed Him; but at the end only the twelve were left, and even to them He said, "Will ye also go away?" What scattered the people thus? Not His manner, not His voice, but His message. So may we be careful that if the people are offended and scattered it may be not by any want of tenderness on our part.

Dr. WHARTON, of Philadelphia, related an affecting story of a dying Christian visited by him during a mission. "I'm going Home," said the sick man, "but I'm going without winning a soul"; and he sent a warning message through Dr. Wharton to the meeting that night. Subsequently an aged negro servant, commonly called "Uncle John," entered the room to bid "good-bye" to the "mas'r." It was the last opportunity for the dying man, for "Uncle" was unconverted. A prayer for the negro's salvation was heard: after a few direct words he was pointed to the Saviour by the dying Christian, who could then say with joy, "Lord, let me come; I have won a soul."

Rev. WILSON CARLILE (Church Army) urged evangelists to manifest greater forbearance and sympathy for vicars and pastors who may be opposed to the work; and Mr. J. E. TAYLOR, of Aylesbury, told how, in making inquiries into the census in the Chelsea district, he elucidated the fact that where Christ was lifted up, there was the greatest attendance at the prayer-meetings. Mr. Taylor added a thoughtful word on the Lord Jesus leading his disciples through the cornfields on the Sabbath Day. We must see that we take the people of Divine truth. Only those who feed on the Word of God can have power with the masses.

The growth of new forces that keep people from the sanctuary was the subject of Mr. CHARLES COOK'S address. He pointed to the progress of socialism and the vast development of Sunday League excursions and amusements. Eight thousand bicyclists passed the Marble Arch before noon on one Lord's Day. Mr. Cook's remedy was twofold—(1) the extension of open-air work; (2) the opening of theatres and large popular halls "for bright, happy services for God and souls."

Mr. R. C. MORGAN showed that in other times, too, there were outdoor attractions which drew away the people, but affairs were altered when the true attraction was presented. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me." A London City missionary, whose special work it is to get into conversation with people and lead them to Christ, recently said that there are more people waiting to be spoken to, than there are workers to speak to them. Mr. Morgan likewise found encouragement in the large crowds attending popular missions of the character of that of Pastor Thomas Richardson, at Rotherhithe.

The veteran open-air missioner, Mr. BARRY WAKE, spoke of the comparative ease with which people are reached on race-courses. On Epsom Downs, or Doncaster Town Moor, "it seems as if the whole world were there." Mr. Wake suggested the formation of a "Society of Evangelists."

A hearty greeting was accorded to Rev. J. W. EWING, of Rye Lane Baptist Church, Peckham, who recently inaugurated a tent mission while his church was being re-decorated. Mr. Ewing said that he does not hold a pessimist view, for, despite the loosening of belief in Divine verities there is much that may work out a spiritual transformation. Difficulties there are, but they are the difficulties which have always confronted those who preach

SPIRITUAL TRUTH IN A MATERIAL WORLD.

Our hope lies in (1) The preaching of Christ and the Cross as the centre of ministry; (2) Having Him with us and realizing that it is our privilege to speak of Him whom we have learned to love. We need a spiritual revolution. Amid the multitudes there is frequently found a thirst for God, and those who have experienced the love of Christ will not be refused a hearing. "Let us seek a new anointing, so that by the power of the Gospel, in church or chapel, on race-course or at street-corner, souls may be won for the Lord Jesus Christ."

Among speakers who followed were Rev. J. O. WEST (St. Philip's, Bristol), who called for "great plainness of speech," both in regard to sin and the person and work of Christ; Dr. SCHOFIELD, who found it difficult to rely on regular places of worship for an evangelistic sermon, and so had often taken some young friends "to Charlie Cook's"; Rev. EDWARD ISAAC, with encouraging accounts of evangelism in New South Wales; and Rev. R. V. FAITHFULL DAVIES (Christian Evidence Society), whose final word was a call to earnest prayer pleading God's own promises. Mr. W. R. BRADLAUGH added a few words on the readiness of working-men to listen to intelligent presentation of Divine truth, and then a season of prayer closed a Conference which will doubtless be fragrant for many a day in the memories of those who were privileged to be present.

Salisbury Conference.

THIS annual Conference for the Deepening of the Spiritual Life was held last week in the Maundrel Hall, under the chairmanship of Rev. E. N. THWAITES.

In opening the Conference on Tuesday morning, the Chairman called attention to the promise contained in Matt. iii. 11: "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." The greatest need of the Church to-day is the baptism of the Holy Ghost. It is not natural for any of us to speak about religion; men are naturally cowards when it comes to mentioning anything in connection with that subject; but when Peter preached on the day of Pentecost 3,000 men fell on their faces, while they boldly, eagerly, publicly, inquired the way of salvation: "Men, brethren, what shall we do?" And this was the direct result of a few weak men being filled with the Holy Ghost. Dealing with three cases of the gift of the Holy Spirit in the Old Testament, he pointed out that Bezaleel had to help to beautify the tabernacle. And the Holy Spirit is still given for this purpose. The Christian has to do heavenly and holy work, he has to beautify the place where God is to dwell. Our bodies are His temples, and we must prepare Him a dwelling-place. There must be the "gold" of a holy life, the "silver" of a meek and quiet spirit, the "brass" of strength and vigour, and the cutting of "stones." We are to go to the stoniest hearts and cut them for Jesus.

THE NEED OF OUR TIME.

Again in Judges xv. 14, we have the gift of the Spirit to Samson, which illustrates the gift of the Spirit to the Christian for the service of overcoming. The Philistines are not dead, and Satan has always got his "new cords" ready to bind the children of God. How much we need, then, the power of the Spirit. Joining guilds and signing pledges may be tiny helps to some people, but what we all need most of all and in all is the Holy Ghost. "The Spirit of the Lord came upon Gideon, and he blew a trumpet" (Jud. vi. 34). This was his service. But are we all ready to do as much—the trumpet of rebuke? Think of the Sabbath-breaking, the drinking customs, the immoral novels; is it not high time that Christian people were baptised with the Holy Ghost to blow the trumpet against sin and worldliness of every sort?

The attendance was hardly up to the average at the first session of the Conference, but the speaking was of a high order and most helpful. Rev. GEORGE LITCHFIELD, of Pendeen, dealt with the question in Rom. vi. 1, "Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound?" If we were individually asked the question, we should answer as the Apostle did; but the answer of our lips may be quite different to the answer of our lives. And the answer of the life is the real answer. And if we are to get any blessing, this question of sin must be faced. For sin in the life limits the power of God in our work for the Lord. It is the abominable thing that He hates, and the thing that His wrath eternally burns against. But every Christian may escape from its bondage, for Christ not only died for sin, but unto sin, and all believers died with Him. Now, united to Him we are dead to sin, and sin therefore can no longer hold us in bondage. Christ, the living Christ, is strong enough, great enough to deal with our sins. God forbid then that we should continue in that which placed those wounds in His dear hands; that we should go on in that which nailed Him to the cross, and which makes us unfit to be channels of blessing to a lost world.

Mr. R. C. MORGAN followed with an address on Christian Testimony. Christ wants witnesses who eat up the little Book, the Word of God, who have life in them because they eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink His blood. There are hundreds who are praying to be filled with the Spirit, who pray in vain. They are not where God wants them. They could be Spirit-filled in China, or India, or in other of the uttermost parts of the earth; but not while they stay at home, for He gives His Holy Spirit to them that obey Him.

Rev. J. B. FIGGIS reminded the Conference of how the Lord divided Scripture into the Law, the Psalms, and the Prophets—the Law for correction, the Prophets for instruction, and the Psalms for comfort. God means His people to be happy, but happiness in the language of heaven is always spelled holiness.

How Psalm xxiii. grows! It begins with "I shall not want," and concludes with "My cup runneth over." John Fletcher, of Madeley, knew something of this, or he would not have cried out, "Hold, hold, Lord! or the earthen vessel will break." But how does the cup come to be full? The cup is full because the fountain is full. And why does the cup run over? In order that the people may get the benefit, the people for whom Christ died.

THE EXPERIENCES OF LIFE.

On Wednesday Rev. H. G. Thwaites spoke of the three experiences in Psa. lxiii. First, the soul seeking God, "O God, Thou art my God, early will I seek Thee." This Psalm is entitled, a "Psalm of David when he was in the wilderness." But it is important to remember that a wilderness is not a desert. In a desert there is nothing but waste ground, but a wilderness may have growth and natural beauty. But David felt that notwithstanding the abundance of growth and natural beauty and fruitfulness around him, he was not happy, because he was without God. Thus he sought Him. Secondly, there is a blessed change in the fifth verse, where the soul is satisfied with God. How true it is that God is great and generous, and gives abundantly. He satisfies the longing soul. And the third experience in this Psalm (v. 8) is the soul following after God, and leaning hard upon Him. May we have grace to keep Him in sight, and follow in His footsteps.

Rev. J. B. Figgis based a helpful address on a bit of personal experience. He told how John ii. 8 was given out one morning at Keswick, and how it had stuck to him ever since. No interpretation was given, and no interpretation was needed. "Draw out now, and bear unto the Governor of the feast." Many felt that grace had been given, the water had been turned into wine, and that the only right use of the grace was to use it for Him. Bear to the Governor—the grace is to be used. The pith of the passage is that we are to draw out for others; for we need an outlet, if we are to remain in enjoyment of blessing. What was Pentecost, but souls who got a glow and a light trom heaven, and carried it out to others? And what was the Evangelical Revival? It was that men made the rediscovery of the doctrine of justification by faith, and went out and told it. Give what you have, tell what you know; draw out, and bear to the needy and thirsty around you.

On Thursday, Rev. Walter Brown, Vicar of St. Silas', Birmingham, speaking on the subject of Consecration, said we all desire that there should be more of God in our lives, but first of all God must have more of us. Consecration is not power, but it is the channel through which the power of God will flow. It is the essential condition of success, and the secret of all happiness. When the burnt offering began, the song of the Lord began also.

Rev. W. Fuller-Gooch pointed out a slight but important alteration in Phil. iv. 13. "I can do all things in Him that strengtheneth me." Dr. Moule's rendering, too, is worth remembering: "I can do all things in Him who maketh me able." The Christian is never strong in himself. The word is not in the past tense, for God does not set us up with a stock of grace. Moment by moment He gives the grace we need, and makes us able to bear and work and do His will.

In connection with the great missionary meeting on the closing day of the Conference, it is interesting to note that at the Conference last year a young lady of some private means was led to offer herself to God for mission work abroad. The very day the Conference commenced this year she left England on the s.s. Hamburg to work for the Lord in China. Much prayer was offered that this devoted soul might be kept and used by the Holy Ghost to win many souls.

W. Munro Collings.

Dr. Campbell Morgan's Meetings.

AFTER the opening meetings of Monday, reported in our last issue, Dr. Campbell Morgan's audiences at Exeter Hall increased steadily as the week advanced. When Friday came, praise to God for blessing vouchsafed on the previous days was the keynote of the proceedings. As we have already stated, Dr. Morgan spoke on Monday afternoon on "The Study of the Divine Library"; on Tuesday and Wednesday he took a bird's-eye view of the New Testament, its general structure, and the particular value of each book; while Thursday was devoted specially to the First Epistle to the Corinthians, "The Epistle of the Church at work, or of the Church set in order, for the fulfilment of her true function."

Turning on Friday to the Epistle to the Ephesians, the book was shown to divide naturally into two parts—the Heavenly Calling of the Church, chapters i.-iii.; and its Earthly Conduct, iv.-vi.

OTHER-WORLDLINESS.

During recent years, said Dr. Morgan, we have been taunted with being other-worldly in our thinking and our preaching; but when the Church of Christ ceases to be other-worldly she will cease to have any power to touch this world. It is in proportion as the Church is conscious of her heavenly calling that she will so live and work here upon earth as to bring men to Jesus Christ. I am not one of those who think that the Church has nothing to say about municipal and national affairs; but I believe we must always say that in the power of the life Divine and of our heavenly calling, as realizing that we are here for the specific purpose of witnessing (1) to bring men to Christ, and (2) for the preparation of the world for His own coming and Kingdom.

It is the heavenly-minded people who know what earthly conduct ought to be. When we get to the second half of the Epistle we do not find people within monastery walls, or who have withdrawn themselves from the ordinary walk of life. We find husbands, wives, children, masters, and servants going about their ordinary walk with a heavenly light playing on their pathway.

The chapters of the first division were shown to deal, speaking generally, with predestination (i.), edification (ii.), vocation (iii.). Look at predestination in this sense—the purpose of God before the creation for the Church and about the Church. There is predestination to holiness of character; "the faithful in Christ Jesus" being equal to "those who live upon the principle of faith in Christ Jesus." Holiness is conformity to the character of Christ.

Edification is the building of the Church, the realizing in history of the great purpose of God, the unification of the individuals into a great community. Every member is God's workmanship, each one framed and fashioned by the Divine Workman, that each may fit into the final entity. The Church is not built yet. It is being built, it is in process of erection, of construction. The scaffolding is now all about it, and that is why we fail to see the lines of its beauty and glory. It is sad to think that, seeing this is a living organism, individual stones should get together and think they are the Church. That is the trouble of all sectarianism. The Church cannot be broken up. Presently out of the chaos and disorder the great and glorious unity will be realized and manifested.

The vocation of the Christian is to be the display of the unsearchable riches of Christ. In i. 3 is to be found the whole argument in brief. It is the declaration of the Apostle that God is to be blessed, and the God who is to be blessed is the God who has blessed us. The real calling of the Church is that it may be the means through which God should gain something that He cannot have apart from the Church.

God is the maker of the worlds of time as well as of the worlds of matter. His purpose is that to the ages to come the Church should be the messenger of the grace of God, as well as the instrument through which the unfallen intelligencies in the heavenly places should know the wisdom of God.

The earthly conduct of the Church: that is heaven. I get very tired of some people's idea of heaven. Heaven is to be service, a condition of such perfect conformity to Christ that we shall be able perfectly to serve God. The shadow of the Cross is on earth, but the light of the Cross is in heaven. The closing chapters are mainly concerned with how the Church should walk (iv.), conduct individual and in the household (v.), and the conflict that must ensue (vi.).

GOSPEL HARDENING.

At the closing meeting in the evening Dr. Morgan delivered a very striking address on the dangers of "Gospel Hardening," based on Hebrews iii. 12, 13. The Epistle is addressed to people familiar with the Oracles of God, familiar with revealed truth; and the writer addresses himself to the subject of the supremest peril that confronts men brought up within the sphere of the intellectual knowledge of the Gospel.

Men are hardly afraid of the thing described here. If it said, "lest ye become drunkards," or "lest ye become absolutely corrupt with impurity," there are some who would tremble; but when we read, "lest ye be hardened," there is hardly a man who blushes with shame or blanches with fear; yet there is no greater peril.

(1) The word "hardened" suggests a change, a process, and finally a condition. You cannot harden a stone; it is hard to begin with; and anything that is in danger of becoming hardened must have had a time when it was not hard. Every child is born open to receive outside impressions. What are the signs of this "softness"? You find faith, hope, and love in the heart of every child; and you can do something with a child.

The word "hardening" suggests not only a change, but a process; and because it is slow, insidious, subtle, men do not realize the peril of it. They pass into the state of being hardened, hardly knowing how it happened.

Then it suggests a condition, the reverse of "softness." Not only faith, but hope is gone; without God, without hope. Put it the other way, a man without hope is without God. The centre of it all is that love is dead, that man has put away tears and pity. He is a hard, keen, shrewd man of the world. He is so hard that when he listens to the prophet of the truth, he never trembles, though the prophet reasons of righteousness, temperance, and judgment.

(2) It is sin that hardens. What sin? The sin of unbelief, the sin which is in contrast to faith. Men ask if they are to be judged for their inability to believe, condemned because they are not able to believe. All such arguments show that the man does not know what belief is. Belief is not merely conviction of the truth of a thing; it is the conviction that issues in obedience to the truth. A man never believes anything except the thing which masters him, the thing which acts on him and to which he responds.

The faith that saves is not a correct intellectual grasp of the truth, but the abandonment of the whole life to the claim of the truth. No man was ever yet saved by his orthodoxy. Unbelief is the refusal to submit my whole life to the thing of which I am intellectually convinced, and that is the sin that hardens a man. The man who is saved is the man who ventures on Christ, risking the after life and everything else on Christ's lordship. Your besetting sin is not drink, but unbelief. If you would yield yourself to Christ, He would break the power of every sin on your life.

(3) What is the method of sin? How is it men are unbelievers? Here is the illuminative word, flashing its light back on every hardened soul. "The deceitfulness of sin."

Torrey-Alexander Mission.

THIRD WEEK IN LIVERPOOL.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

LOOKING back over the three weeks of this mission, one may trace the deepening and widening interest it has excited in all directions. There has been no flagging of interest from the first meeting, but, on the contrary, increasing crowds and fuller manifestations of Divine power. Nothing has been left undone that seemed likely to reach the non-church-goers, with the result that thousands of men and women who are never found among ordinary congregations have been attracted to the meetings, and many of them have professed to accept Christ as their Saviour.

MEETING FOR MINISTERS.

In some respects the most remarkable meeting of the week was that for ministers on Monday morning, when between two and three hundred clergymen and Nonconformist ministers listened to Dr. Torrey's heart-searching address on the "Character and Purpose of Christian Ministry." This meeting will never be forgotten by some who were present, and marks the beginning of a new era in the experience and work of many.

This week the afternoon meetings have assumed a different character. Instead of giving addresses especially to Christians, they have been made purely evangelistic.

On Wednesday afternoon the meeting was specially for young people, and the Hall was early besieged by eager boys and girls. So great was the throng that about 1,000 had to be taken to the Gymnasium for an overflow meeting. Mr. Alexander proved himself in the service of praise a perfect leader of a children's meeting, the bright young voices responding to his guidance with great spirit.

At the evening meeting a large part of the hall has again been reserved for men until a quarter to eight, and about 500 seats were reserved for shop-assistants, to whom special tickets were issued.

IN FACTORIES AND WORKSHOPS.

The dinner-hour meetings have also been attended with very great blessing. These have been conducted by local ministers, city missionaries, and others; and quite a number of men have professed conversion in their own workshops. Through these meetings many working men have been induced to attend the mission; and a dozen workmen in one engineering establishment have been led to the Saviour. Many interesting incidents are constantly coming to light. One evening last week a shop-assistant was converted, and next morning confessed her faith in the large business house in which she was employed; and so great was the interest awakened that when a lady worker entered the establishment the demand for special tickets was almost unanimous. On another evening a husband and wife, who had been long estranged, were present, and both, unknown to each other, came forward to indicate their acceptance of Jesus Christ; and having both found the Saviour, their estrangement was at an end.

Friday was set apart as a day of fasting and prayer, the first meeting being held at half-past ten in the morning, and was well attended, while many had gathered in their own homes at an earlier hour for special prayer.

The Gymnasium has been in use every night for overflow meetings, conducted by Mr. Wm. Trowell, of London, assisted by the Rev. Dr. Macphail, Rev. D. Mackay, and Mr. A. Armstrong. Many inquirers have been dealt with in the after-meetings.

The week has again shown the enormous power of the Gospel in song. Mr. Alexander is ever alert to seize every opportunity of reaching men's hearts thereby. On one day the children from the School for the Blind were present. He at once taught them to sing some of his most popular choruses; and there were few dry eyes in the hall as their fresh young voices sang, "There's not a friend like the lowly Jesus," and the refrain now so popular in Liverpool, "Never lose sight of Jesus."

Again and again, during the mission, the singing has been definitely blessed to the conversion of souls. Returning from one of the meetings, some young people were singing one of the songs, and as they passed a public-house, the publican said, "It is only a passing excitement." "Well," said one of his customers, "that may be, but I can't stand here drinking while my children are out there singing 'Never lose sight of Jesus'" He left his drink, went home, and next night was one of the first to come forward in the meeting to declare his acceptance of Christ; a non-churchgoer brought to Christ by the Gospel in song.

POWER AND BLESSING ON THE LORD'S DAY.

Sunday was a day of remarkable power. About 3,000 persons were present at the eight o'clock meeting for prayer, and Dr. Torrey's address on Bible Study was felt to be exceedingly helpful. The meeting for women was marked by intense interest and deep but controlled feeling. Even more densely packed was the evening meeting for men, and from its commencement were seen signs of unusual power. The song, "Tell mother I'll be there," produced a really wonderful effect, 150 men standing up before Dr. Torrey began to speak in response to an invitation for those to rise who had mothers in heaven, and meant to meet them there. Dr. Torrey then spoke from the "Importance of Confessing Christ," and at the close of his address about 400 men came forward for help,

HOW THE LOCAL WORKERS FEEL.

The following extracts from letters express the feelings of the local workers:—

"I could not describe to you the wonderful meetings, with the whole of that large hall packed every night, and at the close people flocking to the front to accept Jesus as their Saviour, convicted of sin and their need of Him. Truly the revival has begun, and one has the joy of not only sowing the seed, but reaping as well."

"Dr. Torrey's addresses are all on the warning side. Thousands of people are spell-bound, numbers come out to seek the Lord."

"The gatherings are splendid. Praise the Lord. He has given me a soul at each after meeting, two at some of them; just ripe souls, it is lovely to meet with them. . . ."

"You would rejoice to see what my eyes have seen in this mission. At the invitation of Dr. Torrey this afternoon, many came forward to the front seats—old and young. Dr. Torrey said that there was no time for a public confession, but a gentleman having told him that one lady had come to the meeting on purpose to confess Christ, the opportunity was allowed. A lady stood up with joy on her face and praised the Lord that He had saved her. As soon as she had finished, another lady whom I had noticed with a sad anxious face, stood up without any invitation, and with joy shining through her tears, praised God He had saved her also."

Protestant Truth Society.—The Lord's blessing on the work has been most marked during the past year, and I plead for the prayers and support of his people that greater things may be accomplished in His name May I call the attention of friends who value the open Bible to the Commemoration meetings in the great Memorial Hall, Ludgate Circus, E.C., on the first anniversary of my father's death, Thursday, October 8, at 3 and 7.30 p.m. The chair will be taken by Lord Kinnaird, and the speakers include Mr. J. W. D. Barron, J.P., Pastor Cuff, Rev. Henry Dening, Rev. C. T. Porter, D.D., Rev. F. S. Webster, M.A., Rev. Lindsay Young, M.A., and others. — J. A. KENSIT, 18, Paternoster Row, E.C.

The Bible League.—A two-days' conference, under the auspices of the Bible League, took place at Plymouth last week. The gatherings were largely attended, and productive of much local interest in the work of this organization. Addresses were given on many phases of Biblical criticism, and more than one of the speakers deplored the tendency of the age, which is seen in a curiosity to know how the Bible was written, at the cost of remaining ignorant of the contents of the Book. Among those who took part in the meetings were Revs. G. B. Berry, Dr. C. A. Hingston, W. Fuller Gooch, C. H. Waller, E. M. Bacon, James Douglas, and others. The addresses were practical and pointed, and strong in their assertion of the inspiration and infallibility of the Word of God.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

MOTHERWELL.

THE concluding meetings of the mission of Dr. J. Q. A. HENRY and Mr. T. ARMON JONES at Motherwell were well worthy of the effective commencement that had been made. The Motherwell Times says:—

"The Town Hall meetings have been continued each evening during the week with very large attendances, and at each accessions have been secured to the ranks of total abstainers. Dr. Henry's oratory has been throughout of the most forceful and fervid character; he draws from an apparently inexhaustible store of facts and arguments, all put in a most telling and convincing way, so that it is scarcely possible to listen without being influenced by his appeals and catching the spirit of his enthusiasm. The singing of Mr. Jones affords a treat of a different kind, and it is a genuine relief from the strained intensity excited by the orator to listen to the sweet strains of this wonderful singer, bringing unexpected meaning and pathos out of the simplest Gospel melodies.

"These evening meetings have been the principal, but there have been others besides. On Monday afternoon Mrs. Colville presided over a great assembly of women in the Christian Institute, at which both evangelists were present, and did their respective parts. On the same evening a crowd of workmen were arrested at the gate of Dalzell Steel Works by the eloquence of Dr. Henry, who took advantage of the brief opportunity to discharge a volley of tersely-put facts and arguments which must have lodged fruitful seeds of thought in the mind of many a listener.

"Then, on Tuesday evening at an earlier hour than the general meeting, over 1,000 school children assembled in the Town Hall and listened with close attention to both speaker and singer. By a show of hands it appeared that large numbers of the youthful audience had already signed the pledge, and numbers more availed themselves of the opportunity then given."

The mission closed with the popular lecture on "The Future of the Anglo-Saxon Race," in the course of which Dr. Henry again demonstrated the need for an unwavering attack on strong drink as the enemy of the race.

WISHAW.

A fortnight's Temperance mission, under the auspices of the local Temperance Council, has just been begun by Dr. Henry and Mr. T. Armon Jones in the town of Wishaw. On the Saturday a children's meeting was held, and on Sabbath there was an afternoon meeting in the Chalmers United Free Church, and an evening gathering in the parish church. The Sabbath meetings were very large, probably not less than 2,000 people altogether being present. Not for many years has such interest in Temperance work been manifested.

The addresses of Dr. Henry were magnificent, whether regarded from the standpoints of eloquence, of argument, of indictment of the liquor traffic, or of spiritual appeal. It is certainly marvellous how any one can work continuously at such high pressure. As a result of the meetings so far, over 280 pledges have been taken; but, apart from the number of pledges, addresses so logical, so searching, so Scriptural, so instinct with spiritual passion, appealing so continuously and powerfully to the moral sense of the people, must abide as a permanent force in the community on the side of temperance. The sacred songs of Mr. Armon Jones are not only an immense popular attraction, but a real spiritual force. The beginning has more than realized our expectations.

(Rev.) JOHN L. MCGREGOR,
Minister of Thornlie United Free Church.

A True Hero.

Hymn: Sacred Songs and Solos, No. 591.

IN the days when the children of Israel were preparing to return to their own land after the seventy years of captivity in Babylon, God raised up Ezra and Nehemiah to inspect the condition of Jerusalem and to rebuild its ruined wall. The Books written by these two men, which bear their names, are full of the most stirring incidents, showing how they fulfilled their errands in spite of their enemies' opposition.

Nehemiah in particular had a very difficult task, but by the grace and help of God he succeeded. He had a great gift of not only working himself but of getting other people to do their share; and if you read his Book you will find that all sorts of people came to his aid—goldsmiths, apothecaries, merchants, rulers, priests, and in the case of one man "he and his daughters"—the only people who are specially mentioned as not taking part in the work being "the nobles." So great and many were the obstacles their enemies put in their way, that "everyone with one of his hands wrought in the work and with the other hand held a weapon" with which to defend himself if necessary. One man, Baruch, is specially mentioned as working "earnestly"; and of another, Meshullam, some other interesting things are said; and it is of him I am now going to speak.

(1) He is mentioned among many others and was, as we might say, "one of a crowd"—an obscure man—but he rose out of his obscurity by the heartiness and thoroughness of his service. It was not a very dignified work to engage upon, this "repairing" of the wall, such as an ordinary bricklayer could do, but the work was dignified by the man. Perhaps you are tempted to neglect a task which is not what you "like best" to do. You prefer something easier or more genteel! But the boys or girls who are always ready to do what they are asked to do, whether it be great or small, pleasant or the reverse, are those who are always sought after and appreciated. Each of these volunteer workers had a portion of the wall allotted to him, and each did his best—not running about doing a bit here and a bit there, and getting in other people's way, but each doing his own to the best of his ability.

(2) Meshullam was, apparently, a poor man, with a one-room home (at least so we may gather from chap. iii. 30); but poverty to him was no disgrace, nor did he make it an excuse for neglecting his duty.

A person's position in the world depends not on what he has, but what he is; and each of us will be "remembered by what we have done." We may have high-sounding names, but it is the life that tells. As you go upon a railway journey, you do not care what sort of names the men had who laid the lines, but you care a great deal whether they laid them well or badly. Let us then, even if we are poor and humble folk, seek by God's grace so to act and speak and live that others will feel safe in following us, and that we may smooth the way of life that they will have to tread.

(3) Meshullam did his best. Having finished the first portion of work assigned to him (iii. 4), he undertook some more (30). He was not afraid to "work overtime"! Here are four good rules:—

Do not measure your duty

(a) By what you must do. (Do not ask "How little need I do?" but "What more can I do?")

Nor (b) by what others do.

Nor (c) by what you are expected to do.

Nor (d) by what you have already done.

In America they say of a lazy man, that he was "born tired," and I have known some boys and girls who seem as if the same were true of them. But if you follow out these rules and seek to do all you possibly can, no matter whether others do little or much, you will soon find yourself at the top of the class at school, and well forward on the road to success, whatever your later occupation may be, for men like Meshullam are the backbone of every nation.

(4) Meshullam did his duty well near home—"over against his chamber." There are many people, young and old, who show well among strangers and in "company," but who are very much the reverse with those who know them best. Others are fond of repairing other people's characters, but are not so careful to mend the gaps in their own. "Put first things first," and if it is true that "charity begins at home," you may be sure that true piety begins there, too; and I should look for a truer description of you from a brother or sister than from anyone who invites you to a party once a year.

But you must not run away with the idea that Meshullam had "an easy time of it." He had peculiar difficulties to face. I have already spoken of the enemies who hindered the work; but in his case the foes were "those of his own household."

Tobiah was the "leader of the opposition" (to use a Parliamentary phrase), and vi. 17, 18 tells us that his son had married Meshullam's daughter. It was therefore very difficult for Meshullam to oppose his daughter's father-in-law! But he did not allow either friendship or relationship to prevent his doing his duty honestly, fearlessly, and well. I am sure you have found how hard it is to be true to principles, and to resist temptations that come to you from friends or companions, but the grace of God can help you even in such times as these.

Meshullam died long, long ago; and the wall that he repaired has been destroyed again. But his character was so well formed that it has stood the test of ages; and he made a reputation for himself which still lives on. God help you, dear boys and girls, to build not only for time, but for eternity. Then it will be true of you, as it was of Meshullam and his fellow-workers:—"It came to pass that when all our enemies heard thereof, and all the heathen that were about us saw these things, they were much cast down in their own eyes; for they perceived that this work was wrought of our God" (vi. 16).

"A Boy at Fifteen: Before and After"—is the title of a shilling (net) book, by that unswerving friend of boys, Mr. B. McCall Barbour. It contains things that every lad ought to read and know. The period of early youth is beset with temptations and difficulties of a special kind, and parents or teachers could not do their young charges a greater kindness than to give them this book, and persuade them to read it. It is written delicately and earnestly, and should accomplish much. It may be obtained at this office.

Lessons from Abraham (Heb. xi. 8-19).

ABRAHAM obeyed! How much depends on obedience! Had he permanently refused to do as God's voice prompted, he would have sunk back into the obscurity of an unknown grave in the land of Ur, like many an Eastern sheikh before and since. At first, as his story goes, he met God's call with a mingled and partial obedience, and only after the death of his old father did all that he was bidden; but in mercy God's Spirit says nothing of the long delay, and only rejoices that at last he obeyed (Acts vii. 3, 4).

He was a true pilgrim (9); the earliest of the Pilgrim Fathers. Look at Gen. xii. "He departed" (4); "went forth" (5); "passed through" (6); "removed" (8); "journeyed" (9). We may live in the midst of the settled habitations of men, and yet really live the tent life. God's pilgrims are found in the midst of great cities and busy market places—distinguished only by their simpler dress, their girded loins, their restrained and abstemious appetite, their loose hold of gold, their indifference to the praise and blame of their fellows, their independence of the maxims and opinions of the world, and the far-away look which now and again gleams in their eyes, the certain evidence of affections centred, not on the transitory things of time, but on those eternal realities, which, lying behind the veil of the visible, are only revealed to faith. How can the estate of some country squire attract the scion of royalty who is passing along the railroad as fast as steam can carry him to assume the supremacy of a throne!

The Tent.—Abraham left Haran at the age of seventy-five, and died at the age of 175. He spent this intervening century moving to and fro, dwelling in a frail and flimsy tent, probably of dark camel's hair, like that of the Bedouin of the present day. And that tent was a befitting symbol of the spirit of his life. He held himself aloof from the people of the land; was among them, but not of them; would not take from the Canaanites even a thread or sandal-thong. Probably the suggestion that he should return to the land of his fathers may from time to time have suggested itself, but always put away, and at the end his body was carried out from a tent to lie beside Sarah's in Machpelah's Cave.

The City.—This was the explanation. He looked for the city. The tent life is the natural one for those who feel that their true home is beyond the stars. The one attraction which will overpower the fascination of the things of this world is the vision of that city. Let us often think of that city which John describes. Let us by faith consider its delights, its assemblies, its blessed immunity from the sorrows and sins of earth, until our hearts begin to glow. Let our heart be so moved that, like these ancient saints, we shall reach out our hands in loving desire and yearning, as when the traveller from the top of some commanding eminence beholds the scenes of his boyhood, and the site of his fathers' graves, and stretches out his arms towards them ("Greeted them from afar." v. 13, R.V.)

Resurrection out of Death.—Both Sarah and Abraham reckoned or counted on God. They did not think of their faith, but of God's faithfulness, and as they considered this attribute of His nature, their souls were constrained to count on Him, in absolute simplicity and peace. When God bade him offer up Isaac, he knew that it was impossible that Isaac should be permanently taken from him. Had not God said, "In Isaac shall thy seed be called?" Whatever, then, might befall, there was no hesitation in the father's heart, that Isaac and he would come again to the young men that waited for them at the foot of the ascent, and to Sarah in the tent. "We will come again to you" (Gen. xxii. 5).

When once you have received a promise, cling to it as a sailor to a spar amid a boiling sea. Reckon on God to show a way out of the most perplexing and agonizing combination of circumstances. Even if death itself should ensue, believe that the path lies through it to resurrection. F. B. M.

For the first time, a C.E. Convention will be held in Londonderry—October 6-8. Hitherto the Irish Conventions have been held in Belfast, Dublin, and Portadown. The speakers include Rev. W. Bainbridge, Rev. F. J. Horsefield, Rev. J. Tolefree Parr, Rev. Alexander Smellie, and Mr. W. Laird Cowdy.

Dr. Clark has issued an appeal to Endeavourers for "a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all together." He looks upon the approach of October as the opening of a new year of church work. After remarking that never before has the outlook been so bright for C. E. work, Dr. Clark says, "Our watchwords are, expansion, increase, advance. Last year has made these words not an empty sound, or merely a hopeful possibility, but an actual fact. Better still, it has shown us how to work, and what efforts count for the most. Fellow-Endeavourers, will you not consecrate yourselves to the best year of work we have ever known?"

God's Covenant with David (2 Sam. vii. 4-16).

Golden Text.—2 Sam. vii. 16.

JERUSALEM had been made the royal city; the "ark of the covenant," the visible symbol of Jehovah's presence among His people had been placed in a new tabernacle on Mount Zion (2 Sam. vi. 17; 1 Sam. iv. 3), and the public worship of God organized according to the Mosaic ritual (1 Chron. xv., xvi.) in the city of David by the king. The royal palace of cedar built, and the city enlarged, was prompted by love to God's law, devotion to His service, and gratitude for His mercies. His desire was to give of his substance in prosperity, to the honour and glory of God, and to lead his people to do the same.

King David's Purpose

The Lord's Greater Purpose.

Jehovah's plan had been manifested—Moses as a law-giver and leader; Joshua as a commander of the armies of Israel; judges, prophets, and priests each for their appointed service; David "to fight the battles of the Lord" (Ps. cxliv. 1), to be "ruler over Israel," to appoint Jerusalem the centre for the public worship of God (2 Chron. vi. 6); to enlarge and secure the bounds of Israel, and quell the surrounding enemies; his throne to be made more secure, and a dynasty formed. David to build a people, Solomon to build a temple in the Lord's time and way. While Israel was a pilgrim band, a tabernacle was the suitable place of worship for them. The Lord did not rebuke King David for dwelling in a palace of cedar, nor object to the proposed Temple (2 Chron. vi. 8), but the time and man did not fit into the Divine plan. The Lord commended the desire of David's heart (Psa. xxxvii. 4), and granted it, but through his son. He was allowed to gather the materials for the temple, and to train the builder (1 Kings ii. 1-3), meanwhile to worship before the "ark of the covenant" (1 Chron. xvi.).

The Sealed Covenant (Psa. lxxxix. 3, 20-37).

"Sworn by My holiness" (v. 35). "Everlasting covenant . . . the sure mercies of David" (Isa. lv. 3) were the pledges of good faith, fulfilled in the birth, death, and resurrection of the Lord Jesus. (Acts xiii. 32-34). David believed the promises (Psa. ii., lxxxix., xvi., cx). The new covenant (Heb. viii. 13, ix. 1-28). "Christ shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation" (Eph. ii. 12, 13)—"that time" and "now." Christ the King enthroned (Rev. xxi. 5, 7, 27).

The king went in and "sat before the Lord" (v. 18; Isa. lv. 8-11). Humbled, trustful, grateful, adoring. He laid his heart open to the Lord (v. 20), and claimed the promise given. If I come to Jesus will He receive me? (John vi. 37). If I pray, will He hear me? (John xiv. 13, 14; Matt. vii. 7). Will He give me all I desire—all I need? (Matt. vi. 32).

Special Points.

(1) God must have first and highest place in our lives if they are to glorify Him.

(2) "My servant" (5) must be willing to do My will, even if it upsets his plans. God is planning blessings for us if only we will get into line with Him.

(3) The carpenter and mason know what tools are suitable for certain work, and the artist knows which colours to use for the picture he wants to paint. Only the Lord knows what we each are fitted for, and how to get the best from us for His work.

(4) The shepherd lad (8) got "a great name"—warrior, musician, hymn-writer, king. God is always watching for boys and girls in their play and work, whom He can train for important missions.

(5) Do you want to do some great thing like David? Jesus is building a Temple, it is made of "lively stones" (1 Pet. ii. 4, 5). You are one if you trust in Jesus, and He will teach you how to bring others to Him (v. 4) that they may "have life" (John x. 10, 28).

GOD'S CONTINUAL GUIDANCE.

A meeting was recently held in Somerset, at which the oldest Baptist minister in the country spoke. Though ninety-seven years of age he remarked that his greatest and the sweetest privilege was to be able to read the Bible. He referred to the wonderful way God had led him through life, and added, that as he walked through the fields he looked around and thought it would do for heaven if there were no sin in the world. He realized that God had guided him even as David was led, "I took thee," said the Lord of hosts, "from the sheepcote, from following the sheep, to be ruler over My people, over Israel" (v. 8). God has as truly taken all of us and placed us in our present positions. Through life God has led us in a way He knew to be best, and whether we occupy posts of eminence, or are called to take humbler places, the Lord in His wisdom, has given us special work in our special spheres.

A GREAT AND GLORIOUS PROMISE.

It is said that on one occasion when Cæsar gave a very valuable present, the recipient of the gift replied that it was altogether too costly. The conqueror answered to the effect that it was not too great a present for Cæsar to give. Our God, who is a great King, delights to give us great blessings; just as in the lesson He promised to establish the kingdom of David's son, who should build a house for His name. "I will stablish," said the Lord, "the throne of his kingdom for ever. I will be his Father, and he shall be My son" (vv. 13, 14). God is to-day as willing to be a father to us, and we may be His sons, if we will but accept His gracious promises.

THE VERY BEST FOR GOD.

Emerson has written that every real gift to God should be a portion of ourselves. Therefore, the poet brings his poem, the shepherd his lamb, the farmer his corn, the miner his gem, and the painter his picture. Even the girl brings a handkerchief of her own weaving, which is right and pleasing to God. It is cold, lifeless work, added Emerson, when you go and buy something that does not represent your life and talents, but that of a goldsmith. The desire was in the heart of David to build a suitable house for the Lord, and though he was not permitted to accomplish that purpose, God, through His prophet Nathan, sent an appreciative word to him. The word of the Lord comes to each one to-day, My son give me thine heart; and when that has been done, we render ourselves, our substance, and our talents unreservedly to His service. Let us give the best to the Lord, and He will make our hearts His house and place of abiding.

A THANK-OFFERING TO THE LORD.

At the church of St. John's, Parramatta, Australia, there stand two remarkable Gothic towers, which were erected by the wife of an early governor. She vowed on her journey out that if God should preserve her in safety to the end of her voyage she would raise something to His glory which should resemble the church she last saw on leaving England. She sailed from the Thames, and the well-known towers called the Reculvers were the last she beheld on the Kentish coast. Consequently she presented similar towers to the church at Parramatta, and they testify to-day to the way in which she kept her vow. David, who had prospered under God's guidance, was anxious to express his gratitude; and though the Lord did not accept the gift, He commended the spirit which actuated the proposal. When we are debarred from certain service for God, He reads our hearts and appreciates our motives.

The Industrial Mission to the Jews.—This work—evangelistic, industrial, and medical—has been founded by Rev. S. J. Deutschberger, B.A., and temporary premises have been taken for it at 262, Commercial Road, E. Aiming to perform a distinctive ministry in a centre not touched by other missions, the superintendent hopes to do good and lasting work for Jewish inquirers and converts. The Mission will be directed by a competent and representative committee, and conducted on Gospel lines. The industrial department will, it is expected, become the mainstay of the work—in time self-supporting, and help to solve a problem presenting great difficulties to Jewish missions. It will give employment not only to converts, but to Jews, young and old, single or married, while they are studying the Word of God under the influence of Christian instruction. In a circular letter Mr. Deutschberger says: "We have already interviewed the heads and managers of several large city firms, and have received promises of employment. All we now want is friends to send us the necessary means to furnish the workshops with tools and other requirements. For this object we require at once about £500." Mr. Deutschberger's address is 266, Dalston Lane, N.E.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Mr. W. R. Lane at Hawick.

MR. W. R. LANE'S ten days' mission, which closed on Monday night, September 21, was all too short. He started his work on Saturday, the 12th. His opening word to the members won all hearts, and they determined to do all that in them lay to make the mission a success. The first nights the meetings were held in our own hall, when Mr. Lane spoke to good audiences with fervour, earnestness, and power, exposing with no bated breath the great evils of the day, and with tenderness and pathos seeking to urge the power of a loving Saviour as the one and only cure. The Sunday and Monday meetings were held in the Exchange Hall, when Mr. Lane spoke to between 1,600 and 1,700 people at each meeting. His visit to Hawick, we feel sure, has been a means of blessing to many. The sowing has been faithfully done by brother Lane, and we doubt not the reaping time will come. Jas. A. Kennedy, Corresponding Secretary.

Mr. C. E. Barraclough at Dundee.

Mr. Barraclough conducted the services in our large tent for twenty-four days with manifest tokens of the Lord's presence and blessing. The meetings grew in interest and numbers as the days went by, so that even on some week nights the tent was quite full. The evangelist put his whole heart and soul into the services, making it clear he knew and felt the power of the truth he preached. The addresses were clear, faithful, and full of expositions of Gospel truths; well fitted to awaken sinners, and to lead them to decision for Christ.

On the Saturday evenings Mr. Barraclough gave Gospel Temperance addresses, when he showed in a convincing manner the great evils of intemperance, giving some incidents in his own experience, which were most touching. We are sure good fruit will follow.

As to the results of this special effort, the great Day alone will declare, but we are assured of this, sinners were brought out of darkness into the marvellous light of the gospel, saints were quickened, and most helped on their way. Backsliders, too, were restored and brought again into the joy of God's salvation. The meeting of the last Sabbath evening will not soon be forgotten; many, all over the tent, were seeking the Lord, and the workers had the joy of directing them to the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world.—Peter Will, Hon. Sec., United Evangelistic Association and Tent Mission.

Work Among Soldiers.

A special effort was put forth by the Soldiers' Christian Association in connection with the recent Army manœuvres. A marquee, capable of seating 800 men, was erected at Petersfield, among the troops under the command of Sir John French. The usual provision was made for the comfort and convenience of the men, and on the first evening in camp upwards of 800 letters were written and posted.

On the Sunday preceding the "declaration of war" four services were held in the marquee, three of which were conducted by the Chaplain-General, Bishop Taylor Smith.

The closing service was one of great interest. Addresses were given by Colonel Granville Smith (who presided), the Chaplain-General, Rev. Mr. Falkner, and Mr. Burrow (General Secretary of the Soldiers' Christian Association).

It was estimated that 1,000 men heard the Gospel on this occasion, and the utmost interest was manifested. Many officers were present at each service, and the band of the Manchester Regiment led the singing at the parade service, which was attended by several staff officers. During the day 2,000 copies of the New Testament were distributed to the troops, besides a great number of booklets and tracts.

In Norfolk Villages.

In the course of some interesting notes of his recent Gospel-car work in Norfolk, Rev. Jesse Mayo (who is sent forth by the National Free Church Council), says:—"I have had some splendid open-air services. Many have heard and apparently appreciated the Gospel message. This was noticeably the case at Lynn, Swaffham, Castleacre and Martham. The ministers and leading Nonconformists have stood by me nobly, and have evidenced Christian unity by standing in the open air shoulder to shoulder. Confidence won, it is easy for meetings to be arranged in the various chapels night by night, as for instance at Martham, where I have just finished. A fortnight since I began, an utter stranger, except by name, but at once arrangements were made that I should preach at one service for each of the ministers, and in each of the chapels as the nights went by. The result was that fifty persons professed to decide, and Christians are meeting for service together as they have not done hitherto." Mr. Mayo pleads for an extension of open-air work and urges that the Free Church Council should receive greater encouragement in order that this desired end should be attained.

Mr. Charles Mellor has conducted a mission in connection with the Church of England at Little Heath, Potter's Bar. A gracious blessing rested upon the preaching of the Word. Many believers were quickened into a deeper and more active Christian life, and many of the unsaved were brought to Christ.

Mr. H. Stafford Smith, since his return from America, has been conducting missions in Somersetshire. Many have professed to accept Christ, and believers have been greatly helped and blessed. For dates for missions, he may be addressed, care of the Evangelization Society, 21, Surrey Street, Strand, W.C.

Mr. Wm. Collard writes of the recent meetings of the Racecourse Mission at Totnes, Devon: In the town large numbers gathered to hear the Gospel, and many were in tears. On the second day, as I was distributing Gospels, a mother stopped me and told me that the previous year she took one home, and her son (who was then leading a rough life), found it, read it, and it led to his conversion. The people on the course stood in crowds and listened to the wonderful story of Him who hath power on earth to forgive sins.

Mr. S. Levermore has concluded his mission at Londonderry with a lecture which was listened to with attention by a large and appreciative audience. Rev. D. G. Millar said that it was as a messenger of peace that Mr. Levermore would live in their minds and hearts. When they thought of the past fortnight and its spiritual repasts they felt that they were parting with one of their best friends. Mr. Millar cordially recognised the services of Mr. J. H. Dunlop in organizing the mission.

For the past five months local friends have been holding open-air services at Hastings. Last September a young man who had been brought up as a Ritualist and was about to enter the Roman Catholic Church was brought to the Lord, and this summer he has been able to testify in the meetings of the keeping power of Christ. Many visitors belonging to the Lord have had an opportunity of witnessing for Christ, any Christians visiting the town during the autumn and winter will find the open-air work still carried on, not on the beach, but in the Queen's Road. W. C.

The tent mission held during the summer months by Mr. H. Pout, of the Evangelization Society, in villages of Marsh Gibbon, Launton, Blackthorn, Charndon, and Piddington, Oxon, has been a time of great blessing. Many have been led to see a beauty in Jesus, and to accept Him as their Saviour. One case was that of one who had tried several times in his own strength to overcome a besetting sin that would soon have ruined body and soul; he was pointed to the Lord Jesus, whom he took as his Saviour. The mission was a very blessed one. To God be all the praise. J. Sulston.

A mission, conducted by Messrs. Wm. Olney and F. Spencer Johnson, has just been concluded at Earlsfield Baptist Church. From Sunday, September 20, when the mission began, up till the close, on the 24th, the services were marked by wonderful power and blessing. Over 100 decision cards were taken by those over twelve years of age, while large numbers of letters, written by younger children, gave evidence of intelligent decision for Christ. The clear, urgent, winning appeals of Mr. Olney, and the sweet singing of Mr. Johnson, will long be remembered, and we have every confidence that permanent blessing will result from their united efforts. We are heartily grateful to God for sending these honoured brethren amongst us.

Arthur J. Payne, Pastor.

The two Baptist Churches of Haslingden have just held a united mission, which has been conducted by Rev. F. C. Spurr. Both churches have worked heartily together, thus showing their unity in Christ and in Christian service. The meetings have been well attended, the church being nearly full night after night. Mr. Spurr has shown himself to be not simply an evangelist, but also a teacher of the deep things of God. Many have decided for Christ, though we believe the greatest results of the mission are yet to come. The fruit of the mission has not by any means been limited to the Baptists; for members of all the churches in the town have spoken of the blessing received. A special feature of the mission has been the men's services. At each service there would be about 800 men, and the straight, manly addresses given by Mr. Spurr won the men's hearts. We are sorry we had not arranged a month's mission instead of a fortnight's. Joseph Fox.

We should like to sound a note of praise for blessing received, at Ayr Races, during the visit of Messrs. Rayner, Alexander, and Christenson, of the Open-Air Mission. Meetings were held on the racecourse during the day, and also each evening in one of the principal thoroughfares. As the message of salvation was told forth clearly and faithfully in speech and song, the Holy Spirit was present in convincing and converting power. The last night especially was a hallowed season, and God's servants had the joy of pointing out the way of salvation to seeking souls. Tracts and booklets were most willingly accepted, and we pray that the good seed so plentifully sown may yield an abundant harvest to the praise and glory of God. The missioners words were blessed to many hearers, and if in the providence of God these friends should ever visit Ayr again, a right hearty welcome awaits them. A Worker.

Obituary.

MR. CHRISTOPHER FIDLER.

THE late Mr. Christopher Fidler was brought to the knowledge of God in the wonderful revival which visited Kerry in 1861, and so deep was the work of the Spirit and the truth in his mind, that from first to last his one absorbing interest and labour in the world was to lead others to Christ, and help Christians to serve their Lord faithfully. His zeal, energy, and sympathy were remarkable, I might say phenomenal. He had many opportunities of personal work while acting as house steward at Ardfert Abbey to the late Mr. Talbot Crosbie, and often would find means, always respectfully and with a winning manner, to speak of Christ to the guests in the house, the servants who came and went, and his Roman Catholic friends and neighbours around.

One of his greatest interests was what he called his Evangelists' Help Fund, which he started in 1873, and maintained for thirty years, till the present month in which he died. More than £1,860 passed through his hands, as the contributions of those who had means, to the evangelists of the three kingdoms, especially for their times of need, sickness, or trouble. This loving ministry brought him into correspondence with a large number of God's servants, both givers and recipients, and many a time the letters he received bore grateful testimony that his prayers for guidance as to the proper destination of his remittances were heard and answered.

Christopher Fidler was, true to his name, a bearer of Christ, a standard bearer, and a cross bearer. His life was an epistle of Christ, his words a gospel of Christ, and as one associated with him for many years I can testify to his abundant labours, and ever ready help in all that concerned the welfare of the children of God or the spread of the glad tidings "among all people." G. F. Trench.

MRS. L. D. FOOKS.

A life of strenuous endeavour and activity in the cause of Christ reached its earthly close at Bromley (Kent), on August 31, when Mrs. Laura D. Fooks entered into rest. Though weak and suffering in recent years, she maintained her interest in all enterprises for the spread of the Gospel; and even in declining bodily strength her spirit of personal devotion continued to kindle and quicken faith and love in others.

Mrs. Fooks was the sister of the late Mrs. Grattan Guinness, and shared with other members of the Fitzgerald family the gifts of intellectual power and persuasive eloquence in the advocacy of spiritual causes. Friends in many parts witnessed to the power of her platform and pulpit work in the seventies. About this time, too, her ready pen was enlisted in the service of the Gospel, her contributions to The Christian being marked by earnestness and graciousness, which were characteristic.

A new phase of service was opened at Worthing in connection with a Christian Home of Rest "Rutherford Lodge" became widely known, not only for the quiet it afforded to the tired, but more especially for its holiness, testimony, and its ministry to the edification of the Lord's people. Men and women of influence in many spheres have voluntarily borne testimony to the power and efficacy of the Word of God as it was ministered by His handmaiden.

But it was not only to cultured and spiritual people that Mrs. Fooks bore a message; the outcast and unfortunate among women called forth her sympathy and help. Till many a midnight and after, the streets of Worthing have been scoured by this lady, along with fellow-workers, in quest of the lost and wandering.

A helpful work, too, among men of the "tramp" class soon grew to such dimensions that a new building, "The Travellers' Rest," had been erected, with accommodation for over sixty guests. This institution was carried on with much blessing until there came the outbreak of typhoid fever in Worthing, when these well-appointed premises were requisitioned as a temporary hospital. Letters are extant from many of the men, confessing how much they owed to Mrs. Fooks for new hopes and new courage, for advice and more tangible help. Her such timely aid and sympathy are more than justified by the life-stories of subsequent well-doing which came to light.

Among other enterprises which she inaugurated, was a new work among cabmen and others at Eastbourne, whither Mrs. Fooks removed some nine years ago. To the end, the blessing of God and the power of the Holy Spirit continued to be manifested in the labours of this whole-hearted worker.

PREBENDARY L. BORRETT WHITE.

The death of Rev. Dr. Lewis Borrett White, rector of St. Mary Aldermary, E.C., and prebendary of St. Paul's, removes a prominent figure from the ranks of Evangelical clergymen. His connection with the parish was both honourable and long. His appointment dated back to 1858, and no church in the City was more faithfully served than was St. Mary Aldermary under his ministry. With it are combined the benefices of St. Thomas Apostle and St. John, Walbrook, whose churches were destroyed in the fire, and St. Antholin, whose church was demolished in 1874. The total population of the four parishes was latterly about 350, but the rector and his family maintained a keen parochial organization, a large Sunday-school, a lending library, and the like, and his collection for the Hospital Sunday Fund was invariably a large one.

In addition to his parochial work, Dr. White ably fulfilled the duties of secretary of the Colonial and Continental Church Society from 1863 to 1876, when he became a secretary of the Religious Tract Society, to which beneficent organization he was largely drawn by his keen interest in Protestant movements on the Continent. In this position, of course, he combined heartily with Evangelical Churchmen and Nonconformists in the preparation and dissemination of Gospel literature, and he earned the gratitude and esteem of the many missionaries who were helped in their work by the society's gifts and subsidies. Dr. White was appointed rural dean of West City in 1882, and received the prebendal stall of Islington from Dr. Temple in 1896. His wide sympathies and long experience in connection with important bodies, such as the committee of the Church Missionary Society, added to the respect in which he was held by all who came into contact with him.

Personalia.

Mr. Charles Gallety, who has had, on account of nervous prostration and otherwise, to resign his position in the Evangelization Society, will be glad to have all letters addressed to him, Gowanbrae, Stirling, N.B.

Mr. Ebenezer Norton (eldest son of Mr. Albert Norton, director of the Boys' Christian Home, Dhond, India), is en route to join his father's work in the industrial department. For this purpose he has worked his way through agricultural and engineering courses in Cornell University, U.S.A. It says something for his persevering and independent spirit that he also worked his passage to London on a cattle transport ship. There are about 400 rescued famine boys in the Home at Dhond.

Rev. James M. Gray, D.D., of Boston, is going out, this autumn and winter, under the auspices of the Evangelistic Committee of the Presbyterian Church, to conduct conferences for the quickening of an interest in the study and exposition of the English Bible. He solicits the prayers of all God's people on behalf of himself and the ministers and churches with which he may be associated. He believes this coming year will witness a marked revival of the work of the Holy Spirit throughout the United States.

Plague in India.—Rev. Isaac F. Row of the Anglo-Indian Evangelization Society, who has met with much encouragement during his recent mission tours in India, writes: "India has been favoured with good rains, but the plague is still with us, and threatens to be worse this year than ever; I visited Mhow, and found the native city almost depleted; a great many had died, and many thousands had fled from the place panic-stricken. This dreadful pestilence has been a fearful scourge, and the end is not yet."

Blindness and Acute Suffering.

An Old Man, 74 years of age, blind through cancer in the eyes, which is now spreading all over the face. In addition to this sad affliction he is also suffering from an internal disease. He and his aged wife are greatly in need of assistance, as apart from the little their married children are able to give them they have nothing at all to depend on except charity. Who will help to make their old age free from anxiety? Surely pain and blindness are terrible enough without poverty.

The National Blind Relief Society.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Hon. Sec., Rev. J. PULLEIN THOMPSON, The Vicarage, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W.; or at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

THE BALAGHAT MISSION, INDIA.

Founder and Superintendent, Mr. J. LAMPARD.

In the recently opened Station in the town of Balaghat there is much promise of blessing. English and Native congregations have been gathered in regular services, but the work is much hindered by the lack of a suitable building for these and other meetings which could be arranged. It is therefore proposed to erect a church as soon as the necessary funds are forthcoming. For this about £100 will be required, and a similar sum is urgently needed. for the general purposes of the Mission.

Donations and enquiries may be addressed to the Hon Sec., Miss Field, 10, Lancaster Road, West Norwood, London; or to the Office of "The Christian."

THE RAILWAY MISSION . . AND ITS . . CONVALESCENT HOMES.

ABOUT 15,000 RAILWAY MEN are injured every year in the United Kingdom by accidents on the line.

Many of these men suffer amputation of one or more limbs, and after discharge from Hospital require nourishing food and fresh air to restore their strength.

THE RAILWAY MISSION CONVALESCENT HOMES at St. Leonard's and Southport provide for the men in their time of weakness.

The Homes urgently need funds. Contributions will be gratefully received by Richard Nixon, Secretary, 1, Adam Street, Strand, London, W.C., who will send collecting boxes in which thank-offerings for journeying mercies may be put for the Homes.

which is a union of 46 Protestant Societies in Great Britain, Ireland, Australia, Canada, and Ceylon, earnestly appeals for immediate generous financial aid for the maintenance and extension of its pioneer work.

Papers explaining the importance of the Federation's operations will be sent to any applicant, and large or small contributions will be thankfully acknowledged.

QUEEN ANNE'S GATE,

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

This Society continues to Spread the Word of God in the homes of the people, and never found a more open door, but funds are much needed to extend the Work.

Contributions will be thankfully received at the Offices, 27, Lower Pembroke Street, Dublin; or 9, Paternoster Row, London; and at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

REV. J. O GAGE DOUGHERTY, M.A.,
Secretary and Treasurer.

A Challenge that Must be Accepted Within 14 Days.

A NOBLE pile of buildings, to be known as the Victoria Hall, in a most central position in Deptford, is to be dedicated to the service of God on Thursday, October 15th.

The block comprises a great Hall for Evangelistic Services, containing nearly 2,000 free seats, a Children's Hall seating 700, and seventeen large Class Rooms.

The premises are specially designed for the preaching of the Gospel to the poor, for work among the children and young people, and for all kinds of social and redemptive enterprises.

The cost of the buildings with the site is £26,000. Only £4,000 remains to be raised to open the Hall without debt, and towards this sum a friend has promised £1,000 if £3,000 is secured before or on the day of opening.

Towards this sum I want the readers of The Christian, many of whom are so deeply interested in the evangelization of London, to give us £1,500 in the following way:—

2	Friends	Contributing	£100	=	£200

> "He will not fail thee nor forsake thee until thou hast finished all the work for the service of the House of the Lord."
> 2 Chron. xxviii. 20.

The people at Deptford cannot give money, but they are giving time and strength, sympathy and prayer. This is one of the prayers heard a few nights ago: "Lord touch my lips that I may pray aright. We want this money for Your house. We want Your house to be nicer than the devil's houses. You do not want Your house to be in debt, so please send us this £3,000 and a little over."

The Superintendent of this new Mission is the Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, 58, Lewisham Park, London, S.E., to whom cheques and postal orders should be sent before October 15th.

J. Gregory Mantle

Scottish Notes.

STRONG testimony was borne at Piershill Barracks recently to the decrease of drunkenness in the Army. The occasion was the formation of a branch Royal Army Temperance Association among the 17th Lancers; and the commanding officer (Major B. P. Portal) declared that during his experience of eighteen years the percentage of cases of drunkenness in the regiment had extraordinarily decreased.

In an address given a few days ago to the Dundee Home Mission Union, Rev. Dr. James Wells said he declined to write reprobation over any human brow. No man could read the New Testament with insight and sympathy so long as he despaired of the salvation of any human being. Speaking of missionary methods, he said Christ's great method was individualizing. The only satisfactory solution of social problems he had seen was by those who did not say anything about them. Nowadays a great number of social reformers wished to save men in the mass; Christ's method was to save them one by one. A great many would first alter the surroundings of the people. That seemed plausible, but there was one thing against it, and that was the history of the Christian Church during nineteen centuries. While sympathizing with all legislative efforts to brighten and bless the lot of their fellow-men, wishing Godspeed to every such effort, and, as they had opportunity, helping them, they were called upon as Christ's disciples to be specialists. What they needed most of all was to concentrate upon the relation of man to God, and if they did that the narrower they were the more Catholic they became. Dr. C. M. Grant said that as a result of the work of the Union there was really no portion of the city of any large extent that was not allotted to some Christian agency, and in large parts of it every family was statedly visited.

It is interesting to have impressions of a careful observer on the conditions of religious effort. Speaking at Wishaw a few days ago on the subject of church accommodation, Rev. Dr. George Robson said that much travelling about since his appointment as Moderator of the United Free Church had given him exceptional opportunities of observing the conceptions and operations that were shaping the life of the Church, and whether in the crowded city or in the rural district he had been impressed with the earnestness with which the changed conditions of the times were being studied, and with the readiness with which the obligations created by those changing conditions were being faced and met. It would be too much to say that the problem everywhere had been successfully solved, but some things were clear, and this particularly, that while the public worship of God must always remain the central element in the life of the Church, and while the preaching of the Word must always remain the central instrument in the work of the Church, these must not stand alone. Besides the work that aimed directly at the spiritual, there was temperance and social work to be carried on, with special reference to children, young people, and adults. He did not think that a congregation that was situated in a populous centre was adequately fulfilling the requirements of the present time, if it was not in point of fact a perfect hive of Christian activity, influencing the community, and attracting along these various lines to the one great interest, which is Jesus Christ.

Daily Scripture Questions for Adults.—These are simple questions in easy language, intended for those who, for want of time, are not able to undertake real Bible study, or are too diffident to express what they know in words. The papers are issued monthly, and are admirably adapted for use in connection with Bible classes, mother's meetings, and in district visiting. The Scripture Union, upon which the questions are based, is that used by the Y.M.C.A., Y.W.C.A., C.P.A., and many other associations. The course begins on October 12. Specimens may be had free on application to Miss G. St. B. Holland, Winchester House, Lyndhurst, Hants.

Bible-burning in Fiji.—It will be remembered that a public burning of Bibles took place in Fiji, at the beginning of the year, reference to which was made in all the leading papers at the time. The Roman Catholic authorities denied that they had any share in the business, either directly or by instigation. But the Commission appointed by the Methodist Conference of New South Wales to inquire into the matter declares that the Roman priests were responsible for the whole thing. Under their direction the people brought their Bibles and received rosaries in exchange for them. Many of the Bibles were torn up and burned by the priests themselves. Reliable witnesses testify to these facts. There is no reasonable doubt that the priests did all that was originally charged against them. No one need be surprised at that. Bible burning and heretic burning are consecrated methods of attack upon Evangelical truth by priests.

The Churches.

Church of England.

Preaching in aid of the Diocese of Manchester Twentieth Century Million Shillings Loan Fund, Rev. Canon Garton pointed out that the diocese contains over 3,000,000 people, and about 800 clergymen, and that there should, therefore, be no difficulty in raising the required sum. The object was to form a fund for loans to assist in the purchase of sites and the erection of churches, and to paying off existing debts on buildings already erected.

St. John's, Woolwich, has, until quite recently, been for many years—like all the other three Woolwich parishes—in High Church hands. The new vicar, Rev. George Forrester Watson, has little sympathy with Ritualism. Instead of daily services, which it was found no one could be induced to attend, spends his time and energy in diligent visitation. He has gathered around him forty magazine distributors, who visit as far as possible every house in the parish, the population of which is about 8,000; and as he has arranged a monthly meeting for them at the vicarage he and his curates are kept in touch with the whole parish.

Bishop Cassels gives in The Gleaner for October a striking account of the first martyr among the converts he has been the instrument of bringing into the Church. He concludes his story as follows: "The old man Chieh was from the first a diligent worker, and several of his fellow-villagers were brought in through his efforts; later on he was glad to find definite work as a Bible-seller. . . He escaped the dangers of 1900, and the Boxer outbreak of last summer in this Province found him still at his work. He faced a district infested with the Boxers, was seized and led before the leader. The old man was offered his life if he would promise not to preach in that Name or to sell Christian books again. But he refused. They then killed him, and, it is said, cut him to pieces."

The Bishop of Hereford, speaking a few days ago at a working men's meeting, referred to the evils of drinking and betting. He said that the more he listened to the evidence before the House of Lords' Committee, of which he was a member, the more it was brought home to him what a craze and a folly gambling and betting were. He knew of nothing which had folly written upon it so distinctly. Why could not men seek wholesome pleasure instead of filling the pockets of bookmaker and tipster? The sporting newspaper with its list of sporting prices did more mischief than anything else, and he wondered how it was that respectable newspapers descended to employ sporting prophets. As for drunkenness it is one of the greatest sins of English life.

Congregational.

Rev. E. J. Dukes has completed one year's pastorate at Hawley Road Church, Kentish Town. The whole of the premises have been renovated and restored.

Rev. Stanley J. Cox has resigned the charge of Sutherland Chapel, Walworth, having been accepted for service in India in connection with the London Missionary Society.

Millfield Church, Peterborough, has issued a notice cautioning persons attending weddings from throwing confetti, &c., about the building or its approaches.

The new hall which was opened last month at Southwick, Sussex, is already well attended, and there is great promise of progress. This new work is an extension of the church at Shoreham.

A circular addressed to the subscribers to the Countess of Huntingdon's College, Cheshunt, states that the annual meeting is fixed for Tuesday, October 6, at 7 p.m., at Union Chapel, Islington. "It will be a meeting of almost momentous importance. The very existence of the College trembles in the balance."

Rev. T. H. Cooper has just celebrated the second anniversary of his settlement at Mount Pleasant Church, Hastings. Revs. A. J. Palmer, A. T. Saville, and others took part. In response to the pastor's invitation the friends at Mount Pleasant have contributed the sum of £4 5s. to help the Primitive Methodists to repair the damage caused to their premises by the recent storm.

A new building capable of seating some 700 people has been opened at Magdalen Road, Norwich. Congregational work and worship has been carried on in this large working class suburb since 1892, when a corrugated iron building was erected, mainly through the efforts of the late Mr. J. J. Colman, M.P. Since the pastorate of Rev. H. Kenward in 1899, this has become quite inadequate, and after the removal of the debt on the old building a fund was started for the new building. The total cost of the scheme is about £6,000, of which £1,000 is still to be secured. Amongst those participating in the opening services were Revs. J. M. Gibbon, J. D. Jones, Dr. John Brown, C. Silvester Horne, and Dr. G. S. Barrett and Mr. G. White, M.P.

Baptist.

The church at Newhaven started less than two years ago, and has made progress that has warranted it in inviting a pastor to take up the work. Mr. Arthur J. Stanton (Pastors' College) having accepted the position, recognition services have been held, conducted by Principal A. McCaig.

On Thursday, September 24, the first of a series of special monthly services was held at the East London Tabernacle. The preacher was Rev. Charles Brown, of Hornsey, and his inspiring and helpful words were much appreciated by the large congregation that had assembled to hear him.

At a reunion recently held at Devonshire Square Chapel, N. (Rev. G. P. McKay), several of the officers reported upon various phases of the church's work, the winter campaign having been entered upon with renewed vigour. On Sunday, September 27, a week's convention for the deepening of spiritual life was commenced by Rev. Geo. C. Grubb and the pastor.

Rev. Dr. McLaren, in a letter to Rev. Dr. Cuyler, which has just been published in the American papers, says:—"We are greatly secularized in this country, and need the winnowing fan in all our churches. I fear it is not much better with you. Many a time I am ready to thank God, when I see the deadness in the churches and the awful problems to be faced, that I am nearer the end than the beginning of my course."

Dr. Wharton, of Philadelphia, U.S.A., has been preaching for Dr. Dixon at Maze Pond Church, Old Kent Road, S.E. He was an effective helper of D. L. Moody in the campaign at the World's Exposition at Chicago, and has conducted revival meetings in nearly every large city in the States. Great congregations gathered at both services, and especially in the evening, when the church was crowded to the doors; and Dr. Wharton's stirring addresses made a deep impression.

Extensive alterations have been made in Fuller Chapel, Kettering, and the premises. The total cost is £4,000, of which £3,500 have been promised by members of the congregation since last November. A spirit of the utmost cordiality and generosity has permeated the effort from the start. At the reopening services the pastor (Rev. Henry Davis) preached morning and evening. The chapel was filled in the morning, and at night, long before the time for service, was crowded to excess, very many being unable to get in.

Calls (accepted).—Rev. S. Jones, of Twickenham, to Bury St. Edmunds; Rev. D. Walker, of Belle Isle, N., to Carey Hall, Leicester; Rev. J. N. Britton, of Lincoln, to Albemarle Church, Scarborough.

Methodist.

An extended leave of absence is being allowed to Rev. F. W. Macdonald at the request of the Bible Society. He will spend a fortnight in Ceylon, and may visit several of the Indian stations.

The annual report of the Wesleyan London Mission has been issued. The main facts are:—"Nine branches, twenty-two ministers, twenty-five lay agents, seventy Sisters, forty buildings, 10,000 members. Over 20,000 gather in London mission buildings every Sunday."

Sir Christopher Furness, M.P., has expressed the wish to present to each of the Free Methodist ministers at home and abroad some books which will help them in their ministry. Lists have been prepared from which each minister is invited to select. The gift will involve about one thousand volumes.

Mr. R. W. Perks, who was one of the speakers at the opening of the Wesleyan Central Hall at Birmingham, said he was glad, as one of the treasurers of the Twentieth Century Fund, to know that the building was not only an example of the generosity, faith, and enterprise of the Methodist citizens of Birmingham, but was the first of fifteen or twenty such halls, the cost of which was to be partly paid out of that great Fund. They were a glorious outcome of the new Methodism: but he hoped that in breaking down the old traditions and iron regulations in regard to an itinerant ministry and family pew the Central Halls would still be centres of the old evangelistic fire and preaching power.

Presbyterian.

Rev. W. W. Duncan, for the past three years assistant at Regent Square Church, has been ordained to the pastorate at Worcester. He was introduced to the congregation by Rev. Alex. Connell.

Rev. George Samuel's resignation of his charge at Tow Law has been regretfully accepted by the Durham Presbytery. Mr. Samuel, though a comparatively young man, was stricken a few years ago with paralysis, but until finally incapacited he continued to minister to a devoted congregation.

The congregation of St. Columba's, Smithdown Gate, Liverpool, of which Rev. J. Hope Scott is minister, are starting their winter's work under promising conditions. A new organ has been built, and structural alterations made in the church, while the grounds round the buildings have been tastefully laid out, and new and attractive entrances opened up.

Society of Friends.

Harry R. Keates has visited the following meetings in Darlington Monthly Meeting, viz.:—Bishop Auckland, Shildon, Close House, Darlington, and Stockton, where he has had acceptable service. He was also at West Hartlepool in connection with the annual meeting of the Christian Endeavour Society.

Mr. William Forbes, the evangelist and preacher especially to theatrical employees, visited Brighton on Sunday, the 20th inst. He held three good open-air meetings and spoke at that centre of Christian usefulness, the Carlton Hill Mission Hall, which is under the superintendence of Mr. J. J. Jones, who has laboured in the slums of Brighton for nearly forty years.

In connection with the Railway Mission at Bury St. Edmunds, the friends interested recently re-opened their enlarged hall and a new schoolroom adjoining. The chair was taken by Col. O. H. Oakes, and addresses were given by Mr. R. Nixon and Rev. A. J. Brown. Only three years had elapsed since the hall was built, but enlargement was found necessary, as many had to be turned away on Sunday evenings through lack of room. A Sunday school has been started, seventy-two children gathering in the new room desiring to have their names entered on the roll book. Mr. C. Wickerson preached in the hall morning and evening, and addressed the newly-formed school, and also the men's Bible-class.

The Rising Tide. The public mind is at last being stirred to action concerning the state of affairs in Macedonia. The letter of the Prime Minister has stung a multitude of people into indignant protest against the policy of laissez-faire which the Foreign Office has apparently adopted. The St. James's Hall meeting, so thoroughly representative of all classes, admirably voiced the sentiments of the best people in the nation. The agitation must continue until this country discharges its obligations towards the people it is pledged by treaty to protect. It is now or never. If the Sultan of Turkey obtains his way this time, the case will be absolutely hopeless; indeed, there will soon be no Macedonia to protect. The fear of European complications would practically disappear, if the Powers insist upon the appointment of a Christian governor for Macedonia, who shall be responsible alone to them. But to leave the work of "reform" to Turkey, is to ask the lion kindly to look after the interests of the lamb. History tell us what that has always meant.

The Two Paracletes. "I will send you another Comforter"—another Paraclete. "We have an Advocate—a Paraclete—with the Father."

Our blest Redeemer ere He breathed
His tender, last farewell,
A Guide, a Comforter, bequeathed
With us to dwell.

A paraclete is one called to speak on behalf of another. Our Great High Priest, our Advocate, our Paraclete, Jesus, the Son of God, has passed through the heavens, has entered the highest heaven, the immediate presence of God, where He ever liveth to make intercession for us. And He has sent the other Paraclete, the Holy Spirit, to speak to us on behalf of our God; to be our Comforter; to take the things of Christ and show them unto us; to bring all things to our remembrance which He spake when on earth; to show us things to come; to tell us in writing, through the Apostles, those truths of which Jesus had said, "I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now."

"The Proportion of the Faith." We cannot consider too attentively the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit—Him Who is, and Who was, and Who is to come; the seven Spirits which are before His throne; and Jesus Christ the faithful Witness, the Firstborn from the dead, and the Prince of the kings of the earth. But we may consider either too exclusively, and therefore disproportionately. This would lead to an unbalanced mind, whether in the teachers or the taught. Thus we may have unscriptural views of the Fatherhood of God; we may, in our thinking, shift the centre of gravity from the atoning death of our Lord Jesus to His incarnation; or we may be so occupied with His death for us as to overlook the work of the Spirit in us. Or again, we may cast the High-priestly ministry of our Paraclete in heaven into shadow, while we exclusively emphasize the gracious and mighty ministry of the indwelling Spirit on earth. Or again, we may expect that the consummation of this age will be the conversion and regeneration of the world by the Church, under the operation of the Holy Spirit, instead of the return in glory of Christ as King. The foundation of every error that takes root is some truth perverted, or held out of its proportion with other truths.

Secularized Life. The Manchester Guardian reproduces part of a letter addressed by Dr. Maclaren to Dr. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, in which he says:—

We are greatly secularized in this country, and need the winnowing fan in all our churches. Many a time I am ready to thank God, when I see the deadness of the churches and the awful problems to be faced, that I am nearer the end than the beginning of my course.

Of the secularization there can be, unhappily, no doubt. That is exactly what is the matter with us. But it has not come about, as one suggested the other day, because "men are more thoughtful than they were, and through the teachings of science the universe has become more real to them." Evolution would have had no power to lower men's ideals and to secularize them, had there first been a firm experience of spiritual realities. Men do not renounce a vital experience for a risky hypothesis. The truth is that secular science, and the growth of practical materialism have just revealed the real secular soul that existed all the time. Only a true spiritual life can resist the invasion of the secular spirit.

The Revival of Spirituality. Dr. Watson's article on the "Next Revival," to which we referred last week, has very naturally provoked a great deal of criticism. This free criticism will help to prevent the mischief the article would otherwise have done. It is really much easier to enlist people on behalf of enterprises which touch the surface of life and show immediate results, than it is to get them to penetrate to the heart of things and deal with causes. It is the latter that the next revival must emphasize. Indeed, this is the essence of every religious revival the world has ever known. It is not strictly a revival at all when some of the dismal surface effects of sin are removed from sight. The true revival begins within, and works to the circumference. The thing to pray for first of all is a spiritual conception of the causes of evil, and of the Divine cure for it. And whoever does that, will find that the Spirit of God guides him, as He has always guided His people, to declare those eternal verities concerning sin and salvation which are at the heart of the only Gospel capable of saving men.

The Real Presence. An advertisement appears in the Catholic Times making an appeal for donations towards a Romanist chapel for Southwold. It states:—

The Catholics of Southwold, for 300 years deprived of the Real Presence, have now the Blessed Sacrament amongst them again, but have no home for their Dear Lord.

Another announcement of the kind states that "Tooting is spiritually destitute," and it promises that those who send small donations for a chapel shall be interceded for by "Our Lady of Good Counsel, and by St. Anthony." How far removed is this miserable limitation of the presence of Jesus from the precious promises of the risen Lord, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. xxviii. 20), and "Where two or three are gathered together in My Name, there am I in the midst of them!" (Matt. xviii. 20).

Continental Schools and Engagements. Miss Vincent and Miss Hubbard, of the Girls' Friendly Society, call attention to the fact that at this time of the year parents are sending children to Continental schools, and that many young English governesses are taking appointments in various countries of Europe. Admitting that there are many good and safe schools on the Continent, and that many foreign families who seek governesses are everything that could be desired, Misses Vincent and Hubbard point out the great dangers that exist, and the sad results which frequently spring from the want of the fullest information, there being many schools of such bad character that it is shocking to find them supported by the steady supply of English scholars, and all kinds of false engagements recommended by English agencies to governesses.

The Society in question will, therefore, verify the particulars of all schools and engagements of the kind upon application being made to the secretaries, at 8, Holbein Place, Sloane Square, London. The warning certainly is an emphatic one.

Dreaming and Prophesying. There is nothing more serious than for a man to stand up in the name of God, as one of the prophets of God, and yet to retail his own dreamings as if they were the truth of God. Most serious of all is it when these dreamings, by promising men life, offer the vision of peace when there is no peace (Ezek. xiv. 16, 23). With the utmost regret we have to say that such ill-balanced sermons as that recently delivered by Mr. Campbell upon the Fate of the Impenitent partake of the nature of dreaming rather than of prophesying. More than once Mr. Campbell has quoted certain hopeful lines of Tennyson as if they possessed Divine authority. The Scripture certainly emphasizes the truth that God will yet be all in all, and that His purposes will be fulfilled; but this is a very different thing from teaching that eventually all will find their way back to Him. Mr. Campbell is earnest and means well, but we are convinced that his "larger hope" teaching does not repose upon a "Thus saith the Lord," and that its tendency is to make men yet more indifferent towards the claims of Christ now. It has been abundantly demonstrated that teachers of the so-called "larger hope" have rarely been passionate soul-winners, and their congregations have rarely been renowned for spirituality.

The Needed Apologetic. We have frequently remarked upon the folly, grown all too common, of Christian teachers consenting to eliminate much of the supernatural from their faith, hoping thereby to gain Rationalists and others. They gain nobody by making such unwarranted concessions, while it is quite certain that they lose their own power of leverage. A fresh illustration of this is found in an article in the current Nineteenth Century. The author of "Supernatural Religion" again enters the lists against the Faith of the Gospel, and scores heavily, not in his direct attacks upon the Faith, but in his attack upon the impoverished Christianity which is left when concessionists have done with it. The apologetic needed is one that can respect history, and can show that the great truths of our faith are not imaginative, but substantial facts. This has been done, and it can be done again. "We have not followed cunningly-devised fables," but realities.

Poison of Asps. The Daily News has pleaded strongly for a police prosecution in the case of a recently issued novel, the writer of which claims the object of teaching humanity "some of the lessons which life is ever-striving to teach it." Of this book a critic has said that "it is a study of lust, raw, fierce, blinding, with all the conventional disguises removed." We trust, therefore, that our contemporary's plea will not be disregarded, for certainly the time has fully come for a definition of the boundary beyond which decadent writers must not go with impunity. Many modern works of fiction are of a demoralizing type, at best pagan, and calculated to create sympathy with evil; and the circulating libraries, the free public libraries, and the railway bookstalls, spread the poison broadcast. More than once in these Notes attention has been drawn to the risk to young men and maidens of access to much of the miscalled "light literature;" and to-day it is more than ever incumbent upon parents who would secure the moral and spiritual welfare of their sons and daughters to watch carefully the books and papers which they read.

Looking at the facts. Mr. J. A. Steuart, the novelist, to whom we are indebted for some searching pictures of social life, speaking to a congregation in Dundee on Sunday week, said some of the plainest things his audience ever heard upon the Church and the drink traffic. He declared, and we fully agree with him, that despite all our efforts in temperance work, the Church is not yet awake to the "insidious, subtle, all-pervading influence of the drink traffic." One suggestion he made we should like to see carried out, i.e., that Christian people should go and see for themselves how men and women, made in the likeness and image of God, and meant to minister to His glory, are preparing for the gaol, the penitentiary, and the gallows. The awful facts of drink are known to the majority at second or third hand only, and so their frightfulness is largely unrealised. We cannot conceive how any person could remain even moderately moved over the matter, if once he beheld with his eyes the horrors involved.

A Word of Warning. A recent letter on Colour Prejudice from the pen of Mr. Alfred Webb, of Dublin, based upon a recent magisterial decision that a licensed publican is not bound to serve a coloured customer, is far from pleasant reading, for Mr. Webb calls attention to a lower tone which is being developed in our national views of slavery, or, as the writer puts it, "the benumbment of national sense in modern times in England." Mr. Webb says that if slavery now existed in the West Indies efforts might be made for its inspection, or even for its regulation, but that it would be found more difficult to abolish it than it was seventy years ago. He remarks:—

> My belief is that unless we at home rouse ourselves, and insist that home conceptions of liberty and right be applied to India and elsewhere, Anglo-Indian ideas of liberty and right and respect for human beings as human beings will more and more, to our detriment, shame, and degradation, come to prevail in these islands.

A Lesson in Socialism. Preaching before the Trades' Union Congress at Leicester recently, Rev. Lewis Donaldson pointed out that the term "the brotherhood of man" now forms part of the stock-in-trade of every public speaker, and of the cant of every worldly man:—

> People that know little that is good, and practise even less, will reiterate that they believe not in priests and creeds, but in the brotherhood of man. Underneath the specious phraseology of this cant lurks the silent but large assumption that the brotherhood of man is the easiest and simplest matter in the world, whereas it is, in fact, the hardest of all things to realise and fulfil. For brotherhood comes, not by nature, but by grace. The natural man as such lives unto himself . . . Here is the root and power of every sin, that self may be gratified . . . It is, therefore, true to say that every personal sin is purchased at the literal cost of the brotherhood of man.

The true basis of the real brotherhood of man can, therefore, only be in holiness of life. "My brethren are these which hear the Word of God, and do it" (Luke viii. 21).

THE UNVEILING.

EXPOSITION OF SYMBOLS.

MANY friends have kindly written in response to the request for contributions to the attempt to compile a glossary or dictionary of the symbols employed in the visions of the Revelation. But our correspondents have for the most part confined themselves to interpretations of the book rather than to the explanation of the symbols.

Some think that the visions are almost entirely literal and only in a slight degree symbolic. Another urges that the whole book relates to the Jews, and that "the churches" are not Christian congregations but Jewish synagogues, and that the epistles of chh. ii., iii., as well as the subsequent visions, relate to the future, and not to the present. It is not our purpose at present to deal with interpretations of the visions, but with explanation of the symbols. If a message be written in cypher, the key to the cypher must be found before the message can be understood.

One friend asks us to explain the verse which locates Jesus in the Tabernacle? In ch. i. 12, 13, John says, "I turned to see the voice which spake with me, and having turned I saw seven golden candlesticks, and in the midst of the candlesticks one like unto a son of man."

It is understood by all commentators that the reference is to the seven-branched candlestick of Exod. xxv. 32, which was in the Tabernacle, and as Jesus walked in the midst of the candlesticks He was necessarily, in the vision, seen in the Tabernacle (or the Temple). This first vision, with the explanation that the seven candlesticks are, or represent, the seven churches, is suggested to be the key to the symbolism.

SYMBOLS IN REVELATION V., VI.

A roll written on both sides, and closely sealed with seven seals.—The roll of Ezekiel (ii.) was also written on both sides—as complete in itself, leaving no room for any change or addition. The roll of Ezekiel and of John each contained a prophecy of coming events; revelations and messages from God to men.

The Lion of the tribe of Judah.—Jesus, the Son of God and Son of man. The lion is the most royal and most powerful of beasts (Gen. xlix. 9). Judah—praise (Gen. xxix. 35; cp. xlix. 8, with Rom. ii. 28, 29, and Rev. v. 9, 10).

A Lamb as it had been slain.—"The seer had been told of a lion, and he beholds a lamb, emblem of patience and innocence; and a lamb too which had been sacrificed" (Milligan). The diminutive is used, Arnion—a little lamb. See 1 Sam. vii. 9. Power lies in sacrifice. See Hab. ii. 9; Heb. ii. 14. Only the Lamb could be worthy to break the seals, for He was slain for us men, to whom the contents relate.

The Horses and their Riders.—The horse and his rider form one composite conception in the vision; (cp. Exod. xv. 1). The horse is a type (amongst other qualities) of human strength, energy, and speed (Est. viii. 10; Zech. i. 8).

First Seal opened. The White Horse.—White is the colour of peace. In Zech. vi. 4, 5, the four chariots and horses are the four spirits of the heavens which go forth from presenting themselves before the Lord of all the earth.

He that sat thereon.—The Gospel of Peace personified, which is the Gospel of "Jesus Christ and Him crucified," "Jesus and the Resurrection."

A Bow.—His bow was made quite bare (Hab. iii. 9). Thine arrows are sharp in the hearts of the King's enemies (Psa. xlv. 4, 5).

Conquering and to conquer.—Only of God, and His Christ, and His Gospel, can it be said, "And to Conquer."

The Second Seal. A Red Horse. . . . To take peace from the earth. . . . A great sword.—War, bloodshed, persecution. Jesus said, "I came not to send peace on the earth, but a sword" (Matt. x. 34-36; xxiv. 7, 8). True in the individual soul; in the family; among the nations.

The Third Seal. A Black Horse. He that sat thereon had a pair of balances in his hand.—Scarcity, famine. Food by weight and measure.

The Fourth Seal. A Pale [livid] Horse. The fourth part of the earth.—Pestilence. The palish green of terror and of death. Death and Hades each personified.

Souls under the altar.—The souls of those who, as to their bodies, had been slain by reason of their faithful testimony (cp. Matt. xxiv. 9). How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost Thou not . . . avenge, &c.—"It is not that saints in Paradise desire vengeance; it is the voice of their blood crying from the ground [like that of Abel], and rising into the ears of a righteous Judge, who cannot suffer iniquity and cruelty to triumph, as now, for ever" (Vaughan).

The Sixth Seal. A great earthquake. . . . Mountains and rocks, fall on us, &c.—As the days of Noah and of Lot anticipated the days of the Son of man (Luke xvii. 26-30) so such events as the fall of Pagan Rome, the destruction of Jerusalem, &c., point onward to the end, which the Seer contemplates in this vision. "The most striking features of earlier prophecy are combined here—Isa. ii. 19; xxxiv. 4; l. 3; Ezek. xxxii. 7, 8; Hos. x. 8; Joel ii. 30; Nah. i. 6."

Our Missionary Supplement.

OUR readers will perceive that missionaries abroad are much interested in the purpose and work of the Missionary Association as described in this week's Special Supplement. Twelve hundred of them have registered their names as members, in the belief and expectation of receiving spiritual encouragement and Christian, brotherly sympathy in their isolated positions, and often trying experiences. The present issue will be sent to stations representing many thousands of workers; and it is also desired to send out considerable supplies of Christian literature. In order to give effect to these intentions, the co-operation of the friends of missionaries is essential, and it is hoped that sufficient funds will be supplied to enable the Association adequately to fulfil the hopes of the missionaries who have written so cordially in acceptance of the proffered aid.

The Glory at the Appearing—1.

By Rev. G. P. McKAY.

THE story of Pandora's Box is mythical; but it contains a germ of truth regarding human kind. When sin had forced the precious casket with which Eve was entrusted, the fair contents fled, like singing birds escaping from their cage, except that God, in His great mercy, did not let the faculty of Hope depart. "Hope springs eternal in the human breast," and there, through all the generations, has she sung her song, "'Tis better on before!"

Of course, within the natural man, this bird can only sing of earthly things; but with the spiritual man the case is different. To him, living for the world to come, Hope chants its lays on that. Its outlook ends not with the present life; it stretches far o'er realms beyond, and "hope of glory" fills the ravished heart. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. But God hath revealed them unto us by His Spirit."

It may be true that some have dwelt so much on the future life that they forget their duty toward the present; but the number of such idle dreamers must be small. The effect of a right conception of the joys to come must ever be to cleanse the heart, and fire the soul, in face of present sin and suffering. "Every man that hath this hope in Him purifieth himself." Patience is born of hope, and courage also; for "hope maketh not ashamed"; and surely he who has the brightest hopes regarding "things to come," will know best how to use the things around.

Some may have made mistake in seeking too much detail of the joys prepared for them that love the Lord; for often such a search has led to foolish fancies, and "things that neither are, nor were, nor e'er can be," have been discovered. Yet thoughtful, reverent, students can have nought to fear. "The secret things belong unto the Lord our God," and what He hath kept within His own ken must ever be respected. 'Tis only "fools rush in where angels fear to tread." "But the things which are revealed are for us and for our children." The knowledge of them is our present right, our privilege, and our duty too.

Now of those "things which are revealed," the Certainty of Glory for the saints of God, is one; the Time of the Bestowal of that glory, is another; and some great Features of the Glory are, if we mistake not, also brought to view.

I.—AS TO ITS CERTAINTY.

The assurance of such glory has been the burden of the promises received by holy men from the beginning, and on its certainty have they relied. "The God of glory appeared unto our father Abraham," and it was at His call the patriarch came forth; it was also because of absolute dependence on His word that he and those who followed him "all died in faith." Whatever dreams they may have had at first of earthly joys, as the fulfilment of the promises, these all vanished when their end drew near; and yet their faith in coming glory did not fail. They but transferred it to the future life, and passed away "in sure and certain hope of joyful resurrection."

David declared himself in this same matter confident. "The Lord God is a sun and shield; the Lord will give grace (that is, for this life) and glory," (that is, in the life to come). "Thou wilt guide me by Thy counsel, and afterward (Oh, that blessed 'afterward!') receive me to glory." Daniel, too, had visions of that future bliss. "The saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever." "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever."

Let no one think that the Old Testament believers had their vision circumscribed to things around. The "things not seen as yet" laid hold of them. The glory yet to be revealed exerted influence over their hearts and lives. The certainty of its approach they did not doubt. They knew something of "a better resurrection," and of promises to be fulfilled when that took place. Of the promised things they were persuaded, "and greeted them from afar." In hope of these they "confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth."

The New Testament, of course, is full of promises of future bliss. The mere recital of them would require the writing out of many chapters of the Holy Word. As sure as God is God, these promises must be fulfilled. The eyes are dazzled by the brightness of the prospect; the mind oft staggers at the bare conception of it; and the "evil heart of unbelief," even in the child of God, at times cries out, "It cannot be." But not one jot or tittle of the Word shall fail. He that hath undertaken to "bring many sons unto glory" shall accomplish His design, and "when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory." This leads us to note what Scripture states—

II.—AS TO THE TIME.

Regarding this there can be little doubt. Glory comes to the believer "when the Son of Man shall come in His glory." "Then shall He sit upon the throne of His glory," and then shall they be likewise raised to "sit on thrones." The "glory" is "at the appearing." "When Christ shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory." "When He shall appear, we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is." "When the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." He "shall judge the quick and the dead at His appearing." "A crown of righteousness . . . the Lord the righteous judge shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love His appearing." Therefore the early Church was "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ." It was then the words of Christ would be fulfilled—"I will come again, and receive you unto Myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."

The earlier saints had also glimmerings of the same great light. Daniel the prophet saw distinctly that it was when "One like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven . . . and there was given Him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom . . . the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." "When I awake in Thy likeness" was the time when David said he would be "satisfied." And to that day even Job, the patriarch, looked forward, saying, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." "Your father Abraham," said Christ, "rejoiced to see My day; and he saw it and was glad." This could not mean the day of Christ's humiliation only; but "when he saw His glory," as Esaias did, and because He knew that then the faithful would be glorified together with the Lord. "Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of this, saying: 'Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of His saints.'" And all the ancient writings show that it is when the "King shall reign in righteousness" that His people shall obtain their exaltation, "and (as) princes shall rule in judgment" with Him.

Down life's dark vale we wander,
Till Jesus comes;
We watch, and wait, and wonder,
Till Jesus comes.

Late Shopping.—The Christian Mayor of Blackburn has made a proposal to his fellow-townsmen which it is hoped will be taken up heartily, as the most direct way of dealing with a great evil. He points out the bad effects in every way of late shopping, and white slavery for the assistants with all its consequences. The mayor is himself a shopkeeper, carrying on an extensive business, and he offers to close his premises every Saturday at 9 p.m. if the town will follow. The Markets Committee are prepared to come to an understanding with the stallholders. This is an entirely practical scheme, and we hope it will succeed. It is far more graceful and humane for such proposals to be voluntary than compulsory. There need be no legislation if ordinary human consideration be exercised. We commend this idea to leaders in other towns.

TRANSFIGURATION BY PRAYER.

"In all things by prayer and supplication, let your requests be made known unto God." "The prayer of the upright is His delight." "And Jesus took Peter and James and John, and went up into a mountain to pray." "And as He prayed the fashion of His countenance was altered, and His raiment became white and glistening."

YOUR afflictions may deprive you of many things, but there are others they cannot touch. The thieves stole poor Little Faith's ready money, but could not find his jewels. Yea, afflictions may make precious things more precious still—

Trials make the promise sweet,
Trials give new life to prayer.

"I am afraid," said a great statesman on his deathbed, "that I have neglected prayer too long to make it available now." Happy the man who keeps his armour bright ready for the day of need, and in whom the sacred fire of communion with God is always burning, and never allowed to go out.

Our Lord was a man of prayer. We find that He prayed many times, going out into a mountain to pray, or rising up a great while before it was day for prayer, and even continuing all night in prayer to God. He gained His great victory in Gethsemane in prayer, which prepared Him for the trial and triumph of Calvary.

One of the most instructive occasions was the Transfiguration. "As He prayed the fashion of His countenance was changed"; heavenly visitors drew near and conversed with him, and the Divine testimony was given, "This is my beloved Son."

This is what prayer may be, and do for you. The transfigurations by prayer are wonderful, as we climb to the heavenly places, where the pure atmosphere gives a clearer and broader vision of all things. We see God, and we see all things in the light of His presence and will. The false disguise of sin vanishes as its real nature is revealed. The world, with its apparent confusion, becomes the scene of divine wisdom, love, and power, as we behold the hand of God working out the counsels of eternity.

As we look within the vail, the afflictions which almost crushed us seem light, and but for a moment, and not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. The tone of the mind completely changes, as it melts into complete submission to the will of God. The worldliness of the heart is thrown off, as in prayer it flows out in fervent longing and love for God. The soul itself is transfigured as it sees the glory of God, and is changed into His image from glory to glory. The pure delight it finds in God is a joy unspeakable and full of glory, and makes the face and life radiant with the beauty of the Lord.

Everything wears a new aspect by the transfiguration which prayer accomplishes. Out of weakness we are made strong. The oil of joy is given for mourning, beauty for ashes, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness.

Cowper, describing the power of prayer, says:—

When one that holds communion with the skies
Has filled his urn where those pure waters rise,
And once more mingles with us meaner things,
'Tis e'en as if an angel shook his wings;
Immortal fragrance fills the circuit wide,
That tells us whence his treasures are supplied.

Archbishop Trench has the following beautiful lines upon the same subject:—

Lord, what a change within us one short hour
Spent in Thy presence will prevail to make,
What heavy burdens from our bosoms take,
What parched ground refresh as with a shower.
We kneel, and all around us seems to lower;
We rise, and all the distant and the near
Stands forth in sunny outline broad and clear;
We kneel, how weak! We rise, how full of power!
Why, therefore, should we do ourselves the wrong,
Or others, that we are not always strong,
That we are ever overborne with care,
That we should ever weak or heartless be,
Anxious or troubled, when with us is prayer,
And joy, and strength, and courage are with Thee?

Directory of the Devout Life.

"The Inwardness of True Religion."

(Matt. vi. 1-18.)

THAT word "Take heed" is very searching. We are all liable to the temptation to put more and better goods in the window than we have anywhere else in the shop, and to show fairer samples than we can supply in bulk. Three times over in these paragraphs the Lord speaks of the hypocrites (2, 5, 16), and the hypocrite, as the Greek word intimates, is a stage-actor. We are all tempted to perform our religious duties for the show of them before others, and to appear in public, arrayed in garments that we do not wear day by day. Once you begin to think that you must keep up appearances, once you assume the robes of purity and piety to attract the gaze of your fellows, you have admitted a principle into your heart which not only will rob you of your reward in heaven, but will ultimately eat out all the purity and loveliness of your religious life.

We are all tempted to Outwardness in Religion. Some, of course, seek to acquire a reputation for piety to serve as a cloak for their nefarious purposes. They weave, with assiduous care, a rich vestment of alms, prayers, and self-privations to hide their unhallowed and self-indulgent lives. Such people are, of course, mortified when any of their religious acts do not come to the front and secure notice. And when they have built up for themselves a great reputation by their charitable deeds, they devour widows' houses and take a mean advantage of their wards.

There are others again who, with sincere and transparent motives, began to love and serve God for Himself; but as the days have passed, they discover that they are regarded as saints, and the sense of being held in reverence by their fellows as "unco' guid," fascinates them. They become as proud of their grace as other people of their lace, their place, or their race. They realize that they must maintain their reputation at all costs. Of course, the best way to maintain and increase such a reputation is to cease to think about it, and live only for the Lord Jesus; but directly we fail to do this, and occupy ourselves with our reputation, we are tempted to do things, not because God asks them of us, but to resuscitate our waning credit.

As to Alms. The Jews were trained from their earliest days to be merciful and charitable. The law of Moses continually inculcated remembrance of the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow. Liberality to the poor was reckoned as part of religious duty towards God. But in our Lord's time men gave their money to secure merit with God, and admiration from men. They bestowed their charity at the doors of the synagogues, where beggars congregated, and passers-by could see; or distributed it as they came along the streets.

Mrs. Judson, in her account of the first Burman convert, says: "A few days ago I was reading with him the Sermon on the Mount. He was deeply impressed and unusually solemn. 'These words,' said he, 'take hold of my very heart. They make me tremble. Here God commands us to do everything in secret, and not to be seen of men. How unlike our religion it is! When Burmans make offerings at the pagodas, they make a great noise with trumpets and musical instruments that others may see how good they are. But this religion makes the mind fear God.'"

Probably what has been said of Jews and Burmans is true of us all. It is apt to make a considerable difference to our gift if the open plate is first handed to us, and our coin lies open to all eyes, or whether the offering be taken with a bag!

As to Prayer. Our Lord, of course, refers not to social, but private prayer. The Jews were not content with kneeling in the privacy of their own homes, but deliberately left their homes with the avowed intention and purpose of being seen in the place of public prayer. They took care, also, to be frequently overtaken in the streets, at the hour of prayer, that they might go through their long liturgies of prayer within view of all the passers-by.

Amongst ourselves the tendency is certainly to conceal, rather than parade, our private prayers; and yet there is a subtle temptation to be more reverent in our demeanour, more careful in saying our prayers and reading our Bibles, when we are in the company of religious people, than when we are alone.

As to Fasting. There were several fast days in the Jewish year, in addition to the Great Day of Atonement, when the people were called upon to afflict their souls by public fasting. Yet this exercise did not always involve entire abstinence, but often consisted only in the sacrifice of a single meal. The Pharisees and others, however, gave evidence of their exceptional piety by exceptional austerities, and took care to let it be known that they were fasting, by their gloomy countenances and squalid dress.

Our temptation is certainly not in the direction of fasting too much, but of never checking the indulgence of appetite in any degree or on any occasion. Probably we would be much healthier and stronger if now and again we were to reduce our meals and rest the organs of nutrition. But our temptation comes in another way. We affect a depression, a melancholy, a concern for our country, the state of our churches, the unorthodoxy of certain ministers, or a self-depreciation as miserable sinners, which we do not really feel. It gives us a certain character amongst our fellows, but it is hypocrisy in the sight of God.

There are those among us who never shed real tears of heart-broken grief before God for the state of things which they affect to deplore, but who pose among us as Jeremiahs. There are others who never take a glimpse of real and pure fellowship with God or of themselves, but they rush with it into print or speech; and whilst they are passing through such experiences they congratulate themselves that now, at length, they have something worth narrating in the experience meeting or the religious press.

This outwardness of religion is most injurious to us all. Plants subjected to sunlight by day and the electric light by night soon fade.

The Cure of Outwardness in Religion is the Cultivation of a Filial Spirit. Our Lord lived the filial life to its perfection, and shows us what it is. Notice how all his thoughts seem to run up into the one absorbing central thought of the Father, "which is in Heaven." He is thy Father—His relationship to each soul is personal. He is in secret, and is "thy Father, which seeth in secret," and He waits "to reward openly." There is no need of vain repetitions with Him, because He knows what we have need of. All prayer is to be directed to Him. It is He who forgives sins. It is He who clothes and feeds ravens, lilies, and His children. From beginning to end this chapter is full of the Father, who was the one Spectator and Audience, before whom our Lord lived His earthly life.

Not only did our Lord paint the blessedness of that filial life, but He came to give it to us all. This is what we are called to know, and He has the power to make it ours. Let us ask Him to do this great thing for us here and now. "To them who receive Him He gives the privilege of becoming sons of God, even to them that believe on His Name"—"and because we are sons God sends the Spirit of His Son into our hearts." Then the Father finds the child, and the child finds the Father; and such community and closeness of intimacy ensue from this finding that the Father's smile and good pleasure become all the reward that the child cares for.

Then we shall never think of doing our righteousness before men. We shall be good, not to win the approval of our conscience, not because we are inspired by an abstract love of virtue, as climbers may be ambitious to climb to some hitherto inaccessible peak; not even out of regard for the welfare of others; but because we desire, above all things, to give pleasure to the Father who is in secret.

We must cultivate this openness of heart towards God. There must be no lie in our life, no lack of transparency or sincerity, no concealment or withholding. All the secrets of heart and life must be naked before the eyes of Him with whom we have to do. And before we give, or pray, or fast, there must be the quiet gathering of the soul up before God, the silencing of every voice, the screening of all footlights and sidelights, the descent into those deepest depths which no eagle's eye has seen; and so God will become the supreme object of our endeavour, as we admonish ourselves, saying, "My soul, wait thou only upon God, for my expectation is from Him."

The manifestation of this inward fellowship will be instantly and abundantly manifest. (1) We shall realise the Brotherhood of the Filial Life. When we are near God, almsgiving will at once become a sacred thing, into which the stranger may not intrude—it is entirely a matter between the Father and His child.

Christian charity is not alms in the usual acceptation of the term, but the service of the Father. Alas! that the Christian Church has reversed this, magnifying the alms and not stopping to inquire the motive. What has been the result? Millions have been given, but the miseries of the world are no less. We have pauperized and demoralized those whom, with the best intentions, we meant to help. Before our alms can really help men we must get on our Lord's level. The alms must be fed from love to God, as an inland lake is fed from some secret burn, which pours into it waters from mountains far away.

(2) We shall become identified with the Father's Purposes. We no longer pray for our way or plans. Instead of this we say: "Thou art holy and precious to me, I want to see Thee revered and loved; I desire that others shall see what I see; I find Thy will my heaven, and long to see all resistance and indifference brought to an end." Then daily bread, forgiveness, and deliverance from temptation, become so many means to the one common purpose and goal of our choice.

The soul that really gets quiet before God, realizing that He is in secret, is compelled to pray thus. You might as well stop the tide from flowing, birds from song, and children from laughter, as stop that soul from prayer.

"Prayer is the Christian's vital breath,
The Christian's native air."

(3) Radiancy of Joy. We may in our heart of hearts be laying aside this and the other weight. But we know there is no merit in it. We only desire to lessen the influence of the flesh, that we may promote the vigilance and clear vision of the spirit. It is entirely a matter between God and us, of which we breathe no word to others; and when we meet our fellow-men there is a gladness on our face, and a ringing joy-note in our voice, that greatly commend the Gospel of our Lord.

Is there enough of this anointed head, and the face from which all marks of tears have been removed, in our modern Christian life? How often we make no effort to be happy, and make the best of things. There is in all of us a longing to be the object of our friends' solicitude, and there are times when we may freely unburden ourselves to get advice and sympathy; but we have no right to add unduly to the sorrows and anxieties of others, or to the travail of the world.

The life which is hid with Christ in God is a very radiant one, because it hands over all its burdens and anxieties to the Father in secret, and leaves them with Him. Thus it is at leisure from itself to enter into the anxieties of others.

What the future rewards may be of that inner life I do not care to speculate, and what the present rewards are words fail to tell. The reward of the hypocrite is the gaping wonder of spectators, who smile, criticize, and forget. The reward of the soul that lives with God in secret consists not in thrones or crowns of gold, but in a growing sense of nearness, of affinity, and of mutual understanding, which issue also in a growing likeness, though the saint knows not that his face shines.

Rev. Henry J. Perkins,

OF NEW COURT CHAPEL, N.

LONDON is the great octopus that draws everything into itself. If the provinces can boast of a singer, or a journalist, or a medical man, or a Gospel preacher a little above the average, the Metropolis will give him no rest until he is captured. And London has its charms as well as its fogs. A man who has lived some years in our big Babylon cannot very well live out of it again. We knew a young minister who declared openly that it was worth £200 a year to be able to write "London" after one's name! We rejoice that the great City has drawn Mr. Perkins back into itself, for men of his stamp are sorely needed here, in these days of shattered moral ideals.

The new minister of Tollington Park was born at Newbury, in Berkshire; but most of his early years were spent in the quietude of Whitchurch, in Hampshire, where his father was a deacon of the little Congregational Church, and the home atmosphere was all that could be desired. What a beatitude from the birth is a Christian father or mother! Before entering college, our friend went into business, and the training then received proved of immense service to him in after-life. In the year 1873, he was admitted into Hackney College, where he rapidly grew both in wisdom and knowledge. In 1877, he was ordained minister of the Clifton Congregational Church, Peckham, and for seventeen years he laboured there "with both hands earnestly," and with all the zeal of an enthusiast. Everything lived whither the river of his influence flowed. He began with eighty-seven members, and closed with 650—a multiplication by seven! In the Sunday School he began with 245, and closed with 700. During his Peckham ministry the church was enlarged, a schoolroom and a mission-hall were built, and also a men's Bible-class room, at a total cost of £6,000. All the members loved him for his work's sake, and he was exceedingly happy in his toil.

In 1895 he was invited to succeed Rev. Seys Howell, of Birmingham, at Albion Chapel, Southampton, where he has laboured with untiring energy for eight and a half years, winning golden opinion from all who value solid work and unselfish service. He began there with a church roll of 387 and finished with 524 members; £1,100 were spent on the renovation of the church, £300 on a new organ, and a substantial amount was contributed to the Twentieth Century Fund. Last year £1,470 was collected towards all purposes, leaving a balance of £40 in hand. His young people's monthly service at Albion was known far and wide, and the social hour at the close was greatly appreciated by multitudes of young men and women. Mr. Perkins is

"A YOUNG MAN'S MAN."

His work while at Southampton can never be tabulated, but God knows it all. At his farewell meeting he and Mrs. Perkins received valuable mementoes, and they left Albion feeling confident that they had not a single enemy in the whole congregation.

Our friend is a manly man, with a strong vertebral column; and the personal equation counts for much in the Christian ministry. True preaching has been defined as "truth through a man," and it is that. It is important to have the gun in good order, but it is more important to have a real man behind the gun. Mr. Perkins is a good preacher, but a better man, and this is the highest compliment we can pay him.

He is lovable, winsome, sympathetic, and approachable, and he carries the Gospel in his face. As a preacher he is earnest, thoughtful, eloquent, and Evangelical. He believes in conversion, and he never forgets to appeal to the conscience. He deals with the heart as well as the head, and he never indulges in "sky-rocketing." He knows that the soul slumbers, like the Sleeping Beauty in the old fable, and that it needs the kiss of a Divine Prince to awaken it into glorious life. He has a dash of the prophet in him, and one prophet is worth a score of priests in any state of the market.

We hope that New Court is going to see his best and most successful work. The field has its difficulties; but they will only string up his energies for grander efforts. New Court is one of the best organized churches in London, and its staff of deacons and workers is unsurpassed. North London is the paradise of Nonconformity. It is easier for a preacher to draw 500 people in the North than 200 in the fashionable and godless West. Mr. Perkins has succeeded wonderfully in all his pastorates, and, God helping him, he will not fail at Tollington Park. Fortunate is the pastor with such a church, and fortunate is the church with such a pastor. During the past twenty-five years New Court has had for its ministers Revs. William Park, J. Ossian Davies, William Pierce, and George Campbell Morgan, and the last, but not the least of them, will be Henry John Perkins. May the Holy Spirit ever help him to interpret God to man, and man to himself; and, after a long period of successful work in his new sphere, may he and his yoke-fellows receive the "well done" of the Master.

MR. PERKINS AT NEW COURT.

The services at New Court on Lord's Day, when Mr. Perkins occupied the pulpit for the first time as pastor of the Church, were full of inspiration for both pastor and people. The heartiness with which the devotions were entered into by the crowded congregations could not fail greatly to cheer the preacher on what must of necessity have been a trying occasion. The sermon in the morning dealt with "The Ministry," in its Godward and manward aspects, and was a clear setting forth of the obligations of pastor to Church, of Church to pastor, and of both to God.

The evening discourse was founded on what Mr. Perkins announced would be the keynote of his ministry at New Court: "The Old Gospel for the New Age," as given in the declaration of Paul, "The Gospel of Christ, the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" (Rom. i. 16). It was about the middle of the first century (observed the preacher), when these words were written; now we are in the twentieth. Things are very different in the world to-day from what they were when the Apostle wrote. Nations, cities, customs, manners and languages have changed, and I sometimes think if the apostle could return, he would hardly know the world in this our day. But one thing Paul would find has not changed—the message of the Cross, the Divine Gospel of Christ which is what it was in his day, "the power of God unto salvation." Men's conceptions of the Gospel may change, but the Cross of Christ still stands "towering o'er the wrecks of time"; its message is still as mighty. John iii. 16 still remains the keynote of Divine revelation.

The question is asked—What is the Gospel of Christ? Let me say that it is not the story of Christ's life; in other words, it is not the Gospel records. The "Gospels" are the media through which God works upon the hearts and consciences of men; but they are not Christ.

IT IS CHRIST WHO SAVES,

not the story of His life. It is the fact of His atonement for sin that bridges over the gulf between God and man, and not the history of that atonement as contained in the Gospel records. It is not His beautiful and perfect example. We cannot estimate the influence of that example upon men's minds; but beautiful and perfect as it is, it is not enough to lift a man out of his sin and give him the mastery over all the powers of evil within and without. He wants the power to copy that example and follow it. It is here that Unitarianism fails so miserably. It gives the example, but fails to supply the motive.

Having shown that it is not a statement of creed, Mr. Perkins went on to emphasize what the Gospel really means. It is "good news," "glad tidings" of the glorious fact that "God was in Christ reconciling the world to Himself." It is the news of the fact that Christ died for the ungodly; that to as many as receive Him, to them He gives the power to become the sons of God; that Christ died to bring us to God, and that we who were enemies are reconciled to God by the death of His Son.

The Gospel being what it is, is spoken of as being the power of God. I never cease to thank God for that word "power" in this connection. It represents the Gospel as the very thing we need. The one thing that our poor human nature needs in forsaking sin and living a new life, is Divine help. More than new ideals and perfect examples, man requires the energy that shall put fresh nerve into him, arm him against the onslaught of his passions, and renew again the determination of his soul.

Dr. Berry gives us an illustration of the uselessness of going to men and taking to them nothing but lofty ideals and good counsels. A member of his own congregation who had become a victim to strong drink, brought his wife and family to the very verge of ruin. Dr. Berry visited the man when recovering from an attack of delirium tremens, and felt that the time had come for saying strong things. He pointed out how utterly he was wasting life, and how disgracefully he was treating his wife and family, and endeavoured to shame him into a better course of conduct. Turning to the preacher, the man exclaimed, "If that is all you have to tell me you can go, for I know it all already; but if you can tell me what will

HELP ME TO BE A BETTER MAN,

I pray you to tell me." That man's cry is the unspoken desire of hundreds of hearts to-day.

Proceeding, Mr. Perkins spoke of the enthusiasm concerning social and political reforms, some of which were regarded as sufficient to meet all the needs of men, and work their regeneration. He deprecated the idea that better housing of the poor, purer air, free libraries (reforms in which he heartily believed), would in themselves regenerate men. If they would, how is it that some of the worst criminals come from the highest ranks of society? These social reforms are well so far as they go, but they do not go deep enough; they do not touch the spiritual need of men. Man is greater than the food he eats. You may give him the power to vote, but you cannot give him the power of self-control, apart from the Gospel. You may change his environment, but you have not changed the man. You may give him music, but you have not stilled the discords of his nature. You may put before him the noblest works of art, but he will go away to his evil deeds and the gratification of his basest passions. He needs more than these things can give him; he wants the power that can change his heart and renew his nature. There is only one power that can do that—the Gospel of Christ.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, October 11. Psalm cxlvi.
The Psalm of Present Tenses.

THE Psalter closes with five psalms of swelling praise, corresponding to the five books into which the Psalter is divided.

1, 2. Let your glad sense of God's Love lead to the resolve that your life shall become a psalm of perpetual praise. It is the thankful heart which is most likely to incite others to trust. When men see the glad smile on your face, and hear the song on your lips, they will be prepared to receive your testimony about the blessedness of faith.

3, 4. Before advancing to the positive reasons for faith in God, the Psalmist shows the futility of trusting in man. What is he, but a child of the earth-born Adam, inheriting the feebleness and transience of his first parent? Our best and strongest friends afford no permanent anchorage for the soul in face of sorrow.

5-10. The "blessed" with which this paragraph begins is the last of the twenty-five "blesseds" of the Psalter, which are well worth careful study. The Psalmist goes on to recite nine Divine acts which attest the wisdom of a life of faith. How good it is to know that our God is not only the Mighty Maker of heaven and earth, but one who keeps troth for ever and ever. No sudden lapse into passionate sin, and no years of wayward wandering, can ever break the bond that binds together God and the soul that has once been born into His family. Notice the present tenses of these verbs, and find for yourself the phrase that describes you; hide in it, and claim that God shall do for you all that He says He will.

MONDAY, October 12. Psalm cxlvii.
A Threefold Hallelujah.

1-6. God's transcendent power was shown in building up Jerusalem, and gathering the exiles from different lands under Nehemiah and Ezra. Have you exiles and outcasts over whom your heart is secretly grieving? Ask God to gather them. Mark the beautiful contrast between His gentleness in healing broken hearts and His omnipotence in marshalling the stars. He who stands by the mourner in a lonely grief, and whispers the promises to her heart, is He that holds in His hand the muster-roll of the stars. The mighty God of creation is the gentle Lover of souls.

7-11. Here are instances of God's universal goodness in providing grass for the wild creatures of the mountains, answering the croak of the raven's brood, responsible for the perpetual miracle of storing the clouds with water for the thirsty earth. This is "our God for ever and ever," and His best help is given to us, not because of our strength, but for our weakness; the helplessness of man appeals most quickly to the innermost thought of God.

12-20. The land had been desolate for seventy years, but now her fields were yielding the fat of wheat, her children were at peace, her cities were built with their steadfast fortifications.

This Psalm must have been composed in the winter; the air was full of snowflakes, the hoar-frost lay everywhere as if ashes had been powdered over the world, hailstones were flung with lavish hand, and the piercing wind seemed unbearable. Suddenly a thaw sets in, the warm wind steals over the land, unsealing the brooks. When He speaks His word to Jacob, a warm and blessed revival suddenly succeeds long years of frost. Breathe on Thy Church, O God, with Thy reviving Breath!

TUESDAY, October 13. Psalm cxlviii.
Nature's Sonata.

This wonderful anthem reminds us of what John heard (Rev. v.). Many a time when we have stood in the midst of nature under the smile of the summer sun, in the murmur of the hum of insect, the song of bird, the ripple of brooklet, the sough of the wind amid the trees or across the cornfields, it has seemed as though this Psalm were being chanted in our hearing.

1-6. The Praise of Heaven. From the heavens and the heights praises float down to earth. It kindles sun, moon, and stars, and these again send their summons to praise, through the heavens of clouds. Thus the glad contagion falls downward; and finally the Psalmist mentions the reason for the praise which is thus elicited, in the fact that God's creative act has been succeeded by His continual law, which maintains the universe that He has made. What a wonderful anticipation the Psalmist gives, in the sixth verse, of the constancy and immutability of law! None of God's creatures may transgress or step across the routine established by the Creator. Apparently it is left for moral beings like ourselves to transgress.

7-14. The Praise of Earth. The Psalmist begins at the lowest rung of the ladder. He knew little of the sea-monsters whose home is in the ocean depths, but he was sure that they can praise God. From these he rises to the storms that sweep the surface, and thence to the solid earth with her mountains and hills, her fruit-bearing and forest trees, her wild and domestic animals, her worms that creep, and her birds that soar. Ultimately, the song reaches the lips of men, the great and noble, the simple and unlearned, old and young. Finally the man's bass, the girl's soprano, the old man's thin notes, the child's ringing treble blend in the anthem of praise. God's people chosen to be near to Him is an emblem of the Royal Priesthood of the Church, and in these, praise finds its highest expression.

WEDNESDAY, October 14. Psalm cxlix.
The Glad Praise of the Children of Zion.

The restored people of Israel in the Psalm becomes the executor of Divine judgment on those who will not join their praise.

How the Psalmist rejoices to call God's people His favoured ones (1, 5, 9)! And if Israel was favoured, surely we may claim to be, who have been redeemed by the precious blood, and baptized by the Holy Ghost. It is a wonderful thing to learn, as we are taught in verse 4, that God actually takes pleasure in us, not for what we are in ourselves, but for what we are in His Beloved Son. Ah, soul! be of good cheer. Though in thyself thou are not worthy to be called a son, yet God takes pleasure in thy life, if only thou art in Christ, and art willing that Christ in thee should work out the perfect expression of the Divine will.

The Psalm closes sternly. That God's people should go forth to battle chanting His praises, and holding two-edged swords in their hands, is not the Christian ideal, unless indeed we may interpret the sword as representing those spiritual weapons which are mighty to strike down wrong. This honour have all God's saints—that is, we are all called to be priest-kings, clad in the beauty of holiness, and sent forth to win the world for Jesus.

THURSDAY, October 15. Psalm cl.
The Tenfold Hallelujah.

With this psalm the Psalter closes. The book begins with Blessed, and ends with Hallelujah. Is it not like our life—so full of tears, groans, questions about the mystery of God's ways, prayers for vindication and help, and at last ending with an ascription of praise to Him who has redeemed us from all trouble, and led us through all our years? Lonely and disconsolate soul, for thee also the book of the life shall end with Hallelujah! Strange though it may seem to thee now, thou shalt praise God for the unfulfilled dreams, as well as for those fulfilled, and thou shalt be satisfied.

It is supposed that this Psalm was meant for liturgic use, and, if so, perhaps each instrument began to take part as its name was mentioned, so that at last all blended in one great outburst of minstrelsy.

The theme of praise is given in verse 2. The Psalmist celebrates God's mighty acts, and are they not a theme worthy of the world's sweetest singers? Do they not include the death of the Cross, the propitiation for sin, the ransom from the power of the grave, and the intercession at the right hand of God?

The Psalmist's vision (6) of a world in which everything that hath breath praises God, is yet far from realized. It seems as though the angel voices that rang out, "Glory to God in the highest," have not succeeded in inciting human hearts to anything like an adequate acknowledgment of God's wonderful dealings with men; but we know that finally every creature that is in heaven, on the earth, and under the earth, shall be heard saying, "Blessing and honour and glory and power be unto Him that sitteth on the throne, and to the Lamb for ever and ever" (Rev. v. 13). Lord hasten that day!

FRIDAY, October 16. Proverbs I.

This book belongs to a group in Hebrew literature which treats of Wisdom. It is not easy to say in a word what this wisdom really stands for. We have no precise English equivalent. Sometimes it seems synonymous with the Word of God, as in chap. viii.; at other times it stands for the sententious statement of shrewd observation of human life; it may also be described as sanctified common-sense. But in any case it is not merely intellectual and bookish, but moral. It is man's view of the best policy of human life under the light of God's truth.

1-6. We are taught first the design of the book. The heading of verse 1 appears also in chapters x. 1 and xxv. 1. Wisdom is the knowledge of truth; Instruction the tutoring of the young and inquiring mind; Understanding is the power of judging between differences; Justice is the principle of righteousness; Judgment is its application in our dealings with other men.

7-19. Fatherlike warnings follow. Young and ingenuous souls are instructed here, and in the following eight chapters, in the fear of the Lord as the basis of all true knowledge, and in the art of rightly disciplining life in unison with this great principle. I am told that the Scotch youth are set to copy the Proverbs, as the scrip on the heading of their copy-books, and that to this are due much of their thrift, prudence, and canniness. How this may be, I do not know; but I can conceive nothing better than that these precepts should be wrought into the very fibre of the young soul.

20-33. The appeal of wisdom. Here surely the voice of God calls to men, and we are reminded of Titus ii. 11, 12. Let us especially appropriate the closing verse of this chapter, and so obey the voice of God that we may find a sure shelter in His Being, while dreaded evils pass us by.

SATURDAY, October 17. Proverbs II.

There are two main lines of thought in this chapter.

1-9. Wisdom, by which we may understand the voice of Christ, who is the Word of God, invites the young to lay to heart His commandments. Mark the three Ifs (1, 3, 4). These recite the conditions of a holy and happy life. We must receive His words, pray earnestly for discernment that we may understand, and seek for the Divine science, with the eagerness which drives men to the goldfields. Mark, also, the two Thens (5, 9). "Then thou shalt understand." You cannot be disappointed. They that ask shall receive; to seek is to find, to knock is certain to be succeeded by an opened door.

10-22. The Lord enumerates all the blessings that will accrue from hiding His words in our hearts. The more we meditate upon and obey the words of our blessed Lord, the sweeter and more pleasant do they become to us. It is because we are not familiar enough with the Bible, that we do not love it more. Note the advantages. To deliver thee from the way of evil (12); to deliver thee from the strange woman (16); and that thou mayest walk in the way of good men (20). There are syren voices that speak to us all, enticing us from purity and righteousness; but when our hearts are filled with the sense of Christ's presence, how distasteful those delights appear to which we are allured! The secret of sanctification is a heart filled with Christ through the reverent study of His words.

THE WORKING MEN'S MISSION

NEW CUT, BLACKFRIARS, S.E.

A LETTER FROM F. A. BEVAN, Esq., J.P., D.L.

"54, Lombard Street, London, E.C.

"I desire to commend the appeal issued by the Committee of the Working Men's Mission to the Christian public. Since the year 1876 the Brothers Young, with the help of other Christian Working Men, have been carrying on a splendid work for God among the 'masses' in the New Cut and adjoining neighbourhood, owing to which numbers of men and women have been transformed, and thousands of children have been brought under spiritual influence. It is impossible to over estimate the importance of thus getting hold of the children in these days, when there is so little of definite religious instruction. In order to carry on all the various departments of the work efficiently, it is absolutely necessary to have a hall, with rooms attached, in the centre of operations, such as the present building in Collingwood Street. But, unfortunately, the lease of these premises will shortly expire, and therefore the proposed new building ought to be commenced without delay. All who are interested in the evangelization of the working classes of the great city cannot do better than subscribe to this important undertaking. "F. A. BEVAN, Treasurer."

An excellent site has been found in Webber Street, New Cut, near the Waterloo Road, with an area of about 3,000 superficial feet. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners have granted a lease for 999 years at the exceptionally low ground rent of £38 per year. Already a benevolent lady has placed to our credit

MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION SUPPLEMENT.

Communications for the Missionary Association should be addressed to Room 79, Donington House, 30, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C.

What the Association is.

THE Missionary Association was founded in London on June 12, 1902, and seeks to remind missionaries all the world over (1) That this being the Dispensation of the Spirit, it is their high personal privilege and responsibility to "be filled with the Spirit." (2) That unless they enjoy the gift of the Holy Spirit to the fullest extent possible, their labour must necessarily be proportionately barren. (3) That were all missionaries to be "filled with the Spirit," the fruit of their efforts would be multiplied many fold, and the coming of the Kingdom greatly hastened.

The following means are used to promote the objects of the Association:—(1) A MAGAZINE "LETTER." The first three numbers, published in September, 1902, January, 1903, and April, 1903, have been sent to nearly every Protestant missionary, and have been productive of much encouragement and blessing. Nearly 1,200 missionaries have already joined the Association. In future it is hoped that articles similar to those contained in the Missionary Association "Letter" will be published at regular intervals in special Missionary Association numbers of THE CHRISTIAN. By this means the helpfulness of the Association will be very greatly increased, as the articles will not only reach all Protestant missionaries as heretofore, but will be read by many thousands at home who would not otherwise see them. Much prayer on behalf of missionaries and their work will thus be evoked, missionary zeal will be aroused, and the simultaneous intercession of thousands, will call forth abounding blessing from God.

(2) MISSIONARY SPIRITUAL CONFERENCES have been held in London in October, 1902, and in February, 1903, and were seasons of much blessing, though the attendance was small.

The Council and Committee of the Missionary Association are anxious to arrange a further series of Conventions, to be held, probably, at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate Street, commencing about the middle of November next. They propose that the next Convention should limit itself to South America, and should be confined to the consideration of missionary effort in that continent only. In this way it is thought that better results will flow from the occasion than if the whole field were to be laid under consideration at one time.

Every organization at work in South America, of whatever denomination, will be invited to send representatives to the Convention, at which will be discussed questions affecting missionary effort, from many points of view.

The chief purpose of the Convention will be to ascertain what work is being done in South America; how it is being done; whether the means at present employed are the best possible; what further work, if any, should be attempted; what concentration, if any, should be advocated; how one organization may best co-operate with every other; what mistakes, if any, have been made, and how to avoid them in the future; how the links between the missionary organizations, or between individual missionaries and the churches at home, can be strengthened—the whole having in view the desirability of bringing about the evangelization of South America in the shortest time possible.

Other subjects deserving to be discussed will doubtless occur to our readers, and we should be glad if they would kindly indicate any points which should be specially considered.

(3) SUPPLYING SUITABLE BOOKS.

(4) SENDING MISSIONERS TO MISSIONARIES. It is one of the greatest objects of the Association to engage the services of suitable missioners, whose special mission shall be to missionaries, to strengthen their hands, and be the means of deepening their spiritual experience, that they may be led to seek the enduement of power from on high, and "be filled with the Spirit."

(5) The Missionary Association seeks, moreover, to be the MEDIUM FOR INTER-COMMUNICATION between the ten thousand Protestant missionaries abroad, and the many thousands of missionary Christian workers at home—that the home workers may be enthused with missionary zeal, and missionaries abroad encouraged by increased home sympathy. Every spiritually-minded Christian who is interested in the success of missionary effort; every missionary society desiring that the work of its agents shall, in the only true sense, be fruitful; every foreign mission station longing for "showers of blessing" on its local labours; every church, chapel, mission, or other Christian community in the home lands, where sympathy with missionary effort is fostered—are invited to co-operate with the association, and to make known its objects: individuals, by registering their name at the office and by co-operation with voice and pen as opportunity may offer; communities, by becoming local sections of the association, and holding occasional meetings to emphasize its objects. The Missionary Association is interdenominational as well as international. Further details may be had from the office, 30, Norfolk Street, London, W.C.

A Call to Prayer.

BY ROBERT CALDWELL, HON. SECRETARY OF THE MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

IN its warfare against sin and Satan, no weapon at the command of a living and purified Church is more effective than that of ALL PRAYER, and yet how unwilling we are to use it! The example of our Lord Himself should surely be an incentive to us. If He made it His constant practice to seek help and guidance in prayer, how much more should we! From the very beginning of His public ministry, till He laid down the world's burden on His cross, He lived in an atmosphere of prayer. In all circumstances and at all times the Lord Jesus was a Man of prayer! If He, then, the Creator of all things, and the Lord of life, failed not to seek in prayer His Father's help and blessing, and to know His will, how much more should we, in our efforts to save men, seek to lay hold of the mighty Hand that rules all worlds!

PRACTICE OF THE EARLY CHRISTIANS.

The same spirit and habit of prayer became the heritage of Christ's immediate followers. One prolonged prayer-meeting preceded and ushered in the Day of Pentecost. Baptized themselves with the Holy Ghost, do the Apostles desire that baptism for others?—they betake themselves to prayer! Are they scourged and threatened by the Scribes and Pharisees, and forbidden to speak in the name of Jesus?—with one accord they lay the matter before God in prayer, and the place is shaken by the answering power of the Holy Ghost! Is one of their number thrust into prison to wait a fit time for execution?—the whole Church promptly meets in prayer—the prison gates are opened, and the Apostle is set free! In short, all throughout the "Acts" and the "Epistles" we can trace, as being common to early Christians, these traits of character, acquired from the Master Himself in the School of Prayer!

Is there no lesson here for the Church of to-day? Does the same spirit of prayer characterize the followers of Christ in the twentieth century as did in the first? Every revival the Church has ever experienced has been born in prayer; and not until God's people get again to their knees in holy earnestness, shall we see the Church triumphing, and the heathen being faithfully sought after. The promises of Christ still stand recorded for the encouragement and stimulation of those upon whom the ends of the world have come.

WHAT TO PRAY FOR.

Pray for the Church, that she may become missionary. The safety of the Church itself depends upon its missionary character. A Church that is not missionary is not Christian. The condition of the heathen world to-day is a scandal that overshadows the fair fame of Jesus. With a pure and a praying Church, this scandal would soon be removed. Pray, therefore, for the spirit of purity and the spirit of prayer, that the spirit of supplication may be poured out on all flesh. Pray for the living members of the Church, that they may become lively; pray for the dead adherents, that they may live! Pray that God may shake His Church mightily; that pastors and people may be aroused to a true sense of their responsibility; that a pure Gospel may be proclaimed, so that Christ may be exalted, and that God may be glorified! Pray that the Church may be enabled to look out on the world with the Saviour's eyes; that she may feel for the world with the Saviour's heart; and that she may stand on the threshold of heathendom thrilled with the Saviour's purpose!

Pray for the Missionaries already in the field, that they may receive a baptism of fire, a baptism which burns while it blesses, which burns to bless! Pray that they may be kept close by the Master's side; that they may be wholehearted in their service, and zealous for the salvation of men. Pray that God's gift of Christ may be preached by God-gifted men; that God-opened doors may be entered only by God-sent workers. Pray that God's truth may be the seed sown in every mission field, and that God's glory may be the harvest aimed at.

Pray for the Heathen who sit in darkness and in the shadow of death; pray for them as for the soul of a brother; pray that their hearts may be influenced by the Spirit of God, and that their eyes may be opened to see the light. Pray that the Lord of the harvest may thrust forth many labourers—that the cream of the Church may be given to the heathen.

Pray for some Definite Thing. Let your request be laid definitely before God, spreading out the matter prayed for as under His eyes. Take a firm grip of God and His promises, and do not let go, for surely the answer will come. According to your faith and agonizing, so will the answer be, and thus shall come the time when the Song of the Universe, begun when the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy, shall be heard throughout the land, and the kingdoms of this earth shall have become the kingdom of our God and of His Christ.

The World's Need.

THE world is waiting still
In agony and tears,
Though Christ has been enthroned to save,
For nigh two thousand years.
Lord, hear earth's bitter cry!
What keeps Thee back so long,
From reigning o'er a ransomed world,
From righting human wrong?

Thy messengers of peace,
To turn the tide of woe,
Are sinners, saved themselves by grace,
Who witness what they know.
They feel as Jesus felt,
They work as Jesus wrought,
Epistles of redeeming love,
To save the souls He bought.

Is this the creed we live,
The grace we preach abroad,
For which the whole creation groans—
The remedy of God?
Ah, no! so cold, so dead,
We put Thee, Lord, to shame—
Once more baptize Thy church with fire,
To set the world aflame!

Letter to Missionaries.

By Rev. F. PAYNTER, M.A.

WE feel the honourable position in which the Lord has placed you in the very forefront of the battle with evil; we know something of the awful powers of darkness which are against you. The whole world lieth in wickedness—in the Evil One. The opposing powers to the progress of the Gospel are simply tremendous. And you are engaged day by day going forth in the Name of the Lord, under a deep sense of your utter weakness, to overthrow the strongholds of Satan. You walk round your Jericho day after day amidst the derision and scorn of the heathen. Alas! they often point to professing Christians, it may be English Christians, and say: "What are these better than we?"

But blessed be God, there are more with you than against you. It is your privilege to look up to God—to cast yourself wholly on Him, and to say with King Asa: "Lord, it is nothing with Thee to help, whether with many, or with them that have no power. Help us, O Lord our God, for we rest on Thee, and in Thy name we go against this multitude." We go forward to do Thy work. "O Lord, Thou art our God; let not man prevail against Thee" (2 Chron. xiv. 11).

The message which is specially burning on my heart is the all-importance, nay the absolute necessity if you would do God's work—work which will stand the coming day of trial—that you should definitely receive from our ascended Lord the baptism of the Holy Ghost, both for your own soul's welfare and for the work in which you are engaged. "He who cometh after me . . . He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire" (Matt. iii. 11). "Ye shall receive power—the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you" (Acts i. 8). This is more, much more than many of us received when we were converted by God. It is a baptism by which the self-will is burned out of our heart. It is a baptism by which we no longer seek great things for ourselves (Jer. xlv. 5), but all for God (John i. 50; xiv. 12).

It is a baptism by which the cross of Christ our Saviour becomes altogether glorious to us, and we not only take Him as our substitute for sin, but so identify ourselves with Him in His death that we are able to say, and to say truthfully: "I live, yet not I; Christ liveth in me."

It is a baptism which endues us with a new power for work, whatever be the work to which He calls us. It is a baptism which enables us to work on in spite of discouragements and few apparent results, assured that our labour is not in vain in the Lord; and that, however weak and unworthy we may feel ourselves to be, we shall receive special and public commendation at the coming of the Lord, the day in which, through His abounding grace, He will say to us: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord" (Matt. xxv. 23). We may enter into this joy in some measure, and have an earnest of it, even in this present world.

I have said that this baptism is much more than many of us received at conversion. A missionary now working in the field says: "For ten years I was a child of God, but not until then did I take the Spirit as my Energizer. I found out that there was something lacking in me, that I had not recognised the Holy Ghost as being God's Worker here on earth. I had not recognised the Holy Ghost as a Person; but, then grasping this truth, I yielded up whole spirit, soul, and body to the blessed Spirit, saying, 'I recognise Thou hast the right to control me.' It was a crisis with me, but it was a crisis with a view to a process. Ever since then my life has been a different thing."

Many of us can say, by God's abounding grace, we have proved this. May we all prove it for ourselves, and having received the Holy Spirit in His fulness, prove the power of the blessedness of a life given up to the absolute direction, superintendence, and control of God the Holy Ghost!

God's Highest Ideal.*

By S. D. GORDON.

A FLOOD-TIDE is a rising tide. It flows in, and fills up, and spreads out. Wherever it goes, it cleanses, and fertilizes, and beautifies. For untold centuries Egypt has depended for its very life upon the yearly flood-tide of the Nile. The rich bottom lands of the Connecticut Valley are re-fertilized every spring by that river's flood-tide. The green beauty and rich fruitage of some parts of the Sacramento Valley, whose soil is flooded by the artificial irrigation-rivers, are in sharp contrast with adjoining unwatered portions.

The flood-tide is caused by influences from above. In the ocean and the portions of rivers under its influence, by the heavenly bodies. In the rivers by the fall of rain and snow swelling successively the upper streams and lakes.

God's highest ideal for men is frequently expressed under the figure of a river running at flood-tide. Ezekiel's vision of the future capital of Israel gives prominence to a wonderful river gradually reaching flood-tide and exerting untold influence.

John's companion vision of the future Church in the closing chapters of Revelation finds its radiating centre in an equally wonderful river of water of life. When Jesus would give a picture of a Christian man up to His ideal, He exclaims, "Out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water." John's explanation, years after, was that He was speaking of the Holy Spirit's presence in the human life. Jesus' ideal would put our lives at the flood-tide. No ebb-tide there. No rise and fall. But a constant flowing-in, filling up, and flooding out.

The companion word to surrender is mastery. My surrender to Jesus carries with it His mastery over me. We need to get clear ideas of the results of His unrestrained presence. It has been a common supposition that somehow the baptism of the Holy Spirit is always connected with an evangelistic gift, and with marked success in soul-winning. Men have thought of Mr. Moody facing great crowds, who were swayed and melted at his words, and of people in great multitudes accepting Christ. Probably the world has never had a finer illustration of a Spirit-filled man than in dear old Moody. And it is not to be wondered at that the rare evangelistic gift of service with which he was endowed, and the great results attending it, should be so closely allied in our minds with the Spirit-filled life which he exemplified so unusually.

In sharp contrast with such a conception, however, are the results in some of the Spirit-swayed men whom God used in Bible times. Isaiah was called to a service that was to be barren of results, and Jeremiah's was not only fruitless but attended with great personal peril. Jesus' public work led through a rough path to a crown of thorns and a cross. Stephen's testimony brought him a storm of stones. And Paul passed through great danger and distress to a cell, and beyond to a keen-edged axe. These are leaders among Spirit-filled men.

Paul's teaching in the Corinthian Epistle helps one to a clear understanding about results. He explains that while it is one Spirit dwelling in all who acknowledge Jesus as Lord, yet the evidence of His presence differs widely in different persons. It is one God working all things in all persons, but with great variety in the gifts bestowed, in the service with which they are entrusted, and in the inner experiences they are conscious of (1 Cor. xii. 4-6, 11).

What results then may be expected to follow the filling of the Holy Spirit? It may be said in a sentence that Jesus fills us with the same Spirit that filled Himself, that He may work out in us His own image and ideal, and make use of us in His passionate reaching out after others. If we attempt to analyse these results we shall find them falling into three groups. First, results in the life, that is, in the inner experiences and the habits. Second, results in the personality, that is, in the appearance and the mental faculties. Third, results in service.

The Holy Spirit and Missions*

By ROBERT E. SPEER.

IF, on the one side, the Holy Spirit alone can convince the Church of her missionary character, the Holy Spirit alone can prepare the world for the Church's mission. "The Spirit and the Bride say, Come"—not the Spirit only, nor the Church only. Side by side with the Church's voice, calling the nations to their true King, the Holy Spirit Himself has been speaking, unsealing the closed doors, preparing the needy hearts, and fitting the world to receive salvation through the Church's witness to the life and death of Jesus Christ our Lord and the world's Lord.

Consider the way in which, in all the nations of the earth, the Holy Spirit has thus gone in advance of the missionary enterprise. Missionaries tell of African tribes in which the Redeemer has been described to the hearts of men before missionaries came near them. Adoniram Judson, going out in the year 1812, with his heart burning for the people of India, was turned back first of all from Calcutta through the instructions which had just been issued by the Earl of Minto, to the effect that the British in India could not tolerate any interference with the religion of the people, and that the missionaries in Seringapatam should cease from attempting, by printed pamphlets, to lead the people away from their ancient faith. Judson went back to the Isle of France for a little respite, and then made another attempt to land at Madras, only to be turned away again. Back he came to Maulmein, and was then led of the Spirit of God to the Karens, a people prepared for the Gospel by the tradition handed down through generations that white teachers would come to tell of the Book of God. Consider the way, within our own memory, the Spirit of God opened the doors of Korea, with His missionaries standing at the threshold waiting to go in. Think of Barnabas Shaw making thirty days' journey from the Cape into the heart of Africa to be greeted by a deputation of Hottentots, led by the Divine Spirit, seeking a man of God to preach to them.

All over the world the Spirit has ever moved on the hearts of Christian men, inclining them to turn to where prepared hearts awaited them, and preparing them for the prepared hearts. Dr. Griffith John, of Hankow, tells how it had been laid upon his heart once to pray for the baptism of the Holy Ghost: "Feeling my lack of spiritual power, I spent the whole of Saturday in an earnest prayer for a baptism of the Holy Ghost. On the following morning I preached on the subject. At the close of the service I proposed that we should meet for an hour every day of the ensuing week to pray for a baptism of the Holy Ghost. From fifty to seventy of the converts met day by day, and confessing their sins, pleaded with tears for an outpouring of the Spirit of God. The native Church at Hankow received an impulse, the force of which continues to this day. The Holy Ghost became a mighty reality to many. Where once other things were preached, Christ and His power became a living reality." Whether we look at the Church or the world the Spirit of God alone can equip the one and prepare the other; and the Spirit of God can alone put the prepared Church into the prepared world. . . .

Only the Spirit of God can give to the hearts of men a covetousness after the example of Christ that should make them desirous of walking in His steps. Think of David Brainerd kneeling down under the trees by the banks of the Delaware, damp with the perspiration of his prayers, while the chill winter winds whistled through the forest above him, crying out in his loneliness: "Here am I, Lord, send me; send me to the ends of the earth; send me to the rough and savage pagans of the wilderness; send me from all that is called comfort in the earth; send me even to death itself, if it be but in Thy service and to promote Thy kingdom."

Fulness of Indwelling.

THE Fulness of the Indwelling of the Holy Spirit! The Apostle shows that absolute fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily in Jesus Christ (Col. ii. 9); and he teaches that believers may themselves be so filled with the Spirit of God, that they will become fruitful unto every good work, and be able to walk worthily of the Lord unto all pleasing. He shows that if they are in the right attitude towards God, and are willing to allow Christ to dwell in their hearts in the fulness of His power, they will be able to bring forth at all times and under all circumstances fruit well pleasing to the great Husbandman. In Jesus Christ there dwells the fulness of God—fulness of grace and of truth; and "of this fulness all" believers "have received" in measure, "and grace upon grace"—grace added to grace.

As they use to His glory what God gives, He adds more. Paul indicates that such is to be the aim of the Christian life—living to the height of the bestowment of the grace of God upon the individual, and still going on from that height increasing by increasing knowledge of God. In Eph. iii. 19 there is a remarkable expression, which, as being applicable to believers, is almost incredible. There it is stated that it is possible for believers to be filled with all the fulness of God. That is to say that, as in Jesus Christ there dwells the fulness of the Godhead bodily, it is the privilege of Christ's Body, Christ's Church, to have dwelling in it "all the fulness of God." This is the Church's high calling. This it is that Paul, writing to the Colossians, prays for, that his converts "might be filled with the knowledge of God's will in all spiritual wisdom, so that they might walk worthily of the Lord unto all pleasing."

POSSIBLE AND IMPERATIVE.

How does this filling come? The law of the Kingdom is, in this as in all things: "according to faith, so shall it be." If believers know that this is God's intention, and if they are willing to receive from God this full indwelling of the Spirit, and if, believing that He is willing to bestow, they come and ask, God says He will not withhold, but will freely give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him. There must be on man's part a willingness to receive; there must be an appropriating faith. God does the rest. If men do not believe that it is possible to be so indwelt by God, they will not ask; but if they do believe that it is possible, yea rather that it is imperative, that they should be so filled (else they are not able to do the works of God), surely they will come to Him, and on their own behalf, as well as each for the other, make request that this full indwelling may become theirs. Believers are commanded to be "filled with the Spirit."

Shortly after the day of Pentecost, when the Apostles wanted specially qualified men to do special work, they asked the Church to look out from among themselves men who were filled with the Spirit and with wisdom. So that, in the early Church there was evidently a distinction between believer and believer. Though all had received the Pentecostal blessing, the reception of the Holy Spirit in a special measure after conversion, they were not of necessity all "filled with the Spirit and with wisdom." It is noteworthy that in many cases where we read of men being filled with the Holy Spirit, it is added "and of faith," showing the link there is between appropriating faith and the fulness of the indwelling of the Spirit. But all men have not such faith. It also is the gift of the Spirit: "To another, faith, by the same Spirit" (1 Cor. xii. 9).

A UNITY OF PURPOSE.

Believers are taught to pray for an increase of faith, which is another way of asking for an increase of the gift of the Spirit of God. "By grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God." In another place it is spoken of as the gift of Christ (Eph. iv. 7). So that we have the three Persons of the Trinity referred to as doing the same thing; and, in fact, the three Persons of the Trinity are all at work, and always at work, in saving men and in sanctifying men; and they are jointly planning, so to speak, how to do that to the fullest extent possible. All they need to the salvation of men is the co-operation of those who name the Name of Christ—those who are His anointed ones sent forth to do His work. This same thought is in Eph. iv. 16, where the Apostle teaches that every part has to do its work—"according to the measure of every part"—every member playing its part and its full part; and, when each member has done that, God will give a higher part to play, or He will strengthen all the more to do that same part the more effectually and effectively.

Comparing one Scripture with another, it will be seen that being filled with the Spirit belongs not to any particular stage in the Christian experience; that is to say, that not to any Christian, because of some higher attainments, does this blessing come automatically. It is a bestowment that may be received even from infancy. It is a bestowment that may be received all along the line of Christian life, and no one can ever get beyond reach of the need of this inflowing and indwelling of God by His Spirit. It is a privilege that all can enjoy all along their Christian experience, from the day of regeneration to the day of Eternal Glory, an experience that God wants all to enjoy, and without which no one can do, to the best advantage, the work committed to his trust.

WHERE THE LIMIT LIES.

In various parts of Scripture it is taught that this giving of the fulness of the Spirit is not a measurable quantity, except in so far as the vessel which is to receive it is a measurable quantity. "God giveth not His Spirit by measure." The Apostle says: "Ye are not straitened in God, but in your own bowels." There it is where the limit lies. Stephen was full of the Holy Spirit and of faith. Barnabas was full of the Holy Spirit and of faith. In Gal. iii. 14, the Apostle says that we receive the promise of the Holy Spirit through faith. James says: "Ye have not, because ye ask not." Many have not been spiritually educated up to this point. They have been content with the blessing of regeneration without pressing on to know the full experience of the indwelt life. Hence their service has been a burden and comparatively fruitless; but is there any necessity why it should remain so? To be filled with the Spirit of God implies, of course, to be emptied of all things else. God will not share His glory with another.

When believers are absolutely possessed by the Holy Spirit, as absolutely possessed by Him as the demoniacs in the days of Christ were possessed by evil spirits, then are they in the position that God wants them to be. Demoniacal possession in the days of Christ was the devil's substitute and counterfeit for the full indwelling of the Spirit of God.

THE DEVIL'S COUNTERFEIT.

Drunkenness is spoken of by the Apostle as being the devil's substitute for the indwelling of the Spirit of God. Paul refers to that when he says, "Be not drunk with wine, but be filled with the Spirit." God wants His children to receive His Holy Spirit in the largest measure possible, and the Holy Spirit Himself yearns for absolute possession (Jas. iv. 5, R.V. marg.) just as a husband yearns, with jealousy, to possess the undivided affections of his wife. It is true to-day as it was in the days of Moses, that our God is a jealous God, and the Spirit that He hath made to indwell us yearneth for us with a jealous envy, and will never be satisfied with anything less than absolute love, absolute possession on behalf of Christ our Husband. Consequently the Spirit, speaking through James concerning the Church, says (R.V.): "Ye adulteresses;" not masculine, but feminine, as if he would say, Ye are the Lord's bride, and if your hearts are estranged from Him, ye are to Jesus Christ as an adulteress is to her husband! These are strong words, but they are the words of the Holy Spirit. Be it ours, then, to be filled with the Spirit!

Missionary Preparation.*

By Rev. J. H. MACLEAN.

BY far the most important part of our preparation may be summed up under a single heading—self-mastery. The one thing which God does not want in the foreign field is an undisciplined spirit. Self-mastery is, of course, incumbent upon every Christian, but it is of special importance for the missionary. For (1) he will be exposed to new temptations, arising from isolation, climatic conditions, and the lifting of the veil of reserve and reticence which covers so much here. (2) The missionary is as "a city set on a hill." His may be the only white household in a district which numbers its population by hundreds of thousands. His conduct is exposed to the gaze of those among whom he lives, and the least slip may undermine his influence. Remember, too, that in this self-mastery lies the power of the Gospel. By our words and deeds we can show the power behind our lives; and what these people need—and in their more thoughtful and candid moods they admit it—is the power to live a better life.

WHAT SELF-MASTERY INVOLVES.

(1) The bringing of every power of the body into subjection to Christ. Paul found it necessary to buffet his body, and the utmost watchfulness is necessary for us, too. There have been moral shipwrecks on the mission-field, and many who have not yielded have realized how strong temptation could be. "Since coming out here," writes one, "I have learned that there is a way to hell from the gate of heaven!"

(2) The mastery of temper. Meekness will be needed in dealing with our household servants; with opponents—for though in the depth of their hearts the people need Christ, the depth is often a long way down, and on the surface there may be fierce opposition to the worker's message.

(3) Patience—the mastery of the feeling of impatience or of despair. We shall need this when we find senior missionaries looking at some things in a different way from us. Perhaps we are right, for the "pattern in the mount" may have been more clearly revealed to this generation than to the last; but perhaps they are right, and our view will have to be modified by experience. In any case, let us wait, and not try to reform everything at once.

Further, we shall need patience with our native fellow-workers and with the native Church. Read the Gospels, and see how often Christ was disappointed with His disciples; and learn from the Epistles how to bear with the weakness of a Church newly gathered out of heathenism.

We need patience, too, in our daily task. Indifference is perhaps harder to bear than open opposition.

Am I discouraging anyone by putting the requirements so high? Who has time for all this—culture, study of religions, picking up information? "Who is sufficient for these things?" "Our sufficiency is of God." He will show us how to arrange our time if we put the matter into His hands.

Open Doors in South Africa.—The objects for which the Baptist South African Colonial and Missionary Aid Society was inaugurated, have commended the organization to many within and without its own denomination. The Baptist churches in South Africa are doing their utmost to cope with the openings for work, and this Society aims at assisting such efforts, financially and otherwise. Though yet in its infancy, the Society has done much to encourage the planting of new churches, and in extending the operations of those already existing. It has also helped in the furtherance of Baptist enterprises in South Africa by securing the services of ministers and others in the homeland who are fitted for work in the colony. A movement is on foot to raise immediately £1,000 for extensions of effort, both among English settlers and the coloured races. The present condition of South Africa constitutes a special call to the Christian Church. The hon. secretary is Mr. R. H. Henson, and the office of the Society at the Baptist Church House, Southampton Row, W.C.

A Missionary Family.

NOW that over a century has elapsed since the commencement of the modern missionary movement, almost all kinds of tests can be applied to it to determine its worth. One of the keenest is the judgment of the missionary's family, for on the wife and children fall some of the heaviest trials. They often know what broken or impaired health means, they feel the sharpness of separation, they endure loneliness and loss of fellowship with fellow countrymen, they bear the thousand little discomforts of the missionary's life, and have not the counterbalancing of his exertion and excitement. To the wife falls the task of making a missionary's modest salary pay for all that is needed for the house and family; and she often has to manage for some children with her and some away in England. The children have a kind of double existence as soon as they are old enough to be sent to school—the life of memory of the mission station where they were born, and the life in the mission school "at home" to which they have come. They hunger for the sight of dear faces which they may not see for years, and for the gentle touch of loving hands.

And yet, whatever the trials and drawbacks of the missionary's life, many of the children enthusiastically choose to walk in their parents' steps. The keenest trial in a family I know is that one of the sons who wished to go abroad was prevented by delicate health. The sons are sometimes to be found working at their fathers' old stations, or they go far away to other lands; the daughters, trained and well equipped, may return as a reinforcement to their parents, or go to other fields, or marry missionaries. And they say by their action that they, at any rate, believe a missionary's life to be one worth living, and the Society to which they belong to be one deserving trust. Indeed, it is affecting to hear the kind terms in which they speak of the "dear old Society," as if it were a personality. I know the London Missionary Society best, and I see among its names Miss Budden at her father's old station at Almora; George and William Cousins, brothers, and a son and a daughter of George; two sons of the able Benjamin Rice, of Bangalore; Peakes, of Madagascar; and, not to go farther, the family of the Peills, father, mother, and three sons!

The home of Rev. Jeremiah Peill was in beautiful Westmoreland, at Staveley, near Kendal; both his parents were earnest Christians, members of the Primitive Methodist Church, that Church which has done so much for the men and women of the North. Three sons chose the Congregational ministry as their sphere of labour: George, deceased, who laboured for nearly twenty-five years at Stewarton, in Scotland; John, who is at Leeds; and Jeremiah, who is in Madagascar. That one should become a missionary is not surprising, when we know that his mother was an ardent friend of missions and a zealous collector. As a boy he expressed a desire to be a soldier, and his mother replied, that "if ever he were, it should be for King Jesus." He became a Christian in his teens, and a member of the church at Winlaton-on-Tyne; from there he went to Lancashire Independent College. Mrs. Peill is the daughter of the late Rev. Thomas Davies, of Darwen.

It was while at college that Mr. Peill decided to become a missionary, and go to Madagascar if possible. This came about through a visit paid to the college by Mr. Ellis, the famous Madagascar missionary, who had the wonderful story to tell of how the Queen had put away her idols and embraced "the praying," and how, at her wish, thousands of the natives had done the same. He also had the solemn and moving fact to declare, that the poor people would come together in the places of worship they had built, longing and praying for a teacher; and how they would sometimes sit in silence and then disperse without having spoken a word. At the close of his address, Mr. Ellis strongly appealed for workers, and Mr. Peill and eight others responded.

Mr. Peill and one of his fellow-students, Mr. William Pickersgill, were sent to Madagascar to found a new station at Ambohibeloma, a very benighted neighbourhood. Finding the old people practically hopeless, they gave their time and strength to the young, planting schools and training teachers for them; and with such happy results that in about eight years they had gathered some 7,000 scholars in sixty or seventy schools, who could read, write, count, recite large portions of the Scriptures, and sing charmingly. These were days of hard work for faith and patience, and Mr. Peill wrote home saying that while there was much to encourage, they did not see things going forward as fast as they should like them to do. The people had become cleaner—always a good sign—and they had at length received the impression that the missionaries cared supremely for their good. Dr. Moffat had said to the young missionary just before he sailed that he was tall enough to give the devil a blow in the face, and in his letters home he said that, the Lord blessing his efforts, it should yet be done. And it has.

The first furlough came at the end of nine years' work, and after the furlough the first experience of the keen trial of leaving the boys behind; but when the sacrifice had been completely made, and the boys commended to God in prayer, then peace and joy filled the parents' hearts. The boys were wonderfully preserved and cared for. I have often observed this to be the case with missionaries' children. For what said our Lord: "There is no man that hath left house or brethren, . . . or children, for my sake, and for the Gospel's sake, but he shall receive a hundredfold now in this time, houses, . . . and children, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life." This has all been proved singularly true in the case of this family in this present life; and surely the remainder of the promise for the world to come will be equally fulfilled. And the Peill family are no exceptions, they are examples. Those who complain of Christian service as entailing harsh and unnatural sacrifices speak as if God neither could nor would make any compensations, whereas He has promised them, and His promise never fails. And it is in these dealings with them that His children realize most helpfully His love, His faithfulness, His sufficiency. He only seems to impoverish when He asks for a sacrifice, He really enriches.

God was now taking the lads in hand to fit them for their coming duties and life. Detached from home and from those earthly bonds that bind many of us to one place, like a limpet to a rock, they were preparing for

China with all the uncertainty, danger, and struggle awaiting them there. The Christian missionary is the true cosmopolitan to whom all lands and peoples are the same. Themselves in Africa, say, and one child in China, another in the South Seas, another in India, our missionaries can yet be happy and thankful, not because natural affection is at all abated, but because faith and obedience have their perfect work, because a hundred compensations come in, and because the hope and assurance of the eternal glory, not far distant, animates and sustains them. I am not, in saying these things, unmindful of the fact that the soldier, the sailor, often the trader, makes sacrifices, but it is not my present business to say anything of them; my object is to show that God is mindful of His servants who, for the sake of His Name, go far hence among the Gentiles.

Mr. and Mrs. Peill have been stationed, since 1884, at Ambohimanga, the ancient capital of Madagascar, and have had to pass through all the troubles of the conquest of the island by the French, the persecutions by the Jesuits, and violence and outrages by heathen bands let loose in a time of upheaval and change. They had enjoyed some of their reward in the love and fidelity of the native converts, but more compensation was to come with the arrival of the French soldiers, who, no doubt, perpetrated many and grievous sins, and introduced a sadly deteriorated manner of life. The French conquest was undoubtedly a time of sifting, and much chaff was swept away from the threshing floor; but it rejoiced the hearts of the missionaries to see the intelligent, steady faith of many. God gave them hundreds of "children" to love and cherish, according to His promise.

And even the young French soldiers became objects of loving interest. Mrs. Peill wrote home saying: "I have distributed Gospels among the soldiers, as well as a large number of tracts. I feel very sorry for these young fellows, removed from home and all helpful influences, and thrown pell-mell among godless and immoral characters, with whom they are bound to associate night and day. On Monday afternoons they have a general permission to come by twos and threes and visit us. Besides this, I have a class on week-day afternoons for teaching them Malagasy. On Sunday afternoons I get them to sing hymns from the McAll selection, while I play the concertina, leaving them to choose which pieces they prefer. Pray that the Lord may lead many of these to Himself through His Word spoken in feebleness to them while staying here." And so the French conquest of the island falls out to the furtherance of the Gospel among both Malagasy and French. "How unsearchable are His judgments, and His ways past finding out."

Dr. Arthur D. Peill, the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Peill, was brought to the knowledge of his Saviour through his mother's teaching, when she, on one occasion, visited England for her health; and with the knowledge of the love wherewith he had been loved came the desire to make it known among the heathen.

He qualified at Edinburgh as a medical man, and was appointed in 1896 by the London Missionary Society to service in the Tientsin district as a medical missionary. He went to Tsang Chou, seventy-five miles south of Tientsin, where many Christians were scattered in forty villages, eight of the villages having chapels as centres of work and worship, some of them gifts of love from individual members. The medical work was growing when the Boxer frenzy arose, and it was all broken up, the buildings destroyed, many native Christians killed, others cruelly treated, and the missionaries barely escaped with their lives. The year following, the missionaries returned, to the delight of many of the Chinese, and, alluding to their former perils, General Mei said: "If it hadn't been for your Jesus, you never could have escaped." It was a pitiful sight the missionaries returned to in their ruined buildings, but General Mei, laying his hand upon Dr. Peill's shoulder, said: "Don't you be troubled, you're bound to prosper; your Jesus is with you!" Again persecution is made to further the Gospel: the banished ones return, led and kept by "their Jesus." And the Chinaman was right when he prophesied of prosperity; for at the beginning of this year, the hospital was reopened, and some 10,000 Chinese were present on the occasion to express their congratulations, probably a goodly number of Boxers among them.

The second son of Mr. and Mrs. Peill, Ernest J., went into business after he left school, and working his way up from the very bottom to the top is believed to have had bright worldly prospects before him, when he heard the call of the Holy Spirit in his heart so distinctly that he at once turned his face towards the mission field. Like his elder brother, he went to Edinburgh, and availed himself of the advantages of the Medical Mission Hall, as well as the University, and is now in China at Tientsin, working as a qualified medical missionary in connection with the London Mission. He has his work to do and his reputation to make, but all who know him expect that, by the grace of God, he will have a useful career, be it long or short. The same burning enthusiasm characterizes him as does all his family. Both the brothers have wives like-minded with their mother, and a good wife in the mission field counts for fully as much as her husband in some respects, in other respects more.

The third son, Sydney, has graduated in the same way and at the same place as his elder brothers: and he has also, like them, taken a good degree in Christian work among our poor. London's East-end slums and the Cowgate of Edinburgh know him; which leads me to say that if anyone wishes to learn what sort of men and women our medical missionaries are, he can easily get to know by going to the Cowgate Dispensary on a Saturday night at 7.30, and joining in the prayer meeting in a quaint old church dating from pre-Reformation times; next, going with the students to an open-air service at 8; then adjourning to a hall to an indoor meeting, then staying in the church to pray with anxious souls. He will see how they bind up broken heads, wounded limbs, &c., and also how they win souls for Jesus.

Dr. Sydney Peill has accepted service in connection with the Bishop of Sierra Leone's Mission in that island, to take charge of the hospital. He frankly told the Bishop that he was a Congregationalist; nevertheless, the post was offered him, and he sailed for it last month.

I may not close this brief sketch of a family which represents the noblest features of our family religion without saying that its influence induced Miss German, a relative, to go to Coimbatore, South India, as a missionary for the London Society, so long as her health was equal to the work. Next, Rev. G. E. German, Miss German's brother, entered the ministry; and at present another nephew is training for the mission field.

Mr. and Mrs. Peill have a fourth son, who is at school, and his work and calling are so far unknown. May he prove worthy of those who have gone before! J. P. Gledstone.

Women's Work for Women in Foreign Fields.

By Mrs. A. J. GORDON, Boston, U.S.A.

IT may well be a matter of congratulation to women, that they were identified with the inception of foreign missions, for it was in the parlour of Widow Wallis' cottage that twelve Baptist ministers met, Wm. Carey being one of them, and formed the first English foreign missionary society. And we may readily believe that to the humble offering of £13 2s. 6d., which was the specie basis upon which this enterprise was launched. The widow contributed her due proportion.

But what are distinctively known as women's societies had their origin among the Christian women of London in 1834. In that year, David Abeel, a missionary of the American Board, was returning from China. He was so impressed with the condition of women in Oriental lands, and with the impossibility of reaching them by ordinary methods, that he advocated sending out single ladies, who might enter the homes into which no man could gain access. He urged that Christian women should band themselves together to promote and sustain this work of Women for Women." As a result, the "Society for the Promotion of Female Education in the East" was formed. The "Indian Female Normal School of Instruction Society" was organized in 1852, largely through the influence of the late Dowager Lady Kinnaird. Out of this sprang the "Church of England Zenana Missionary Society" and the "Zenana Bible and Medical Mission."

In 1861, the saintly Mrs. Doremus, of New York, organised the "Woman's Union Missionary Society (of America) for Heathen Lands," in which the women of six denominations were represented.

In 1868, the "Woman's Board," composed of members of Congregational churches in America, was organized in Boston. In 1869 the "Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church" was formed in the same city, and in 1871 the "Woman's Baptist Foreign Missionary Society" was also organized in Boston.

Now every denominational society has its women's auxiliary; and at the recent Ecumenical Conference held in New York, there were 562 accredited delegates, representing fifty-four women's societies connected with twelve denominations. Thirty-five of these societies have their headquarters in the United States and Canada, and nineteen of them in Great Britain and Ireland. In Queensland and Victoria also societies have been organized.

The delegates to this Conference represented an enrolled army of 1,500,000 of Christian women, and the sum of their offerings to foreign missions last year approximated 2,600,000dols.

WHAT WOMEN AT HOME CAN DO.

But the collecting of funds and their disbursement is a small part of the work of the societies at home. To maintain the interest in the circles of the local churches, to train future workers in the "Young Ladies' Bands," to gather the children into "Juvenile Societies," and enlist the babies on "Cradle Rolls," employs the energies of hundreds of devoted labourers. To arrange for public meetings and provide speakers, and especially to furnish a literature which shall adequately set forth the claims of missions upon every converted woman, and keep the home constituency in touch with the work abroad, engages the best talents of hundreds more. For each of these societies publishes from one to six monthly periodicals; while the leaflets issued on every phase of the subject are well-nigh innumerable. A modest estimate puts the publications of the women's societies for the last year at 150,000,000 pages.

The business ability displayed by the women in the management of their publishing department is illustrated in the conduct of the Woman's Missionary Friend, the monthly organ of the "W.F.M.S. of the M.E. Church" of America, It not only pays its own expenses, but from surplus receipts has established a paper for the women of India, which is printed in five different languages, and has a reading constituency of about 25,000. In fifteen years the paper has contributed 30,000dols. for the dissemination of other literature.

Single women were at first sent out to assist the over-burdened missionaries' wives. These latter, besides their home cares, sought to work along more direct missionary lines, even assuming the whole work of the station, if the leader fell. When Dr. Boardman, of Burmah, died, at the age of thirty years, his wife, Mrs. Sarah Hill Boardman, afterwards the second Mrs. Judson, continued every branch of his work. For three years, with only native helpers, she made long jungle tours; managed schools with such ability as drew official commendation from the British Government; conducted prayer-meetings and worship in the public assemblies; was fluent in three languages spoken in the country; translated "The Pilgrim's Progress" and many hymns and Scripture portions into Burmese, besides superintending the translation of the New Testament into the Peguan tongue. And many heroic missionary wives and widows have left a similar record.

But the need of assistants to teach in the native schools, and so to release the missionary's wife, and to allow her to visit from house to house, to hold conversations with inquirers in her own home, or, if free from family cares, to make jungle tours with her husband, created the first demand for single women in many stations. Through these open schoolroom doors the first unmarried missionaries made their way, until now a noble company of educators, evangelists, and physicians are at work.

8,000 WOMEN MISSIONARIES.

In 1899 there were 3,500 unmarried women connected with Protestant societies, making a total of 8,000 married and unmarried women missionaries in heathen lands.

Fidelia Fiske was the first unmarried woman to be sent to Persia. Not a woman in Oroomiah could read when she began her school with six wild little girls. At the exercises attending her return to her native land, over eight hundred women were present whose lives had been moulded into Christian womanhood.

It is about thirty years since the first mission school for girls was opened in Japan. At present about eighty are in successful operation. Besides these literary schools, there are Bible-training schools, and schools for nurses.

The girls' schools of India include every phase of school work, from the primitive village school to the women's college. It is from the Christian girls educated in these mission schools that the Government of India has to obtain female doctors and teachers in its Government schools.

It is conceded that the whole movement for female education in non-Christian lands has sprung up in connection with Christian missions; and there was comparatively little accomplished in this direction until the great movement of "Women for Women" was inaugurated through the women's societies.

A native Chinese pastor thus gives his estimate of the worth of missionary teachers: "They teach the girls to read. They teach our women to know God's doctrine. Since Divine truth is in the Bible, by teaching them to read it for themselves they also teach them propriety, justice, and modesty, cause them to lead lives of virtue and refinement, to love God, to trust in the Saviour and to be self-restrained and benevolent. They benefit the women of China by teaching them the proper way to train their daughters. They benefit national manners by opening the way that women may put away their superstitions and follow the true doctrine."

The evangelistic work of missionary ladies in the zenanas and homes of the people was supplemented at an early date by the training of native women as Bible-readers. Miss Adele M. Fielde, of Swatow, was one of the first to adopt this method; now instruction and direction of such labours is an important branch of every lady missionary's duty.

The medical work has developed wonderfully under the fostering care of the Women's Boards. Out of 160 physicians employed by the general societies of the United States, 116 are women. The W.F.M. Society of the M.E. Church of North America claims the distinction of commissioning the first woman doctor. Dr. Clara A. Swain sailed for India in 1869, and inaugurated one of the most important agencies of the century. This Society also sent the first medical women to China and Korea, and built the first hospitals for women in those countries. "It has now twenty-four medical missionaries, supports nineteen hospitals and dispensaries, and administers to more than 80,000 patients annually." The Woman's Board of the Presbyterian Church supports thirty-five lady physicians, with the hospitals, dispensaries, and visiting work which this implies.

MINISTERING TO BODY AND SOUL.

In visiting the zenanas, the lady physician is always accompanied by her Bible-woman, who reads the Bible to the other women, while the doctor attends to the patient. Each prescription has printed upon one side a Scripture text. In the waiting-rooms of the hospitals and dispensaries, the Bible-women read and expound the Bible to those who are waiting their turn for consultation and give them some statement of Christian doctrine or some passage from God's Word.

The response of the women in heathen lands to the advances of their Christian sisters has proved that the same Spirit who stirs the believer to herald the message of grace prepares hearts to receive it. The touch of the life-giving Christ has kindled new aspirations in their hearts, and the story of rescued womanhood comes from every quarter of the globe. The position of the wife in Christian households has so profoundly impressed even the heathen that many heathen parents try to obtain Christian husbands for their daughters. The alleviation of the lot of widows, the value of a girl baby, and the diminishing of infanticide, are visible results of the teaching of the religion of Christ in the homes. The cleanliness and general outward improvement among the converts, enable a stranger at once to distinguish a Christian village from a heathen one.

TROPHIES OF GRACE.

Pundita Ramabai, a superbly-gifted, finely-educated, thoroughly consecrated woman, herself a widow, has established a school for the training of widows which is destined entirely to revolutionize the wretched customs hitherto prevailing in the treatment of this class in India, while her prodigious work among the famine sufferers, in rescuing the forsaken women and girls, can only be explained on the theory that her little frail body is a pliant vehicle for the use of the Holy Spirit.

Miss Lilavati Singh was one of the most striking figures at the last Œcumenical Conference. Ex-President Harrison said of her, "That if he had given a million of dollars to foreign missions, and the result was the production of one such character, he should consider the money well invested." She is professor in the Women's College at Lucknow; and her brilliant, logical address, exquisite English, and charming personality, gave to many a new idea of what the higher education could develop in Oriental women.

Dr. Hu King Eng took her medical diploma in Philadelphia, and returned to China as missionary of the M.E. Society. She is granddaughter of one of the earliest native Christians and was baptized in her native land. She is now known as the "Miracle Lady." She and Dr. Marguerite Wong were appointed by the Chinese Government as delegates to the Women's Congress held in London in 1899.

A Japanese Christian woman, Mrs. Yajima, President of the National W.C.T.U. of Japan, has presented to the Japanese Diet for seven consecutive years a petition in the interests of purity, asking that men and women receive the same punishment for social crimes. It was rejected every year until 1897, when it was passed by the Upper House. One of the large daily newspapers of Japan says:—"Our forty millions to-day have a higher standard of morality than we have ever known. There is not a boy or girl throughout the empire who has not heard of the 'one-man, one-woman' doctrine. When we inquire the cause of this great moral advance, we can find it in nothing less than the religion of Jesus."

The Queen of Manua, a group of islands in the Samoan Archipelago, thus gives her testimony to the value and authority of the Gospel of Love as revealed in the Scriptures. Speaking at the dedication of a church in her capital, she expressed her gratitude and that of her people for the blessings of Christianity, and closed with: "My last word to you is to urge you to accept and obey Christ's new commandment, which He gave to His disciples, and to us, and to all: 'Love one another.' How can a people be blessed if God's Word is not obeyed?"

Thus is the light being given to them that sat "in darkness and in the shadow of death," and their feet guided into "the way of peace."

"He Leadeth Me."

By Miss LUCY A. BENNETT.

WE are creatures of imitation, and therein we are weak, and confess that we are weak. There is no moral strength in following each other. That the world's votaries should follow the fashions of the world is no longer a marvel; we are so accustomed to it.

The fashion may be unreasonable, but it suffices for many that it is the fashion: and it would seem as if many secretly share the outspoken acknowledgment of one: "I would rather die than be out of the fashion." The world will "love its own," and we have grown accustomed to a slavish following of its axioms and its decrees.

More surprising, more serious, and more sad is the reflection that in religious life the same principle largely prevails. Men and women—yea, even those prominent in Christian work, are content, too often, to take their views of Christian service, and even of Christian truth at second hand. Leaders, so-called, are themselves led by stronger, bolder spirits. The statement needs no proof. Illustration and confirmation of it appear on every hand. How many "beliefs" are founded on the beliefs of some great teacher! How much of the modern doubt is traceable to the influence of one or two prominent doubters!

Is there not a tendency to take up our Bibles, primed with the explanations of some leading minister or teacher, rather than with a simple desire to listen to the words of God for ourselves?

There may be no fault in the explanation; all honour may rightly attach to the minister or teacher, but, all the same, the attitude of the soul is not right if we are not prepared to

"HEAR WHAT GOD THE LORD WILL SPEAK."

How grandly different from all this the experience of those, who, like the Psalmist can humbly but rejoicingly say, "He leadeth me." Twice in the Shepherd-Psalm these words of holy confidence are heard, "He leadeth me." Was the path of David so simple, so easy, so free from perplexity that the words fell easily and lightly from his lips? Nay. Of all the histories in the Bible there are few, if any, which record as many perplexing circumstances as that of David. Conspiracy, treachery, anarchy, all these had done their worst. Foes abroad and foes at home had beset him, and the foeman in his own breast most of all.

"Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown," was undoubtedly true of David's varied experiences; and, in some respects, he was a weak man. Few have fallen lower than David fell—left to himself. But his strength lay in the fact that he ever appealed to God. "God is the strength of my heart" was a veritable confession of actual fact. "I come to thee in the name of the Lord of Hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast defied," was the clarion cry of his early youth's great venture (1 Sam. xvii. 45).

Driven from his kingly throne, and hidden in a cave from the unworthy son who sought his life, we find him still appealing to God. Not to Ahithophel did he turn for counsel; not to the valiant warriors who even then would have risked all for him; but we overhear his cry to Jehovah: "O send out Thy light and Thy truth: let them lead me; let them bring me to Thy holy hill, and to Thy tabernacles" (Psa. xliii. 3). And by that light and that truth he was led; so that he could rejoicingly reiterate: "He leadeth me."

Listen, again, to the agonized confession of a heart searched and convicted of terrible secret sin, "Against THEE, THEE only, have I sinned" (Psa. li. 4)—the sin against others outweighted by the one appalling Presence. And, once again, as the leading sinner in public national sin, when the threefold choice is offered him, as to which punishment should follow, there is the same characteristic choice. "Let us now fall into the hands of the Lord: for His mercies are great, and let us not fall into the hand of man" (2 Sam. xxiv. 14). David realized, as only the whole-hearted and true-hearted realize, that, whate'er befall, the Lord's will is always the best.

Too often "the will of the Lord be done" is a cry forced from agonized lips by the overwhelming sense of the duty of submission, or, even worse, from the absolute certainty that no effort of ours can avert the calamity with which we too often connect the will of God.

Oh, let us, by a simple trust in the unspeakable love of our heavenly Father, seek to rise above these low views of God's will! Let us remember (and our own experience will furnish proof if we "forget not all His benefits") that it is "the good and perfect will of God" to which we bow. "We have known and believed the love that God hath to us" (1 John iv. 16). Let us then practically rejoice in every new development of that love; and even when its leadings are obscure to natural sense, let us still exultantly confess, "He leadeth me," as the very crown of our rejoicing. How morally grand the position! How impregnable, too!

WHEN PATHS DIVERGE.

Perhaps there is no question upon which the sensitive conscience is more exercised than upon the matter of Divine guidances. With the earnest desire to follow the Lord's leading, there may yet seem at times no definite light as to which of two paths we should take.

May not this sometimes be permitted in order that we should learn to wait and listen for the guiding voice? May it not be that our heavenly Leader would have us the more earnestly cry to Him: "Send out Thy light and Thy truth; let them lead me"?

It may be taken as a rule without a single exception that God never guides in paths contrary to the Word of God. No "impressions," no dreams, no circumstances whatsoever can ever constitute a Divine guidance to do that which the written Word plainly forbids. That the path is sometimes obscure, is not surprising if we remember that we walk by faith and not by sight. Also, He guides, often, in "paths," and a path is often a narrow way with no room for the busy throng, although with room always for our Guide to walk beside us.

Be not dismayed to find that no broad stretch of road opens out before you, as you journey on. If there is light for the next step, and our Guide is there—and He is there—that is enough. "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God" (Rom. viii. 14). And may we not humbly believe that it is also true, that as many as are sons and daughters of Jehovah will be led by the Spirit?

"He leadeth me" may be the cry of faith, blindly trusting the promise. And the leading may sometimes be through scenes of sorrow and distress—deep waters or "the valley." But to those who obediently follow the Divine track, through seeming darkness, there shall arise light; and "He leadeth me" shall be the glad song of assured triumph.

O there are heavenly heights to reach in many a stormy place,
Where the poor tempted child of God lies blindly on his face;
Lies languishing for life divine, which he can never see
Till he goes forward at Thy sign, and trusts himself to Thee.

Be it ours to go forward in that blest company, in full and glad trust!

Are You a Drone?

By Dr. L. E. HERTSLET.

BY long-accepted custom and well-recognized usage, it is apparently regarded as the normal and reasonable condition of things that there should be in every self-respecting and properly-organized Christian community a large and increasing percentage of drones—that is, people who, while making a profession of Christianity, do nothing for the spread of Christ's Kingdom at home or in foreign lands.

You have not understood the right use of your time, your money, or your possessions. You are a father of a family perhaps, a city man, and your life may be summarized thus—food, newspaper, business, chess, and bed.

You work all day, for you must provide for your family; you read the newspaper right through, for you must see what is going on in the world; you spend your evenings at chess, for you must have recreation; you take a long time over your meals, for you must eat to live; and you retire to bed with a feeling of calm complacency. Where does God come into your life? What are you doing to help the great world outside? What influence do you have for good over your family? Does the newspaper oust the Bible and hinder family prayer? Could you leave your game of chess at a moment's notice to go and speak with a man who was in trouble about his spiritual condition?

These are straight questions, and demand plain answers from an honest man. Perchance you are one of those who declaim in loud tones concerning the evils of the drink traffic, yet you never even stretched out a little finger to help the man in your office, whom you knew to be gradually giving way to the demon drink; and now where is he? You judged him, perhaps you pitied him, but you did not help him.

You were once persuaded to go to a missionary meeting where you listened with a semblance of interest, at the close fumbled in your pocket for a sixpence, and went home satisfied that you had done your duty. Sitting down to supper, you criticised the clothes and manner of the "good little man" who "meant well," but was "such a poor speaker," forgetting that the shabbiness of his clothes was due to the fact that you and others had not done your duty to the cause of missions, and that probably the "good little man" has done more in one year towards the uplifting of his fellow-men than you have done in a lifetime.

PRIVILEGE AS WELL AS RESPONSIBILITY.

Some of you have never tasted the joys of being useful. You do not know the pleasure of really helping other people, you have not recognised the privilege of service, and do not understand the responsibilities of life. "But," say you, "there is really nothing that I can do. I have no talents and no opportunities." Then God made a mistake when He made you, for He never yet made a man or woman who was not meant to be of some use in the world! Remember that USEFULNESS IS THE RENT WE PAY FOR A PLACE IN THE WORLD; and some are owing a large amount of back rent. God has endowed us every one with talents varying in their extent and nature. If you are a Christian, "you are not your own, for you are bought with a price." Your time, your energy, your talents, your money, your possessions, are all Christ's, to be used for His glory and the good of other people.

Reverently, humbly, yet emphatically, let us take on our lips and live out in our lives the words of the Son of God, "I must be about My Father's business." I must—my solemn duty. There is no other way of fulfilling the purpose for which I was sent into the world. I must—my glorious privilege. This, God helping me, I will do, at all times and in all circumstances, in all places, to all peoples, by all means. I will do His business in His way, and to me will be the blessing, to others will be the benefit, and to Him will be the glory—both now and through eternity.

The Things that Pertain unto Life and Godliness.

IN previous Papers we have dealt with the work of the Holy Spirit as He influences men from the outside. We have seen that it is He who has inspired the Holy Scriptures and speaks to men therein. We have seen that His speaking thus to men may be resisted or ignored, and that He Himself and His name may be blasphemed. On the other hand, we have seen that His message may be received by men, by believing which man is born again, born from above, and is no longer a natural man but becomes a man spiritual. We have seen that the Holy Spirit may come down upon all such believers in His fulness, bringing with Him manifold gifts and graces which become theirs in power, on their being appropriated by faith. We have seen that the whole body of believers are those that are expected to represent Christ—witnessing and working together with the Holy Ghost—so as to continue the work that Jesus began. We have seen also that the same Holy Spirit desires to take control of all those who have thus believed unto salvation, and seeks to make them absolutely His servants to do God's will.

We will now consider the work of the same Spirit as

from the heart; as He indwells and fills, equipping for that holy life which God expects all believers to live. In considering these things we shall see what provision God has made to enable His children to live a godly life, and how they are to avail themselves of it.

We read that the Divine Power hath given unto believers all things that pertain unto life and godliness (2 Pet. i. 3). There is absolutely no withholding on God's part. Everything that the Divine Power could provide has been provided, and placed at the disposal of all who are one with Christ through faith, in order to enable them to live a godly life. But all this provision is laid up for them in Christ Jesus. Apart from Him, believers can neither be nor do. All spiritual power is in Him as in a reservoir, and believers can only avail themselves of it through unbroken communion with Christ.

This power comes to us in the form of bestowments of God's Spirit, measure by measure, outflowing from the life of the risen Saviour. But believers must appropriate by faith, being assured that it is for them they must ask and receive in ever-fuller measure. Is there not strong encouragement to ask when we consider the words of Christ Himself? If man, being evil to begin with, knows how to give good gifts unto his children, how much more will the Father in Heaven give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him (Luke xi. 13)? The word "being" in this verse is a peculiar one, and means "being originally," emphasizing the fact that if men that are wrong at heart by nature are so anxious and so glad to give good things to their children, how much more readily, how much more generously, will God, in whom there is no evil, out of His infinite goodness, give the Holy Spirit to His children. Having freely given His own Son, will He not also with Him freely give us all things?

AN UNCTION FROM THE HOLY ONE.

This reception of God's Spirit is sometimes spoken of as an anointing, which anointing was true in measure of Jesus Himself—a fact which shows the close relationship there is between His representatives now and Himself as God's representative then. In Acts x. 38 and iv. 27, it is Jesus the Servant that is spoken of as being anointed. The same word is used of the anointing of believers. Compare 1 John ii. 27. "The same anointing abideth in you."

Note the phrase. The anointing here spoken of, and the anointing spoken of with respect to Jesus as a man, is something within. Believers have this anointing from the Holy One, the indwelling presence (1 John ii. 20). The Spirit's presence within believers insures their being able to understand (if they will but submit to His teaching) all that has been revealed in the word of God; and empowers them to do all that is necessary to please God.

Lest there should be any doubt as to the meaning of this anointing, let us turn to 2 Cor. i. 21. "He that stablisheth us with you in Christ and anointed us, is God, seeing that He both sealed us and gave us the earnest of the Spirit" (marg). God establisheth believers into Christ by giving to them the earnest or first-fruits of the Holy Ghost. And having begun that good work, having made to believers that first distribution of the Spirit which is common to all who believe, God is prepared to give them all other things in greater and greater measure, as they are able to receive the Holy Spirit, and as they need Him for service. Without this first bestowment of the Spirit of God within, man is natural and not at all saved; but with this initial work of God, through His Spirit upon their hearts, they are transformed from men natural to be men spiritual, the children of God, joint heirs with Jesus Christ.

STAGES OF SPIRITUAL EXPERIENCE.

From the teaching of Scripture it is plain that the bestowment of the Holy Spirit upon believers is something that can go on from stage to stage in ever-increasing measure. First, by the Spirit men are born again. That is salvation begun. By that same Spirit, at the moment of regeneration, they are sealed as God's children. After that, they may receive the Holy Spirit in fuller measure, from time to time increasing, according to their capacity to receive. As emergency arises, they may be filled and filled again and again, as the Apostles were. Is it right, then, that men should not ask for further inflowings of the same Spirit? or that they should not seek Him on special occasions to manifest Himself in fuller power? Every believer has the Spirit of God in some measure, but every believer is not at all times filled with the Spirit, although it is the privilege of the believer to be so filled as to be absolutely under the control of the Holy Ghost. And this is the great difference between believer and believer. Some are highly honoured by God to the conversion of men; some are never so blessed. Is not the sole cause that the former have allowed God to bring them into such close contact with the Holy Spirit, and the Holy Spirit to take such possession of them, in heart, life and work, that He, through them, can convince men of sin?

THE POWER OF AN INDWELLING TRINITY.

A last thought. The Holy Spirit is in all believers, and the Holy Spirit dwells within, working within, to the extent of their letting. Comparing 2 Tim. i. 14 with Rom. viii. 9-11, it will be seen that the Holy Spirit indwelling is there called the Spirit of God indwelling.

Again, in Eph. iii. 17, Christ is spoken of as indwelling. In Eph. ii. 22 there is another expression—God's habitation. So that in various portions of the Scripture this fact is stated, that the Three-One God—Father, Son, and Holy Spirit—are indwelling the genuine believer, so that nothing should be impossible to believers if the Holy Ghost possesses them fully and if they are absolutely at His disposal.

What is there that such cannot do through Him? It is not they that either will or work, but God that dwelleth in them. Christ also refers to the same thing in John xiv. 23. "We will come," Father and Son together. And in His prayer in John xvii. 21, 22 he says, "Thou, Father, art in me and I in Thee." The Father in Christ and Christ in believers.

What limit is there to the possibilities of the believer, if this indwelling Trinity is allowed to use him as the Spirit wants to, yielding himself as an instrument of God? It is through believers that the world is to be saved; but it is not by their working but by God working in them. The world is not yet saved. The world, in large measure, is not even being saved, simply because the body of Christ has disembodied the Spirit. Some are in very marked measure used in the conversion of sinners, because they let God in, and through them the Spirit does the work of saving men. If men believe and receive, God can and will use them.

Missionary Association.

FROM FAR AND NEAR.

FROM CHINA.

THE object, the theme, and the style of the "Letter" must have been made according to the pattern showed to you in the Mount; and the reading of it will, I am sure, bring us into "the holiest of all," where we may have constant communion with God.—J. A. C.

FROM JAPAN.

I learn of the formation of the Missionary Association for "all missionaries who seek to walk in the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel." As, by the grace of God, I am one of these happy persons, I should very much like to be taken into the membership, so as the better to keep in touch with the blessed Holy Ghost movement of our day.—A. O.

FROM CANADA.

We were much pleased and, I trust, benefitted by your "Letter." We cannot hear often, as we have only three mails a year. I should be glad if you would send me a book or two specially on this subject, and calculated to lift us up in our isolated position, to lead to our being filled with the Holy Spirit, and to the same benefits for our people.—J. A. M.

FROM CENTRAL AMERICA.

It is so nice to come into touch with someone who really desires to help the missionary. For nearly ten years I have laboured here, and till now my experience has been that I have had to write, write, write, and write, in order to keep friends interested in me and my work. I praise God for having put it into your heart to commence the Association, and pray that you will be much used in this line.—J. H.

FROM CAPE COLONY.

My people are all Kaffirs scattered about over a mountainous country, and I have six separate little churches in which day schools are held. They are separated from each other by from six to eight miles, and this involves a good deal of travelling. I am heartily in sympathy with the new Association you have formed, and am fully convinced of the need of the Holy Spirit's power coming down on our mission work and upon the missionaries. I trust your united prayers with ours may result in a rich ingathering of souls,—M. H. W.

Your "Letter" has been sent me from America. Please register my name. I am in charge of the young women missionaries of the Dutch Reformed Church, and feel the need of such prayer. I thank God for such an organization. It is much needed, and is on the right track. We have been having wonderful times of blessing, and are believing for a great revival throughout South Africa.—C. E. W.

FROM INDIA.

Theosophists rant a great deal that theirs is a psychologic or rationalistic religion. Critically examined, this hollow structure collapses. This preposterous system is constituted of assumptions, unsound premises, unsound processes of reasoning with unsound conclusions, and above all the most absurd pretentions for rationally explaining anything and everything. It pretends to include Christianity within its range, but in its heart of hearts it is its irreconcilable enemy, as it really is subversive of Christian doctrines and antagonistic to Bible teachings. Its introduction into this country is a serious obstruction to evangelization. It began its work with an exhibition of spiritualistic phenomena, produced a great sensation, and attracted large numbers to it, but when such phenomena were exposed as mere tricks and nothing more, spiritualism was thrown into the background; and at present rationalism with all its preposterous pretensions stands in the foreground.—R. C.

Villa Helvetia, Mentone.—A large number of ladies in delicate health, or suffering from what might prove to be the early stages of consumption, visited Mentone during last winter, and deriving benefit from their sojourn at Villa Helvetia returned to their homes in various parts of the world, giving thanks to God for the institution. The latest report of the home contains many testimonies to the good resulting from a visit to Helvetia. A pastor in Bulgaria writes: "It is a little more than a week since our daughter reached home. I waited to see what her true condition was. And now, watching her day by day, without any cough or any pain whatever, I declare that the results are marvellous, and that Helvetia has saved her life. We at home, and all her relatives and friends that have seen her, unite in the opinion that Lülea never looked so healthy." Miss Dudgeon, Les Grottes, Mentone, Alpes Maritimes, France, supplies information concerning the home.

The English and American Newspaper Funds are only touching the surface of the misery.

Every mail from Jamaica tells of grievous wreck of Churches, Chapels, and dwelling-houses, and very urgent entreaties for money and clothing reach The Missionary Pence Association.

The REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A., writes:—

"Would it be at all possible for you to open a Subscription List for these poor people, or in any way to supply them with help in this hour of need? I will gladly send you a donation."

The M. P. A. will gladly distribute gifts through many responsible ministers of Jamaican Churches. See Oct. issue of "ALL NATIONS."

Cheques and Postal Orders should be made payable to The Secretary, W. Roger Jones, or sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN, for "M. P. A. Jamaica Hurricane Fund."

LACK of FUNDS has produced a CRISIS in the history of

THE MISSIONARY PENCE ASSOCIATION, AND INFORMATION BUREAU.

Inaugurated at the Keswick and Mildmay Conventions of 1886.

Over £36,000 has already been distributed.

The Society has done a splendidly practical work in assisting over 250 Missionaries, evangelistic, medical and educational, to carry the words of Truth and Love to ALL NATIONS, and by means of its Carey's Pence Cards has provided them with a measure of support.

So many openings for sending the Gospel to hitherto unevangelised districts are regretfully declined or shelved for lack of Annual Subscriptions or Legacies.

Its work is quite UNIQUE, and no other Society is attempting to meet these world-wide needs.

The Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., writes:—

"I congratulate you on the opportunities which you have of helping so many people."

All communications should be addressed to the Secretary, W. Roger Jones.

Great Success has attended the two branches of the work of this Society, for hundreds of orphans formerly supported are now able to work for themselves, while in one city alone 700 poor widows now earn their own living by making handkerchiefs for business firms; but hundreds of widows and orphans still need to be supported and taught.

IS THE DISTRESS STILL GREAT?

Not many weeks ago, when a lady, who was visiting Armenia, stood for a moment alone in the streets of Van, in an instant, as if by magic, she was surrounded by a crowd of gaunt women and children, with pinched hunger-bitten faces, all stretching out eager hands for help. Rags—so patched and torn that hardly two inches were of the same colour—were their only clothing; in vain they tried to hide their nakedness. A biscuit flung to each sent them off like dogs to eat their treasure in some corner.

And such is always a common sight where Turkish rule prevails.

Donations in aid of the above should be sent to HECTOR MUNRO FERGUSON, Esq., Hon. Treasurer Friends of Armenia, 47, Victoria Street, Westminster, S.W. Cheques to be crossed "London and Westminster Bank."

SPEAKING FIGURES!

250 Towns Visited!

2,561 Evangelical Meetings Held!!

73,040 Protestant Books Distributed!!!

The above figures bear eloquent testimony to the great work accomplished during the past twelve months by Kensit's Wickliffe Preachers. The hundreds who have been reclaimed from sin and error can never be tabulated in round figures, but will be revealed in the great day of the Lord. Our preachers go to the people "Holding forth the Word of Life," and "Speaking the Truth in Love." At the present time, through the general depression, our funds are nearly exhausted, and we plead with those whose hearts the Lord hath touched, to supply the necessary funds, that this branch of the Lord's work may be greatly extended. Full reports of the work appear in our monthly illustrated organs—"The Churchman's Magazine," and "Beacon Fire"—and any further particulars will gladly be given by the Editor of "The Christian," or

The Woes of Macedonia.

DEAR SIR,—Recently the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society sent out special inquiries to such mission stations in Macedonia and Bulgaria as are aided by grants; first as to calamities, woes, and desolations which had befallen the Christian populations, and next as to the readiness of our American brethren to undertake the administration of any funds entrusted to us for this special object. Their answers are now reaching me. They appear in a circular being sent by the American Mission to the British and American Representatives in Constantinople.

"Without a canvas of the districts in question, we do not care to make any estimate of the number of people who are houseless, or suffering from lack of food, clothing, medical attendance, &c. We are morally certain, however, that the number runs up into the thousands. In some places they are living on roots and grass, now at the close of the harvest. What will they do later? We have the testimony of eye-witnesses that in some places the wounded are lying without medical attention, with no remedies or palliatives within reach of their friends. . . The thought of whole districts weltering in blood, without a single doctor or trained nurse to relieve the suffering, is too brutally revolting to be tolerated in this twentieth century." As to the distribution of our funds, the reply is: "The American missionaries will undertake the distribution of any funds you can supply through us."

The readers of The Christian very largely helped us in the Armenian Massacre Relief for Asia Minor, which was administered for us by the missionaries of the American Board, and any Macedonian Massacre Relief Funds sent to us will be expended by our aided missions in the same wise, careful, and sympathetic way. Immediate contributions are earnestly solicited, and may be sent direct to the hon. sec. of Bible Lands Missions Aid Society, 7, Adam Street, Strand, London, W.C., or to the editor of The Christian.—Yours sincerely,

W. A. Essery, Hon. Sec.

The following touching appeal has just been addressed by the Protestant churches in Bulgaria to the Christian churches in Great Britain, the United States of America, and elsewhere:—

"According to the consular and other authentic and trustworthy reports, the Turkish bloodthirsty authorities, by wholesale massacres and the plundering and burning of the villages, are rapidly and systematically exterminating the entire Christian population. The region around the city of Monastir already presents a fearful and ghastly picture; through bloodshed the country is depopulated, while hundreds of villages are still burning or smoking.

"But the saddest thing of all is the strange conduct of European diplomacy. Some of the Powers are going so far as to encourage openly the Turk to go on in the extermination of the defenceless Christians, while the rest of them are playing the part of lukewarm spectators, just as they did during the Armenian massacres in Constantinople and Asia Minor. The present assassination of thousands of Christians and the destruction of hundreds of villages with their Christian church buildings is a triumph of Mohammedan fanaticism over the Christianity and Christian civilization of the twentieth century. Shall our Christian faith be trodden under foot by Mohammedanism? Will God's people remain silent?

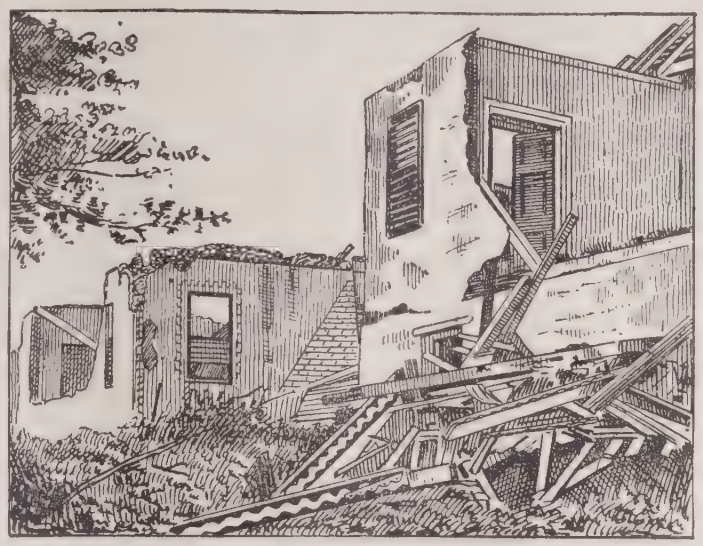
"Through the native Bulgarian Evangelical Society, which for twenty-eight years has been a power for good among the European provinces of Turkey, the Protestant churches in Bulgaria pray you most earnestly to raise your united voices and ask your Governments to take such timely measures, with the other Christian states of Europe, as shall put a stop to the horrible atrocities and the rapid extermination of the Christian population in Macedonia. An interference on the part of European diplomacy is the only effective measure against the present slaughter, and also the only means of introducing peace, order and good government."

"Friends" taking action.

A meeting of Friends was held last week at Devonshire House, to consider the position of affairs in the East. Mr. Noel Buxton, who was present by invitation, gave much useful information respecting the suffering existing in various parts of Macedonia and among the refugees in Bulgaria. The subject was commended to the attention of members throughout the country, and a committee was appointed to receive funds and dispense them through the Macedonian Relief Committee, or in such other way as may appear best.

The Calamity in Jamaica.

FULLER particulars of the devastation wrought by the terrible cyclone in August have come to hand. Mr. A. H. Baynes, secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, has received a pathetic letter from Rev. P. Williams, of Bethel Town. The writer is secretary of the Jamaica Baptist Union, and summarizes the damage to the churches of the denomination as follows:—Thirty-three chapels destroyed and twenty damaged, six mission houses destroyed and eleven damaged, seventeen school-rooms and eight teachers' residences destroyed, four school-rooms damaged, five out-stations and sixty class-houses destroyed. The loss cannot be less than £15,000.



RUNAWAY BAY BAPTIST CHURCH AND MISSION HOUSE.

It is computed that at least 10,000 families have lost their homes and all they contained. "We are exceedingly thankful," continues Mr. Williams, "for the liberality that has been displayed towards Jamaica in this new time of need. But when all has been done that can be done in this way there will remain two classes of claimants upon Christian sympathy: (1) The pastors of the churches upon whom this calamity has fallen so heavily; (2) The communities that have lost their chapels and other buildings."

We recently published an extract from a letter of Rev. G. H. Lee (Colonial Missionary Society), in which he described the calamity which had overtaken Jamaica. The accompanying illustration shows the effects of the cyclone on the church and mission house at Runaway Bay. The work there was commenced in 1836 (two years after the first missionaries of the London Missionary Society settled in the island) by Mr. H. Russell, catechist and schoolmaster, and has ever since had a succession of devoted workers. It is at present in charge of Mr. Lea, of First Hill, who drove over to the station as soon as the storm abated. He found not only the roof off the building, but the sides and one end down, and every seat and bench broken to pieces. The mission house, in which the catechist and his wife lived, suffered equally, and they were helped out of the ruins in the middle of the night. Happily they escaped with their lives, but all else was lost. Their experience was unusually painful. The illustration may be taken as typical of a very large number of cases throughout the island, all denominations more or less suffering. Mr. Lea estimates that at least £1,000 will be needed to put his own station in thorough repair. The address of the Colonial Missionary Society is 22, Memorial Hall, E.C.

The Church of England has suffered a loss which it is expected will run into five figures. Rev. Thomas Harty, rector of Christ Church, Port Antonio, relates the story of the appalling destruction. Concerning his own church Mr. Harty writes: "The roof on the side fronting the sea has been ripped off for about thirty feet, and the remaining part is so much damaged that when the rain comes it pours in as from a jar. What makes the case more painful is that the church was lately restored by the alms of the congregation, of whom the greater part are labouring people. The girls' school, recently built at a cost of over £400, is a wreck, while the parsonage is in such a state that I am afraid when the heavy rains come we shall have to leave."

The Salvation Army has also suffered much loss of property. Lieutenant-Colonel Rauch, who is in charge of the Army's missionary and social work there, writes that eight of the halls and quarters were destroyed, and four slightly damaged. The officers have all escaped injury, although a good many have had to suffer exposure. As soon as the hurricane had spent itself a relief party, including Adjutant Sinden, made the journey from Kingston to Port Antonio. Adjutant Lieb describes the journey as very distressing, and one in which heartrending and ghastly sights were to be seen at almost every turn. The train could only take the expedition a part of the way, but knowing the object of their mission the railway authorities conveyed them the rest of the journey on a trolley.

"On arriving at the scene of distress," he says, "our people at once commenced to help to make the temporary hospital a bit more comfortable by putting partitions between the men and women sufferers. In Kingston itself our people have not suffered very much; but the general impression is that there will be great distress throughout the eastern portion of Jamaica during the next three or four months."

Psalm xxiii.

The Lord is my shepherd, why then should I fear?
He knows all my wants, and He ever is near;
As ready to hear me whenever I call,
As able to help me whate'er may befall.

He leads me in pastures that always are green;
By the soft-flowing waters His steps may be seen;
He restoreth my soul, for we've all gone astray,
And helps me to walk in His own blessed way.

Though I walk through the vale of dark shadows, no fear
Shall haunt me, for Jesus my Saviour is near;
His rod and His staff they shall comfort me still,
As I follow His steps and submit to His will.

He spreads out a table and makes me His guest,
In the presence of foes He withholds not His best;
With the oil of gladness my head He anoints,
And the cup of salvation for me He appoints.

His goodness and mercy my steps shall attend
All the days of my life, till my journey shall end;
And then He will take me to rest in His love,
And to dwell in His presence for ever above.

Moravian Missions.

RECENT reports from the mission field, where the Moravian Brethren are engaged, present encouraging features. They tell of converts being added to the Church in many lands. In taking account of some of these the eighty-sixth annual report of the London Association in Aid of the Moravian Missions states :—

"Specially gratifying is it to hear that in our new stations among the heathen in North Queensland, Central Africa, Central Asia, and Central America candidates are already coming forward for baptism. In our last issue we mentioned that the first-fruits of the work at Kitunda in Unyamwesi, had been gathered in ; and now we are glad to be able to state that at Weipa, the second station among the degraded blacks of North Queensland, Rev. E. Brown reports the baptism of two natives. At our most northerly station in Nicaragua, the first-fruits are also reported, and the latest news from Nyasa, the older of our two missions in East Central Africa, shows that the work there is growing, and that our missionaries are reaping the fruits of their long and arduous toil. At Kalatse, a comparatively new station in Tibet, the missionary is able to tell of the first candidates for baptism. All this shows us that not only have new doors been opened in answer to prayer, but that the heathen are now pressing in."

In addition to the good tidings from Unyamwesi, equally encouraging news comes from the older stations in the Nyasa district, telling of active progress. Apart from the stations in Unyamwesi, there are now seven mission stations and one preaching place.

"The total number of baptized Christians is 271, and of those under instruction 1,005. In the neighbourhood of Kilwa there are from ten to twenty thousand people living. Near the other stations the numbers average from three to five thousand. In the neighbourhood of our stations there are in all from twenty-five to forty-two thousand natives. There is, therefore,

A LARGE FIELD FOR MISSIONARY WORK."

Letters which have been received from Labrador report progress in the erection of the new hospital at Okak. Dr. Hutton has happily recovered from his serious illness, has married, and returned to his station. Respecting other matters at the more northerly stations, Bishop Martin, the superintendent, writes that the reports from these breathe a spirit of joyful hopefulness. "The fruits of the Word preached, and of the work of the Divine Spirit, are everywhere visible. But, of course, there are dark shadows here and there."

Communications from Alaska are particularly cheering. "On the Iundra we are welcomed in all the villages. In some we can only preach, the people belonging to the Greeks. One village, which we visited last winter—the priest not having come there for several years—now has a helper whom the priest appointed after he heard of our visit. Yet we know that our preaching is not lost. In one village, where the people are all Greeks, the men went out and called everyone into the Kashim, and there for a long time they listened. We have our mission work, not only among the natives, but also among the white people. There are many opportunities to speak to them, and we have them from different denominations; yet they listen to the truth. So it will be if canneries are established, as is most likely. In one way, it will be a hindrance to the progress of the Kingdom of God; on the other hand, it will increase our responsibility. We shall have to care for the white people too."

The committee are praying earnestly that the curtailing which now seems inevitable, through lack of support, may not be realized. They are hopeful that friends of the Moravians, to whom the whole Church owes so much, may not only be led to give and pray, but lead others to realize the responsibility of stewardship. God only knows how great will be the harvest and ingathering. The address of the society is 7, New Court, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

Peace Congress at Rouen.

A CENTURY ago slavery seemed as deeply rooted an evil as war does now; but through the efforts of such Christian men as Clarkson and Wilberforce, it has now been abolished throughout professing Christendom, and only remains to mark the inferiority of Mohammedan, Confucianist, and idolatrous religions. Why should not another century, or even less, see the overthrow of the kindred evil of war?

The International Peace Congress of this year has been held at Rouen, a city which, by the exquisite beauty of its Gothic churches and other buildings, and by its many historic associations, especially those connected with Joan of Arc, is peculiarly attractive to the visitor. The Congress has been attended by delegates from Great Britain, the United States, Germany, Sweden, Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, Austria, Hungary, Russia, and Italy, besides numerous delegates from different parts of France. The proceedings were characterized by a remarkable spirit of harmony, which has not always—alas for poor human nature!—been a feature even of peace congresses. The prayers offered at a little prayer-meeting held by a few French and English Christians each morning have been abundantly answered in this respect.

The votes of the Congress with regard to the Armenian and Macedonian massacres, the Venezuelan affair, and other kindred topics will have been reproduced by the political Press. I will confine myself to a few points of special interest to Christians. For the first time in a peace congress held on the Continent of Europe, there was present in addition to those from England and America, in the person of several French pastors and other Protestant workers. A Christian lady from Havre was one of the vice-presidents, a pastor was one of the secretaries, and the pastor of the Reformed Church at Rouen, M. Wilfred Monod, son of pastor Theodore Monod, took an active part in the work of the Congress. The Roman Catholic clergy were represented by two priests only, one of whom has long been a regular attender of these congresses.

The most striking incident was a speech made by a prominent French deputy, M. Hubbard, whose attitude towards religion is that of the strongest antagonism, but who, speaking as a Freethinker, made an earnest appeal to Christians of every denomination, to throw the weight of their influence into the movement for the immediate arrest and ultimate diminution of those vast and ever-growing armaments which are such a grievous burden upon the populations of Europe. (An English delegate told us that the average workman in England has to spend three weeks' wages in every year in paying for the support of the army and navy.) The appeal was heartily responded to by Pastor Allégret, of Havre. At the close of the Congress it fell to M. Wilfred Monod to propose the following resolution :—"The Congress begs ministers of all religions never to associate a religious service of any kind with any warlike undertaking, whether in the form of prayers, or sermons, or especially of hymns of rejoicing after a bloody victory." In moving the resolution, against which only one or two of the most extreme enemies of all religion held up their hands, M. Monod expressed himself glad, as a Protestant pastor, and an official representative of the Christian religion, to take the opportunity of declaring that anyone who advocated war did so in direct opposition to the teaching of Jesus Christ.

An invitation was received from the United States, for next year's Congress to be held in one of the American cities, probably Boston, in connection with the St. Louis Exhibition. This invitation was supported in an admirable speech by Professor Bracq, of Vassar College, a native of France, who, in speaking of those things from which Frenchmen and other Europeans might derive instruction in the United States, observed that they would find there a nation in which religion is regarded as the means of strengthening and developing the life of the people instead of being an instrument for the repression of their faculties. It almost seemed to me that it would have been worth while to hold such a Congress, merely for the sake of enabling an American citizen to give such a testimony, in his native land and his native tongue, before a crowded and intelligent audience, many of whom have been brought to give up all religion for the very reason to which he thus alluded. A visit to the United States, where he saw with amazment that religion can flourish without any of the props deemed necessary to maintain it at home, was the means of bringing the late Eugène Bersier, the most powerful Protestant preacher of his time in Paris, to true conversion of heart. May such be the result in the case of some of the Europeans who will be going thither for the Peace Congress next year!

World-Wide Evangelization.

AN INQUIRY AND A SUGGESTION.

OUR Lord's injunction to go into all the world and proclaim the good tidings to every creature has never been revoked, and is, as we are all ready to admit, indissolubly bound up with that vital, unique, and encouraging promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age."

But are there not those to whom this injunction has ceased to have any personal meaning? Perhaps many years ago they looked forward with holy desire to a life spent for God in a foreign land, but such questions as health, family ties, and offers of and openings for home work kept them in this land, where God has used them, though their hearts are still in the regions beyond.

Many such have, from time to time, in recent years, gone forth to encourage workers and conduct missions in other lands. And in a a recent issue of The Christian Rev. Thomas Evans, in describing the success which has everywhere attended Mr. Reginald Studd's special missions in Ceylon and North India says, "We shall be glad to welcome other visitors of the same spirit as Mr. Studd from the home-land to help in the Lord's work in India."

Now it occurs to me that Mr. Evans does not stand alone in the desire which he has so definately expressed. In all probability there are scores of workers in South Africa, Canada, and in lands nearer our own, who are ready to welcome into their midst some qualified, accredited, and God-sent messenger.

One of the best-known evangelists on this side, who has himself laboured in Canada, said to me recently, "Whoever goes to Canada for mission work ought to be prepared to stay as long as God keeps open the door, for the field is wide, and workers are needed; but most of us are so situated that a long stay would be quite out of the question." Some who read this paper have very few ties to keep them permanently in this country, and the question arises why they should not be encouraged to go forth now and again into other lands, and thus take the world as their parish. This would indeed be true missionary work, and a work that has been already signally owned of God.

Now the proposal that I humbly wish to make is that The Christian should add yet another feature to its highly interesting make-up, by opening its columns as, from my point of view, a much-needed means of communication, between the workers in the home-land who are willing to go to any part of the world, and the work needing the temporary help of pastor or evangelist in the regions beyond.

For after all, this is the sum of the whole matter; there is, undoubtedly, work waiting to be done, fields white unto harvest; and there are workers just as ready to go to South Africa or Canada as to Yarmouth or Glasgow, but how are the two to be brought together?

A Glasgow Conference.

ST. GEORGE'S CROSS TABERNACLE.

THERE is a warm place on the banks of the Clyde—literally and figuratively—where it is impossible to take a heart-chill. The Christian stranger as soon as he steps over the threshold of the St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Glasgow, does not feel a stranger any more, for a hearty grip of the hand and a cheerful "Welcome, brother," makes him "at home" immediately. There is something in the atmosphere of the Tabernacle which produces the same effect upon the spirit as the pure ozone of the mountain air does upon the body. It stimulates and enlivens the energies of the soul, and chases away even physical weariness.

The twenty-fourth annual Conference, according to the general testimony the best of its kind, has been a time of drinking and feasting at the fountain head. The highest teaching received its practical application in the missionary interest exhibited throughout. The zeal of the pastor and his wife in this direction proves infectious to the congregation. Not many of its members can come under the heading of "well-to-do families." Most of them are hard-working people, yet the amount contributed yearly to mission work is beyond the average of many churches. We state this on the testimony of friends who know the inner workings of the Tabernacle. It only emphasizes the fact, of what unlimited influence a pastor is capable with his people. If he is of a missionary spirit, he is sure to lay stress upon what Rev. S. H. Wilkinson remarked in the course of his most interesting lecture on "Work among the Jews," which closed the Conference: "I am a missionary because I am a Christian. Every Christian ought to be a missionary."

There are three distinct commands or invitations given by our blessed Lord: "Come—follow—go." "Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden." "Follow thou Me." "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel."

We saw a little girl, about eleven years of age, who, stirred up by some missionary addresses, ruminated in her own mind how she could help the cause. Someone gave her a halfpenny, another a penny. With this capital she started to manufacture some toffee. After selling the first lot for sixpence, she put aside half the amount, investing the other half in some more sugar, and so continued her business until able to present Mr. Findlay with 30s. Bravo, little girl!

Her story reminded us of another little girl in a Tunisian home who on the occasion of our visit approached us with timid gracefulness and a pretty blush on her cheeks. She was trading with pin-cushions for the same purpose. "A little child shall lead them." The old saying remains true, "Where there is a will there is a way." There are many among us who cannot write cheques, who cannot at will dip into their pockets for silver or gold, but we all possess some amount of intelligence. Let us sharpen our wits and look about and see what we can do for our Lord. W. M.

At meeting after meeting the tabernacle was crowded to overflowing with those from far and near, who came together to praise God for His goodness and to wait upon Him for fuller equipment for service. In his opening remarks on Saturday afternoon Pastor D. J. Findlay said that what was first needed was not a "social" revival, but an old-fashioned spiritual revival; not a revival of outward circumstances, but a revival such as was created by the Holy Ghost. When men are saved, properly, grandly saved from drink, gambling, and other debasing propensities, their outward circumstances soon improve. Where sin is the cause of poverty, the overthrow of sin overthrows poverty, and better living leads to better housing. Mr. Findlay did well to declare afresh his belief in the Gospel of Christ, and to avouch his disbelief in a purely "social" Gospel.

Rev. Samuel Wilkinson (London) mentioning that within the last few years a very large area in the east of London has been peopled by foreign Jews, mostly from Russia, who, to escape Russian tyranny and despotism, have been migrating to this country. Miss Cox, who labours in Sousse, gave an account of some of the difficulties encountered in carrying on work among Mohammedans. Work among the Kaffirs was eloquently represented by Rev. Walter Searle, whose consecration and faith have been rewarded by getting jewels from among them for Christ. Mrs. Grierson (formerly of India) spoke of mission work in that country, and named three difficulties that confront the worker—(1) caste, (2) the condition of women and girls, (3) idolatry.

The missionary field having had a large share of the time devoted to the afternoon session, a word was called for from Rev. Gordon Watt, who spoke briefly on two great principles for Christian workers he had found in the Acts of the Apostles—(1) not to know, but to be (Acts i. 7, 8); (2) not to keep life, but to lose it (Acts xxi. 13). This was followed by a short address from Rev. J. Stuart Holden, who spoke on responsibility, personal inability, Divine possibility.

After an interval for tea and fellowship, interesting addresses were given by Mr. Andrew Stewart regarding work in Australia; by Mr. James regarding work at his mission station in China; and by Rev. J. Stuart Holden on "Four Beholds" in the Gospel of John.

On Sabbath morning a goodly company gathered for prayer in the quiet, sacred stillness of its early hours. The usual ten o'clock Missionary Prayer Meeting was but a continuance of the earlier one. After prayer for beloved workers "scattered abroad" in all parts of the world, the pastor called upon Mrs. R. C. Morgan to tell of her visit, in company with her husband, to Dr. and Mrs. Churcher's station at Sousse, Tunisia. Her graphic description drew forth much prayer and sympathy for the workers in that hard Mohammedan field in North Africa. It was fitting that she should be followed by Mrs. Dr. Churcher herself, whose testimony showed quiet, patient, faith in God. A number of missionaries took part in this splendid meeting.

The morning service saw a great, expectant, and inspiring congregation crowding the Tabernacle. Rev. J. Stuart Holden, who took the first part of the service, spoke with great simplicity and spiritual power on "Love for Christ"—the need of a personal love for the personal Son of God, illustrating his subject by the beautiful Scriptural incidents showing the love betwixt Jonathan and David. As he spoke, his own intense, burning, personal love to the Lord Jesus laid hold of the hearts of hearers. Rev. S. H. Wilkinson dealt with "The Seven Great Feasts of the Jewish Year."

In the afternoon the services were divided. Mr. Holden and Mrs. Churcher spoke to the children in the Tabernacle, while the adults gathered at the tent, where the needs of Africa, China, and India, the Jews and the home lands were presented to a large and deeply-interested audience. This most helpful gathering was appropriately closed by a soul-stirring word from Mr. Richard Hill on Paul's question, "What wilt Thou have me to do?"

On the evening of the Lord's Day, and on Monday afternoon and evening, and Tuesday evening, Mr. R. C. Morgan, Mr. Holden, and Mr. Wilkinson were among the speakers.

The outstanding impression is one of profound thankfulness and gratitude to God for sending these His servants among His people at Glasgow. The presence of God has been most real, and through His messengers He Himself has been speaking words of warning, of counsel, and of encouragement. He has been showing the grand possibilities of a fully surrendered life, and that all "aspiration to walk as He walked becomes possible by the inspiration that He gives." Mr. Wilkinson, stimulated in his hearers a new love for God's ancient people, the Jews. His own heart burns with a God-given love, at once tender, compassionate, and sympathizing towards Israel, and in communicating this same love to others, God has made him a rich blessing to hundreds of His children.

Dublin Christian Convention.

THE thirteenth annual Convention of the Dublin branch of the Evangelical Alliance was held last week in the Christian Union Buildings. It proved a season of blessing and spiritual refreshing to many.

A preliminary meeting on Sunday, September 27, addressed by Rev. T. Connellan, opened the proceedings; the concluding address was delivered by Rev. W. J. Clarke, D.D., on Sunday, October 4. The customary conversazione was held on Monday evening in the Minor Hall, and was largely attended.

At the subsequent meeting earnest addresses on "Christian Union" were delivered by Capt. R. Wade Thompson, who presided, Rev. John Stewart, Rev. Canon O'Connor, and Rev. Wm. Crawford. Mr. Stewart urged the necessity for more earnestness in Christian work. "Sheer godlessness" was the cause of the indifference and callousness towards Divine things. The recognition of the authority and will of Christ, the obligation laid upon Christians to evangelise the world, and the knowledge of the infinite resources at the disposal of the Church through its Divine Head, were indispensable for revival.

The morning sessions throughout the Convention were devoted to prayer. Many prominent Christians voiced the feelings of those who are longing for a truer presentation of Christ by the Churches to the many in this sad land who are ignorant of His loving call and claims. The addresses were very helpful. Rev. E. J. Kennedy spoke on "Unity in Christ," and "Warfare." In the first he pointed out that the work of conventions would only be accomplished when men and women were brought into union with Christ. The necessity of prayer in this connection was also dealt with, and of presenting our petitions in accordance with the Divine will. Speaking on "warfare," specially addressing young men, he said that a young lady once came to Dr. Charles Simeon. "Oh, Mr. Simeon," she said, "I am intensely happy. The Lord Jesus Christ does everything for me." "Does He?" replied Simeon. "Does He read your Bible for you? Does He say your prayers for you? Does He resist the sin of your heart?" It was a well-merited rebuke, and one they should all take to heart.

Rev. S. A. Selwyn spoke on Job xxii. and Gen. xxi. Three thoughtful addresses were given by Rev. George Jackson, of Edinburgh. One was on, "What Think Ye of Christ?" This was a problem which exercised the first disciples; it is also the problem of to-day. He pointed to the four answers of the New Testament: "The Carpenter's Son," given by the Nazarenes; "This is My Beloved Son"; "This is indeed the Saviour of the world"; and the last and greatest answer found in John xx., "My Lord and my God."

Rev. Llewellyn Lloyd, of the Fuh Kien Mission, spoke of the encouraging work in China. During the recent massacres the native Christians could have escaped by denouncing Christianity. This they refused to do, with few exceptions. Western education and methods were being adopted, and the Christians would soon wield a tremendous influence in the country. A call for more missionaries for India was voiced by Rev. Stephen Thomas, of Delhi. Hinduism and Mohammedanism were awakening to a sense of their danger, and were sending out missionaries to combat Christianity.

Canon O'Connor spoke instead of Dr. Baedeker, who was detained through the illness of his wife. He dwelt upon the testimony of the Word of God, and the miracle of fulfilled prophecy. Addresses were also delivered by Rev. J. G. Train, of London; Rev. E. L. Hamilton, of Bath; and Rev. Dr. Clarke, of Dublin. At Thursday evening's meeting, a resolution was passed on the subject of the Macedonian atrocities. The Convention proceedings on Friday included:—United prayer for Ireland, at which the different missionary agencies were remembered; "a Consecration service," presided over by Rev. E. L. Hamilton; and an evangelistic service, addressed by Rev. Hugh D. Brown.

Torrey-Alexander Mission.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

CLOSING DAYS AT LIVERPOOL.

IN facing the closing days of this remarkable Mission, the question arose how best to meet the vast multitudes who would be sure to congregate to hear the evangelists for the last times. The only method possible seemed to be a division of the evening meeting instead of holding the usual afternoon meeting. To this end women were asked to come at 6.30 and men at eight o'clock. In both instances each night the hall was crowded to the doors, many hundreds being still excluded.

In both the evening meetings Dr. Torrey's address was in substance the same. On Monday he dealt with "The Way in which Christ Meets Humanity's Needs"; on Tuesday he spoke on "Heaven, what Sort of Place it is, and How to Get There"; and on Wednesday "The Drama of Life in Three Acts." Perhaps the address on Heaven has made most impression, contrasting as it did with the terrible declaration a fortnight since on "Hell." The "Drama of Life" was the story of the Prodigal Son—his sin, his shame, his despair, his determination, his return, and his reception. It was well told, in slightly varying language to suit his two audiences, and great power accompanied the telling. There was something strangely stirring about the effect produced on the vast company of listeners.

FOUR THOUSAND NAMES REGISTERED.

In no case during the entire course of this Mission has any sensational method been adopted or the emotions been wrought upon. By a clear declaration of the Gospel message, presented as an appeal to reason and conscience, men and women have been convinced, convicted, and converted. Exclusive of those dealt with in the children's meetings, 4,000 persons have had their names and addresses taken by various workers, all of these having given definite testimony to their faith. Figures, however, cannot represent the good done by this Mission, or gauge its wide-reaching influence. Who can estimate the effect upon Christian toilers, whose work has assumed a new and delightful importance? Who can tell how much fervour the religious life of Liverpool will have gained, as the usual Christian activities recommence, the *un*usual activity passing into them from the centres of the Philharmonic, the Gymnasium, and the City Hall?

MINISTERIAL TESTIMONY.

Rev. Dr. MACPHAIL on Wednesday night endeavoured to express the feeling of all who had watched the meetings from their commencement, and his testimony was that never since the days of Messrs. Moody and Sankey had the City of Liverpool been so effected by evangelistic effort, and perhaps never had more solid work been done.

One of the special features of the last three days was the second children's meeting held on Wednesday afternoon. Those young people who had professed conversion the previous week were invited by special letter to come again for further talk, and to bring one friend. It was interesting to find that the one friend had in several cases been won for Christ first, and was brought to the meeting where opportunity was given for public confession. "How do you know that you are saved?" asked Dr. Torrey of one bright-faced boy. "God says it," answered the little fellow without the least hesitation. "How many of you have tried to bring a friend to Christ this week?" asked the doctor. Quite a number of small hands went up. Indeed, the little ones put us to shame, so whole-hearted and earnest are they in the gladness of their trust and their desire to spread the blessing.

The noonday meetings for men have been a real delight to those who were privileged to attend. Well may the women of Liverpool envy their brothers this opportunity. Women are as much troubled by intellectual doubt as men. A woman sceptic is hardly an anomaly, for, sad to say, Liverpool holds a host of them.

The noon meeting for prayer and praise on Monday was conducted by Mr. J. L. Fenn, who invited testimonies from those present, as to good received during the mission. Quite a number bore witness—some telling of whole families being brought to Christ.

OPENING AT DUNDEE.

The spirit of prayer has been creating an atmosphere for the work of the Lord by the ministry of His servants, and we went to the services with the confidence that saints would be quickened and sinners brought to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. The spirit of supplication has proved its reality in the ready response of workers to the call of the indefatigable secretary, Mr. Wm. Stewart, of the Y.M.C.A. Great bands of young men are circulating handbills with a zeal that speaks of heart-desire for the lost. Our city has been much and truly commented upon concerning its social sores and drunkenness, and it was most gratifying to see that many of the class to which this description belongs were present at the great afternoon and evening meetings in the Kinnaird Hall. The outstanding feature of the preacher's message came to us as the logic of conviction; and a fearless handling of the weapon of the Spirit, to the exposure of shams and the destruction of every refuge of lies. Sin is emphasized as sin, and the line between worldliness and true spiritual life clearly drawn. No countenance is given to the idea of easy service for the Master. The foundation biblical truths of sin and salvation are stated with clearness and unmistakable appeal to the unsaved.

With a natural winsomeness enriched by the Holy Spirit, Mr. Alexander exercises his wonderful skill as a choir-leader and soloist, provoking to song even the most unlikely in the audience. Longing looked out of tear-dimmed eyes as the message of victory was sung; and the faces of loved ones in glory, and the memory of vows never fulfilled, seemed to be revived in many. Melted hearts told their tale in the eloquence of softened faces and beseeching eyes.

SABBATH MEETINGS.

At the opening meeting on Sunday morning Dr. Torrey gave an address on, "The Most Efficient Form of Christian Service. By pithy anecdotes he showed how anyone can do it, anywhere. Revival was shown to be, so far as man was concerned, Christian duty taken seriously. The audience, nearly all of which stood in token of a resolve to pray daily and definitely for the unsaved, numbered over a thousand, and elicited the remark from the evangelist that this was the best he had yet seen in Scotland.

In the afternoon the Kinnaird Hall was filled in every part with about 2,000 women of all ages. After Mr. Alexander and his great choir had led the people in song, an address was given by Dr. Torrey on 1 John iv. 8, "God is Love." Such a sight as that sea of faces has seldom, if ever before, been witnessed in our city. Almost all classes of women were represented, and at times the silent awe was oppressive as with deep earnestness the message of love went home. There was not so ready a response to the appeal to stand as a pledge of whole-hearted fidelity to Christ as one would have expected, but some lingered behind and were spoken to, being pointed to the sufficiency of the Saviour.

The evening meeting was reserved for men only. Mr. Alexander led the choir and audience in full swing with hymns that went to the heart of many a rough lad. When Dr. Torrey rose to his feet, the eyes of the vast company were fixed in deep earnestness, and seldom has a speaker had better listeners. There was no shuffling with truth, and yet withal there was wonderful delicacy in dealing with special sins. Many will remember in all coming days the power of the heart-searching message. "Jesus Christ is the only refuge" rung through the great building with its 2,000 men, and when the call to come to the front was given, about seventy men, young and old, responded, and told the audience that they had accepted Christ as Lord and Master.

ENCOURAGEMENT FROM AUSTRALIA.

In these days of pessimism you doubtless find many who openly affirm their doubts regarding the efficacy of Evangelistic Missions. If a testimony from the Antipodes would be of value, let me briefly state a few facts that have come under my notice, as my business carried me into various parts of Australasia.

We are fully alive to the dangers of religious excitement occasioned by some missions, and to the disposition to count and parade the number of professed conversions; but facts are stubborn things, and their evidence weighs strongly. You will agree with me that the time to judge of the real value of a mission is six to twelve months after its conclusion.

My few observations concern the work accomplished under God by His honoured servants, Dr. Torrey and Mr. Charles Alexander. Visiting Melbourne (Victoria) in March of this year, we found a grand spirit of prayer pervading the churches, where in some sixty centres preparation was afoot for a ten days' open-air campaign. This was an effort to reach the masses, a perpetuation of the Simultaneous Mission held many months before, in which "Torrey, Alexander, and Geil" played so important a part. Such activity on the part of the churches, such unity among Christians in the whole-souled desire to reach the non-church-goers, was a refresher indeed.

In the New South Wales capital, Sydney, I heard some splendid testimonies in April last, regarding the perpetuation of blessing, the abiding results from the Torrey-Alexander Mission of nine months before. A Sydney Y.M.C.A. man told me their week-night open-air meetings were never so well attended, and never had they found so great a desire on the part of the young men to hear the truth of God faithfully expounded as since the Mission. A business man, typical of scores, told me the Bible was a new book since Dr. Torrey's noon meetings in Sydney. Three young men's Bible classes of which I know, obtained fifty new members between them from the ranks of mission converts. Sydney specially impressed me, however, with the mighty impetus given to open-air work, the Christian being fully awake to the power of this grand means of testimony.

Crossing to New Zealand, I found some tangible evidences indeed of abiding work. As a result of the Torrey-Alexander Mission, 200 young men of the capital city met together, and under the leadership of the Mayor of Wellington, formed a Y.M.C.A. Nine months have passed, and the movement is fully established, with a resident general secretary and a thriving little work. I visited the Church Bible classes one Sunday afternoon, and found upwards of fifty young men present at one, and over eighty at the other. Asked if they had benefited by the mission, we met with the warmest testimony. Business men have been reached right through New Zealand. Some prominent cases of the abiding work of the Holy Ghost were most cheering, notably the head of a large retail house, who set things in his business on such a basis, after his conversion at the Mission, that upon it he could invite God's blessing. His employees now meet for prayer every morning.

In Christchurch and Dunedin results were equally cheering, and in every centre the sound of "Alexander's Songs" could be heard, not only in the homes, but in the streets, and the workshops, and who shall say that it was valueless as a testimony for God? In Dunedin a prominent Christian lady told me in May last that the deepening of spiritual life in the city since the Torrey Mission was most noticeable. The churches, always well attended, were, several of them, enjoying new life.

In New Zealand, as in Australia, the men were the class specially reached, and I have no hesitation, after visiting the various centres of their work, six and nine months afterwards, in stating, to the glory of God, that hundreds upon hundreds of new-born souls will bless God through all eternity for the visit of His servants, Torrey and Alexander, to the Australasian Colonies in 1902. Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Glasgow.

FOLLOWING up the fruitful tent mission that has been held throughout the month of September, Pastor Findlay and his wife sent out cards of invitation to all the young converts who had voluntarily handed in their names as having accepted Christ, to attend at the Tabernacle on the evening of October 1. There was a very large response to the invitations given, and in the hall adjoining the Tabernacle a pleasant hour was spent. After tea had been handed round, encouraging words were spoken by the pastor, and three simple rules named that had been given to him early in his Christian career, and that had been of great value and help to him throughout: (1) be much in prayer; (2) be much in the Word of God; (3) be much in the work of God.

At eight o'clock an adjournment was made to the main hall, where many were gathered, seats being reserved at the front for the young converts, and at this larger gathering addresses were given by Messrs. Richard Hill and Harry Young, evangelists, whose services have been so signally owned of God in the salvation of precious souls during the tent mission.

Mrs. Baeyertz in Cardiff.

Mrs. Baeyertz has just concluded an encouraging mission at my church in Mount Stuart Square, Cardiff. Her visit to our district has been greatly blessed. The mission was not held in a central place, nor was it sustained by a group of churches, and yet the results have been highly gratifying. The Bible readings were full of power and most instructive in the blessed life of victory. The attendance increased and the interest deepened from day to day. The evening services were well attended. The Gospel was delivered with Holy Ghost power, and many souls were converted.

At the holiness meeting on the last night many Christians had an awakening such as they had never had before. A solemn hush pervaded the place, and one felt that this was none other than the house of God. Many wept as the Holy Spirit showed them their past want of loyalty and devotion to Christ. Some said, with tears, "I can never live again as I have done in the past," and others, "I must begin a new life from this night." Another said, "I have done nothing for my dear Lord, but I will, God helping me, from now." Another said, "The Bible has been opened and made a new book to me."

One remarkable feature of the mission was the ingathering of the children.

The attractive way in which the gospel was presented for young life was so great that one mother remarked, "We could not keep the children away." I am personally thankful for the meetings. I have received a great spiritual impulse from them. I can specially recommend Mrs. Baeyertz to all the churches. I wish her God speed in her noble work.

Thos. Davies, pastor.

Among Methodists at Barrow.

Rev. Thomas Waugh has just concluded a ten-days mission in connection with Hindpool Road Wesleyan Church, Barrow-in-Furness. From the first service the presence of the Holy Spirit was in the midst of the people, and there was a continued growth of influence and power up to the end. The services, which were of a deeply spiritual character, were listened to with the closest attention by crowded congregations; indeed, the church was not by any means large enough to accommodate all who sought admission. On two occasions the young men members of the church remained outside in order to make room for strangers.

Mr. Waugh believes that the first few nights of a mission can be most wisely spent not only in calling sinners to repentance, but in showing them what being a Christian really means. During the second week the inquiry room was crowded, over 100 persons being helped by the circuit ministers and leaders during the last three nights. Mr. Waugh was careful to explain at every meeting that he lays no stress on numbers, his great anxiety being that the work should be thorough, and to this end those who were working in the inquiry room were urged to use the Bible only.

Another feature was the large number of non-church-going men and women who attended, and when the evangelist told the story of his life on the last Monday of the mission the place was not half big enough for the crowd that came to hear it. At the closing service Mr. Waugh said that the seeds of the harvest had been sown by them in their previous arduous toil, and that he had "just come along to take a sickle and help them in God's name to do a bit of reaping." To God be all the glory! All the churches will receive additions to the membership as a result of this mission.

Skegness Sands Mission.

The Sands Mission at Skegness concluded for the present season with a free tea and Gospel meeting in St. Paul's Baptist Church, on September 25, for all the people who get their living on the sands. Over 200 gladly accepted the invitation. The varied company included:—Amusement caterers, hawkers, stall-keepers, photographers, donkey and horse-riding men and boys, boat and bathing men, refreshment-booth caterers, and others. All these friends stayed to the after meeting, and listened for two hours to the "glorious Gospel of the blessed God," which was both spoken and sung. Pastor George Goodchild presided over the meeting, and spoke of "the good tidings of great joy" realized by those who really accepted the Gospel. A ventriloquist said he "was very glad and thankful indeed to find someone really cared for the souls of the poor lost sheep on Skegness Sands." Much blessing was the outcome of the gathering.

Mr. Josiah Nix in Wensleydale.

The first mission conducted by Mr. Josiah Nix since his appointment as Gospel Temperance Missioner of the Wesleyan body, was at Wensleydale, Yorks. Mr. Nix began his work at Hawes, when a great crowd filled the Market Hall, and an interest was created which increased to the last hour of the Mission. The whole neighbourhood was moved, and during the few days nearly 200 people signed the pledge, and some decided for Christ. Mr. Nix then moved to Middleham where the training stables are. From the first he gripped the situation, and people gathered from miles around to hear him. On market-day at Leyburn, Mr. Nix took his stand in the market-place, and for half-an-hour held a large crowd spell-bound, while he denounced drink and gambling as the curses of our national life. When the Mission closed, the old chapel was packed as it has not been for fifty years. There was a deep consciousness of "power from on high." In all, over 300 pledges were taken. Many of the Church officials signed, and numbers of young people who at once followed the example thus set. Some cases of blessing which transpired had, for those who knew, a pathetic interest.

Mr. A. R. Sidders has concluded an eight-days' mission at Whitstable. Testimonies received show that the meetings were fruitful in blessing.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has commenced a mission at Revere Beach, Mass., a place which is the resort of thousands of pleasure seekers. The date of the mission synchronized with that of a "carnival" organized on a vast scale.

At the Baptist Chapel, Lustleigh, Devon, we have had some splendid mission services, conducted by Mr. W. Collard. The whole place has been stirred, and God has wonderfully blessed his labours in the blessing of precious souls. At each service the chapel has been well filled, and when the evangelist related his life story, on the last night, the place was packed.

W. A. Parker.

A three-days' Gospel temperance mission has just been held at the Latimer Road Mission, Notting Hill by Mr. Bob Johnson, converted minstrel, and Mr George Young, ex-comedian. The meetings have been well attended, and it is with thankfulness to God that we acknowledge the cheering results of the visits of the evangelists. About a score of pledges were taken.

C. S.

Thursday night last brought to a close a fruitful eleven-days' mission by Mr. Frank Weaver at Strathbogie. The meetings were held in connection with the Y.M.C.A., who secured the U.F. Church Hall for the mission. The hall soon became inadequate for the number of people wishing to attend, and thereafter the meetings were held in the church. The meetings were encouraging, and increased both in interest and attendance. The mission has been the means of blessing to both saved and unsaved. Mr. Weaver has a fund of rich, personal experience, which he gives out with telling effect, and he is a strong advocate of Gospel temperance.

David G. Wood, Secretary Y.M.C.A.

Earnest prayer is asked by an aged lady in weak health that the Holy Spirit may reveal Christ to her as her Saviour, and give her faith to enable her to trust; and that she and another one may be led and taught by the Spirit.

Praise.

A lady desires to praise God that after years of despair she has found Him who is her everlasting joy.

Young People.

A Malagasy Schoolboy.

My nephews and nieces will be interested in reading the following letter, which was received recently by the London Missionary Society from Mrs. Sharman, of Madagascar. Similar stories may be obtained in leaflet form (½d. each, 2s. 6d. hundred) from the office of the L.M.S., 30, Gray's Inn Road, W.C. I am giving you a Foreign instead of a Home article this week, as this is a special Missionary number of The Christian.

PERHAPS you would like to hear a little about one of my "boys." I have thirty, all Malagasy, and ranging in age from eight to twenty-three years! It is of one of the elder ones I want to tell you, for he is just splendid. Some Malagasy have very long names, but it will be quite easy to introduce you to your new friend, for his name is simply Rasamuel. He belongs to one of the coast tribes in the south-east of Madagascar, and though he has a very dark skin, he has a bright, intelligent, happy face. I expect you know the reason of this; loving Jesus not only gives English boys happy-looking faces, but Malagasy boys too. Rasamuel is the first of his tribe (Taisaka) to be educated in the capital (Tananarive), and the second we have had in our Home from Farafangana. He has lived with us for two years now, and as it takes quite a month to get to his home, he cannot even visit his friends at holiday time.

This being a true story, I am obliged to say that at one time Rasamuel was rather proud. The "boys" have little duties of various kinds, partly in order to teach them to be neat and tidy, and partly because, being of various tribes, and of varied social position, it has a wholesome effect to give each some little home duty, and to treat "our children" all alike.

One of Rasamuel's duties used to be watering some of my plants, and another was carrying a few magazines to a certain house several times a week. You boys wouldn't think anything of carrying your father's newspapers to a friend's house, I suppose; but some Malagasy boys, strange to say, think it very much beneath them to do anything of the sort, and such things as these sometimes make our work rather difficult for a time. Of course, it is simple ignorance, and it is because of this and other things that we missionaries go so far away to help these poor people.

One day a friend of ours sent for a small box he wanted, and as Rasamuel was going that way, I asked him please to carry it. He looked rather surprised, and then asked if one of the servants might take it. I reminded him that he was big and strong and quite able to carry the box; but I saw that Rasamuel wished to escape from this little duty, and I must confess that I was very grieved. He also told me as nicely as he could that he didn't like watering the plants and carrying the magazines. That seemed to me dreadful, because you see I called him "my boy," and "mothers" like their boys to be polite and kind and willing to take a little trouble to please. But Rasamuel being a Malagasy, I expect his own mother taught him when he was younger that it was very grand for a young man to walk along the road empty-handed, with a little servant behind panting with the effort to carry the luggage and keep up with his master.

However, fortunately, I had several "boys" who had learnt better, and on whom I could depend; so I called two of them (one of much higher rank socially than Rasamuel) and asked one to go with Rasamuel to carry the box, and in future to take charge of the magazines, and the other to water the plants.

At the end of a week, Rasamuel came to ask for a little conversation, and then he told me how miserable he had been in having grieved us, and especially in grieving Jesus; how he had thought over his conduct and prayed about it, and how he now saw that he had been very foolish. And he ended up by saying: "Will you please let me have all my duties back again to show that you forgive me?" I thought that was very brave of Rasamuel, because after giving up his duties it was rather conspicuous taking them back again, and, of course, his companions couldn't help noticing. But I think all the "boys" respected him for it, and so did Mr. Sharman and I.

Some time ago, I was taken very ill, and for several weeks was in bed. Mr. Sharman was ill too. So the "boys" were left to themselves a good deal. But how good they were! They got up each morning, went downstairs, had breakfast, went out to college or the new High School, returned, had their mid-day meal, and did their studies, but all so quietly that we scarcely ever heard a sound, and you know I told you there were thirty of them! Rasamuel and one or two others superintended and kept everything so orderly.

Meanwhile, Mr. Sharman was getting better. One evening I remember his coming to my bedside and asking if I could bear to hear something very nice. I said: "Yes, I think I can; what is it?" And then he replied in words similar to these: "I have just had a beautiful little note from Rasamuel, saying, 'I have prayed so much for madame. I can carry water, I can help the cook, or I can look after the little oil-stove all night for the nurse; only please let me do something.'" We decided that Rasamuel should "look after the little oil-stove and help the nurse," and every night, as I lay tossing with fever, it was such a comfort to know that Rasamuel was doing his best to get me better. I felt I must be brave and do my best too. I could hear him on the landing just outside my bedroom door, and it was so soothing and pleasant. One night I asked the nurse if she would allow me to see him just a minute. I thanked him for being so very kind to me, told him I was improving, and I wish you could have seen his face. It just beamed. Each night Rasamuel went to pray with Mr. Sharman, and my husband said what a help that was to him.

After a time I was able to lie on a couch on the verandah, and one afternoon the four "nurses" came to have a cup of tea and some cake with me in honour of my getting better! They looked so happy, but I think I must have been the happiest of all in having four such splendid "boys," and especially Rasamuel.

I hope, like Rasamuel, you children who read this believe both in praying and in doing—doing all you can for Jesus, for father and mother, for brothers and sisters, and for black boys and girls, for you see they really are worth helping.

Lessons from Joseph (Gen. xlv. 1-15).

NOTICE the circumstances in which Joseph's brethren found themselves. Their conscience was now awakened, and it was ill at ease. There was no need for them to mention that crime of twenty years ago; and yet it seemed impossible for them to refrain from mentioning that which was uppermost in their minds. They were evidently thinking deeply of that dark deed by the pit's mouth; their own sorrows had brought the sorrows of that frail young lad to their minds; they could not but feel that there was some connection between the two; and thus the first words uttered by Judah their spokesman, as they entered the audience-chamber of Joseph, betrayed the dark forebodings of their thoughts: "What shall we say unto my Lord? What shall we speak? or how shall we clear ourselves? God hath found out the iniquity of thy servants."

God had found out their iniquity. The sleuth-hound is on your track; it may take years to run you down; but it will never leave the trail until it has discovered your hiding-place and found you out. "Be sure your sin will find you out." Tens of years may pass over your life, and like these brethren you may be congratulating yourself that the sin is forgotten, that you are safe, and then a train of circumstances, little suspected, but manipulated by a Divine hand, will suddenly bring the truth to light and write God's sentence in flaming characters upon the walls of the house in which you riot in careless ease. The unforgiven sinner is never safe.

And if all sin is not traced home to its authors in this world, at least there is enough to show how terrible that moment will be, when, at the "great white throne," the secrets of all hearts will be disclosed, and God will bring to light the hidden things of darkness. There is absolutely no chance of escape for a man, save in the wounds of Jesus; these are the city of refuge into which the pursuer cannot enter, and in which the fugitive is safe.

In addition, they felt that they were absolutely in Joseph's power. There he stood, second to none but Pharaoh in all the land of Egypt. If he had said that these men were all to be taken and imprisoned for life, or that Benjamin should be retained while the others were set free, there was absolutely no appeal; none could hinder him for a single moment. And the counterpart of this must surely be an alarming thought to the awakened sinner—that he is entirely at the mercy of the Judge of the quick and dead. There is none that can deliver out of His hand, or say, "What doest Thou?"

Notice their behaviour. "They fell before him on the ground." As they did so, they unconsciously fulfilled his own prediction, uttered when a boy. How vividly that memorable dream of the harvest field must have occurred to Joseph's mind. Here were their sheaves making obeisance to his sheaf, standing erect in the midst.

Thus Joseph's object was attained. He had wished to restore them to perfect peace and rest; but he knew that these were impossible so long as their sin was unconfessed and unforgiven. Then, too, he had been anxious to see how they felt towards Benjamin. With this object in view he had given him five times as much as he had given them. But notwithstanding the marked favour shown him, they were as eager as before for his return with them. Besides, he wanted to see if they could forgive. It was Benjamin who had brought them into all this trouble. But they had no malice against this young lad. So far from showing malice, they tenderly loved and clung to him for the old father's sake and his own.

"Then Joseph could not refrain himself," and he said, "I am Joseph." He spoke in deep emotion; yet the words must have fallen on them like a thunderbolt. "Joseph!" Had they been dealing all the while with their long-lost brother? "Joseph!" Then they had fallen into a lion's den, indeed. "Joseph!" Could it be? Yes, it may be so; and it would explain a great many things which had sorely puzzled them. Well might they be troubled and terrified.

A moment more saw him and Benjamin locked in each other's arms, their tears flowing freely. And he kissed all his brethren. Simeon? Yes. Reuben? Yes. Those who tied his hands and mocked his cries? Yes. He kissed them all. And after that they talked with him. So shall it be one day. The Jews are slowly filtering back to Palestine in unbelief. Sore troubles await them there, to prepare them to recognize their rejected Messiah. But the time is not far distant when they shall be prepared to hear Him say, "I am Jesus, your Brother, whom ye crucified; but be not grieved with yourselves, for God hath brought good out of evil, both for Gentile and for Jew, by saving life with a great deliverance." "And they shall look upon Him whom they pierced, and mourn because of Him." "And so all Israel shall be saved."

David's Confession (Psa. li. 1-17).

Golden Text.—Psa. li. 10.

A FIERCE war broke out between Israel and the Ammonites, aided by the Syrians, arising from a suspicious interpretation placed on a friendly message from King David by over-wise mischief makers in the Court of Hanun (2 Sam. x. 1-8). Joab and Abishai commanded the first campaign, and King David the second; he made the Syrians his servants (v. 19). The cairn which topped the hill of glory in David's reign must be built here, after that decline set in.

Next year when the kings went forth to battle, Joab was sent on "the path of duty," and David loitered at home until Joab, to save his king's name, sent for him to gather the spoil at Rabbah (2 Sam. xii. 26-30).

The biographies of the Bible are true to life. David, as king, was approved of God; king, on whose throne Messiah would sit; the sweet singer of Israel, whose psalms have, and will, help to the upbuilding of the faith of God's children for all time; but his private life was blotted with a transgression, not counted heinous in the eyes of his neighbours, the kings of heathen nations, but "that abominable thing that I hate" by the God of Israel (Jer. xliv. 4).

Repentance and Confession.

Steps which led down the slippery path of sin. Self-indulgence. Neglect of duty. Self-gratification. Covetousness. Trickery. Treachery. Murder ("blood-guiltiness"). Joab was used as a tool, but he may not have been let into the secret of the plot. Heb. iv. 13 was true then. God and His servant Nathan knew, and called the sin rebellion. Ingratitude; violence; sacrilege (2 Sam. xii. 7-9).

The white light of God's justice (Psa. li. 4) revealed to David the sin of his heart and of his life (vv. 3, 2, 7). He confessed himself a sinner before God, a rebel, a traitor; of evil heart and wrong spirit, and pleaded God's mercy alone for forgiveness ("according to" answers to the "so" in John iii. 16), transgression, iniquity, sin; in other words, "rebellion," "twist," "missing" perfection (xii. 8, 9).

The Penitent Sinner Hoping in God (Psa. xliii. 5).

David's sin had come between his soul and God (v. 14), placed him in boudage (v. 12), shut out the joy of salvation, cast reproach on the name he professed, grieved the Holy Spirit, closed his lips for testimony. Neither repentance nor confession can undo the sin, but God can "put away sin," and cleanse the sinner by the sacrifice of Jesus (Heb. ix. 26; 1 John i. 9).

(v. 1). "Blot out," "wipe away" (Isa. xxv. 8) the record of evil. (v. 2). "Wash me." The Eastern process for cleaning cloth included water, fuller's earth, treading or beating, wringing, rinsing, and bleaching; and even then the snow shamed the linen for whiteness. (v. 7). "Cleanse me," as a leper is healed inside and out of his disease. (v. 7). "Purge me with hyssop" (pronounce me clean by sprinkling of blood (Ex. xii. 22, 23). Not only Nathan's word, but (Rom. viii. 16). "Say unto my soul I am thy salvation" (v. 6). What God requires in us, He will give us for the asking. A new heart, a right spirit, His Holy Spirit that we may want to do His will (Phil. ii. 13). His joy (John xvi. 24) Wisdom for service and praise. He can even break my hard heart with His love (v. 17).

Special Points.

(1) "To fight the battles of the Lord" was King David's work, and at war time his rule was to live in camp with his army (2 Sam. xvii. 8, xi. 11). No like temptation could have met him there and cause him to fall into sin.

(2) David worked out his plan cleverly and secretly. Did he forget "He knoweth the secrets of the heart"? (Psa. xliv. 21). Hidden sin makes a gloomy Christian.

(3) David seems to have been so much taken up with "the pleasures of sin," that he could not hear the voice of conscience till the Word of God pricked him to the heart (Acts . 37).

(4) The best are liable to fall under temptation. If the enemy can only get the evil in our heart to answer to his knock the fort is captured. Jesus only was "without sin." Jesus only can save us from the power of Satan. He is always within call (Heb. iv. 15, 16).

(5) God hates the sin, but loves the sinner. One who is truly penitent is sorry, because he had done what God hates and has grieved His Spirit; not because he has been found out, or disgraced, or punished.

HOW A HEART WAS CLEANSED.

A young man who attended a service at a small mission hall was asked afterwards if his heart was troubled. "Yes," he replied, "this meeting has done it for me." He added, "I've run through thirty thousand pounds, but no more races for me; this has done it." The missionary afterwards called on the young man and urged him to seek salvation through Jesus Christ, and grace to live a new life. After a struggle the young man decided to serve the Lord, and both he and his wife commenced family prayer and joined a neighbouring church. He had cried, as did David, "Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me" (Golden Text), and the Lord had heard the prayer, and changed his heart and life.

THE DEPTH OF GOD'S MERCY.

Visitors to the geyser districts of New Zealand are astonished at the hot lakes there. The natives are accustomed to bathe in the tepid waters, and though they cannot explain the phenomenon, they partake of the benefits of the pools and are cleansed. David, throwing himself upon the mercy of God, prayed that he might be washed thoroughly, have his transgressions blotted out, and be cleansed from his sin (vv. 1 and 2). The lovingkindness of the Lord is so inexhaustible and deep, that the marvels of nature fail to illustrate its degree. If the hot lakes of New Zealand are beyond human understanding, what can be said of the Divine love? It is beyond our finding out, and we can only marvel at the wonders of God's grace, as displayed to us, the creatures of time and sense.

REMOVING THE STAIN.

A few years since a statue erected in India to Queen Victoria was found to be badly defaced with a coat of coal tar. The authorities used every endeavour to discover the perpetrator of the indignity, but without success. An attempt was then made to clean the figure of the good Empress; but all efforts were found to be unavailing. At last, after many Europeans had sought to remove the disfigurement, a Hindoo offered his services, and promised, with the aid of a special fluid he possessed, to renew the beauty of the statue. He was allowed to experiment on the figure, with the result that the coal tar was entirely removed and the monument restored to its wonted condition. As there was but one man who could remove the stain of disfigurement, so there is but One, even Christ, who can take away the stain of sin from our lives. He who faces his iniquities has need to pray, "Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow" (v. 7).

THE IMPRESSION OF GOD'S LOVE.

When the King and Queen of Italy were recently expected in Paris, the chief gardener of the Luxembourg was required to furnish the dessert for the royal banquet. In order to please the guests he covered a number of apples and pears, as they grew on the trees, with paper, in which silhouettes of King Victor Emmanuel, Queen Helena, and President Loubet had been cut. It was hoped that the sun would ripen the fruit, and produce the portraits of the respective celebrities on the surface ere it was placed on the table as dessert. As the sun in the heavens could alone produce the required effect, so the image of God on our hearts can only be effected by the shining of the Sun of righteousness. David found forgiveness when he beheld God and realized the warmth of His love (v. 9).

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

WISHAW.

THE fortnight's Christian Temperance Mission with Dr. Henry and Mr. T. Armon Jones, which began in Wishaw on Saturday, September 26, is being prosecuted with unabated vigour and ever-increasing success. Audiences of not less than 1,000 men and women have assembled in the Town Hall night by night. Sabbath last was a red-letter day in the history of our community. In the afternoon Dr. Henry addressed a congregation of about 1,000 women, and in the evening a meeting of men numbering about 1,200. The interest created by the mission is wide-spread and profound. During the week, including both Sabbaths, 908 adult pledges alone have been taken. Our admiration of Dr. Henry, and our indebtedness to him, grow with each successive day's work. He is not merely a temperance reformer, familiar as few men are with the physiological, the moral, and social aspects of the question with which he deals, but, like Henry Martyn, he burns for God. He maintains that the time has come when Christian people need to recognise that the gospel of temperance is an integral part of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and should have its place in the church just as much as any other department of Christian activity; that on the church rests the primary responsibility of the success or failure of temperance reform, for it is the only organization that ever will or can solve the problem; that drink is the supreme hindrance to the church's work and the supreme foe of the kingdom of God. Dr. Henry is not content that his auditors should sign a temperance pledge, he pleads passionately for decision for Christ, and for absolute and unflinching loyalty to Christ. In Christ is not only the expulsive power that will deliver the drunkard, but the impulsive power that alone will carry this temperance crusade to a victorious issue.

Mr. Jones, with his magnificent voice of wonderful range and flexibility, still charms and melts and thrills the audiences. His presence is an invaluable aid in Dr. Henry's work. JOHN L. MCGREGOR,

Minister of Thornlie United Free Church.

Of the gatherings on Sabbath last, a correspondent writes: "The meetings were really wonderful. The great hall was filled with women at 3 p.m., and Dr. Henry spoke on 'Womanhood at its Best.' In the evening the building was packed with men, and the topic was, 'The Slaughter of Young Men' (on the text, 'Your choice young men are gone down to the slaughter'). To say that a deep impression was made is to put the matter feebly. Never, perhaps, have such gatherings been held in Wishaw."

The Wishaw Press says: "Dr. Henry came with a noble record of work done in other parts of the kingdom, and now that he has been amongst us a week, and having to some extent proved him, we can the more readily give credence and support to the extraordinary reports made concerning the success he has met with elsewhere in his great mission. He has natural gifts that peculiarly fit him for the great work he has undertaken. Dr. Henry is, of course, thoroughly Evangelical, and on the great question at issue takes up the highest possible ground—total abstention, not on the ground of expediency, but because the Word of God demands it. The meetings have been remarkably well attended, and the brilliant, persuasive oratory of the doctor, accompanied as it has been by the powerful and sympathetic singing of sacred songs by Mr. Armon Jones, has had most satisfactory results."

A correspondent of the Herald says:—"There is something more than wealth of language and fine phrasing in Dr. Henry's oratory; there is a tremendous force of moral earnestness underlying it all. The moment he opens his lips you recognize the ring of honest conviction, and you say to yourself: 'This is a man who speaks because he believes.' You become surer of this as he proceeds with his argument, at every step of which he seems to become more and more earnest, speaking with ever-increasing intensity, till you wonder that his frame can stand the mere physical strain. It is conviction on fire, moral passion at boiling point. Nor is there anything of froth about it; it is all solid brainwork, relentless logic, thought that compels thought, genuine feeling that inspires the like. Dr. Henry takes high ground in all his speeches."

Welsh Notes.

THE Bishop of Hereford was the principal speaker at the opening of new Y.M.C.A. rooms at Porth, Glamorganshire, a few days ago. In the course of his address, the bishop urged the members of the Association to be loyal to their own church and chapel. References were also made to the enormous need of influences which would tend to encourage sobriety and thrift, also of rescuing men from the scourge of betting and gambling. Certain sports of a degrading and brutalizing character were also severely denounced. At the close of his address, the bishop declared himself to be an optimist. He thought the nation was growing better, but not nearly so rapidly as should be the case.

The temperance report submitted at the annual meetings of the Welsh Baptist Union showed that the number of total abstainers in the Baptist ministry was constantly increasing. At the present time all the teachers and students in the colleges of the denomination are teetotallers. The report further recommended that at the next general election efforts be made to secure promises from the barrister candidates not to take briefs for the drink traffic.

The Residentiary Canonry in Llandaff, vacant through the appointment of Canon Roberts to the Deanery of Bangor, has been conferred upon Rev. William Lewis, vicar of Ystradyfodwg. During his thirty-five years incumbency at Ystradyfodwg twenty-two churches and mission rooms have been built at a total cost of over £60,000. Six new parishes have been formed, and twenty-five young men, resident in the parish, have been trained and ordained for the ministry of the Church.

At the quarterly meetings of the South Wales Calvinistic Methodists at Bettws, Ammanford, the valedictory address of the retiring president, Rev. J. Morgan Jones, of Cardiff, dealt with the subject of Faithfulness to the Fundamental Principles of the Connexion. A conference was held at which the essentials of the pastorate was the subject under discussion. A resolution of sympathy with those who have been distrained upon for the Education rate was passed, also another calling upon the Government to bring to a close the reign of terror in the Balkans. The statistics of the Connexion showed increase in almost every direction.

The thirteenth annual conference of the English Presbyterian Church of Wales has been held at Llanelly. The conference sermons were preached by Revs. J. Baillie and R. R. Roberts (Cardiff). The valedictory address of the President, Principal Owen Rys, M.A., of Trevecca College, was a most timely and valuable utterance. Especially was this the case with those portions of the address which dealt with the subject of Christian union. Principal Rys said that he did not plead for organic union now, but would urge, however, that (1) the faith which united them was infinitely more important than the opinion of forms which separated them; (2) in the age they were about entering upon the great controversy would be with rationalism, whether without or within the Church; (3) a better understanding and a greater unity not only for the purpose of defending their common faith, but also for accomplishing their common task, which was to win the people for Christ, and to make the principles of His Kingdom prevail in the religious, social, political, commercial, and industrial life of man.

The Christmas Letter Mission.—Secretaries, workers, and friends of the Christmas Letter Mission will be interested in the thirty-second annual issue of letters, cards, and envelopes which are now ready. In addition to those in English there are letters in Yiddish, Chinese, Spanish, and Welsh, and the usual ones in Braille and Moon type for the blind. Specimen packets containing envelope, cards, letters, and catalogue are sent post free for three stamps. Address the Secretary, 52, Long Acre, London, W.C.

About Books.

THE COMPOSITION OF SCRIPTURE.

Much of the modern criticism of the Old Testament has concerned itself with the unity or complex composition of the various books; and those who are best informed on the matter know well that hypotheses have frequently been built up on very slender foundations. Such discussions have generally been carried on with a total disregard of the feelings of those to whom the old Bible, and the whole Bible, is the most precious possession, as the Word of the Living God. Too often the theories have been accepted without examination, and believers have been unduly alarmed, or, worse still, have allowed themselves to harbour a fear of something which would have lost its terror if only it had been boldly faced.

Modern Theories Concerning the Composition of Holy Scripture (6d. Morgan & Scott) is a paper read by Rev. John Tuckwell before the Victoria Institute, or Philosophical Society of Great Britain. Facing the change of attitude towards Scripture, the author finds that "this is the more remarkable, since it is not due to any fresh light from modern scientific or other discoveries thrown upon the sacred page, but to the adoption of new theories formed to account for its composition." Comprehensive lists are given of the classes of difficulties which the critics claim to have more or less successfully dealt with, and of the concessions demanded at the hands of those who stand by the Book in its entirety.

Dealing with the matter of composite authorship, he declares that the theory is not arrived at by inductive but by à priori reasoning, and claims that it breaks down upon the first possible test, namely in connection with the account of the Deluge. Consequently it "ought not to be accepted as a scientific explanation of so unique and mysterious a problem as that of the composition of Holy Scripture."

Mr. Tuckwell makes a strong point of the use of such terms as myth or fable to describe the accounts or such events as the Creation, the Fall, and the Deluge, showing that the treatment accorded to the Biblical narrative in this way is unreasonable, and such as would not be applied to other history. Summing up, he declares "that the hypothesis from the reconstruction of Old Testament history which places the prophets before the Law, and treats the earlier records as legends, creates more difficulties than it removes, and makes larger demands upon our credulity than the most miraculous event recorded upon the sacred page."

Finally, the theory of spiritual evolution is examined, with the result that "it appears to contemplate a degree of religious ignorance in the earlier period of our race which did not exist, and a measure of progress therefore which could not have taken place." This pamphlet deserves careful attention. It will strengthen the hands of those who are striving to confirm young believers in the truth, and who may be called upon to make a stand for Evangelical truth against broad theology or open unbelief. The points dealt with are among the difficulties constantly encountered by busy workers.

Mr. Henry Frowde, of the Oxford University Press, is preparing for publication an édition de luxe, in royal 8vo, of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, illustrated with drawings on wood by George Cruikshank. Although these illustrations were made in the fifties, they have never yet been published; but they are fine examples of the artist's work—not only characteristic of Cruikshank's peculiar genius, but also thoroughly appropriate to Bunyan's text. Copies of the prospectus may be had from Morgan & Scott, 30, Paternoster Row, E.C.

A charming booklet under the title, Pressed Flowers from Palestine (1s. 6d.), which gives eleven actual mounted specimens of the flora of the Holy Land, will bring many, who can never visit the scenes so dear to them, more or less into real touch with the things which our Lord himself, during his earthly life cherished and handled lovingly. Four kinds of folding greeting cards (6d. each), and six smaller varieties (3d. each) each give one good specimen. (R. E. Randall & Co., 28, Westfield Road, Uxbridge Road, West Ealing.)

The October issue of The British Monthly is of great interest, by reason of its chief article being "Tottenham Court Road Chapel: its History and Ministers," by the well-known biographer of George Whitefield, Rev. J. P. Gledstone. With an abundance of engravings, some portraits and other reproductions of celebrated pictures descriptive of a past age, he gives us a splendid outline of Whitefield's life and work, with welcome information regarding the efforts of others to continue his devoted labours. Personalia.

Mr. and Mrs. Osborne Howe, acting under medical advice, have had to give up their intention to return to South Africa this year. They hope, however, to be able to go out early in 1904.

Sister Maud (of the West London Mission), a daughter of Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, is joining Miss Katherine Browne in her evangelistic and philanthropic mission in Norfolk villages. Miss Browne comes upon many cases of sickness and overcrowding, and Sister Maud, who has had large experience in nursing, is to undertake the work of ministering to the sick and suffering.

Dr. John Robertson, City Temple, Glasgow, who was to have resumed his evangelistic campaign in America in October, has been induced to postpone his departure in order to undertake a series of missions in the Old Country. He is at present at Somertown U.F. Church, Govan, Glasgow, and from there goes to Wishaw. Mr. R. F. Beveridge, the well-known Glasgow singer, is accompanying him. All communications about missions to be addressed to him at Christian Scotsman office, 122, Ingram Street, Glasgow.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.—Wednesday morning last week Euston Station witnessed the departure from London of a throng of 336 young emigrants (212 boys and 124 girls), who were on their way from London to Liverpool en route to Canada, under the auspices of the National Waifs' Association (Dr. Barnardo's Homes). Including these children, who form the fourth party of emigrants from the Homes this year, the Association has emigrated 1,191 boys and girls in 1903, and a grand total since it commenced this work of 14,848. A further small party of about thirty youths will, it is hoped, leave this week. Canada has testified, both through official channels and in many other directions, to the fact that these emigrants have formed a welcome and successful addition to the population of the Dominion. Many of the young emigrants have taken up Government grants of land, and are now doing well as colonists. The majority of the emigrants composing the present party will at once be placed out in situations in Ontario, where already over 3,000 applications for their services have been received. The emigrants will sail by the ss. Dominion from Liverpool.

The Churches.

Church of England.

It has been decided by the committee that the Liverpool Cathedral shall be built of local red sandstone. It is expected that the foundation will be laid early in the coming year.

The Bishop of Bristol, presiding at a meeting of the Church Congress General Committee, announced that he had received from a leading minister of the Wesleyan body in Bristol (Rev. Thomas Rippon) a letter stating that he was sure many of his co-religionists would be exceedingly glad to have the opportunity of housing some of those attending the Congress if the Bishop thought it advisable. The Bishop added that he had gratefully accepted the offer.

At Chapel-en-le-Frith service has been conducted for twelve years by the Vicar in the Volunteer Drill Hall, but on Saturday last the foundation-stones of a new church, which will accommodate 250 persons, were laid. Mr. W. H. G. Bagshawe, who has held the office of High Sheriff of the county, in laying one of the stones, said that Protestant simplicity would be a feature both of the building and of the services which would be held in it. Further, it was their earnest wish to work side by side with the Nonconformists. In these days, when ritualism was eating like a canker into our national religion, it seemed to him most important that all those who abhorred it should sink their minor differences and unite against the common foe.

Congregational.

At Bowden Church a recognition service was held a few days ago in connection with the settlement of Rev. John Holden, late of Chapel-in-the-Fields Church, Norwich, as co-pastor with Rev. Dr. Mackennal. In the course of the proceedings, Dr. Mackennal said the position of co-pastor was unique in their own history, and uncommon in the history of the Congregational churches.

Already 1,200 ministers and delegates have intimated their intention to be present at the Bournemouth meetings of the Congregational Union, October 14-18. It is anticipated that something like 1,500 will be in attendance, as many ministers and delegates who are not asking for hospitality purpose being present. Dr. G. Campbell Morgan has accepted an invitation to give an address on "The Responsibility of Congregationalists for the Evangelization of England."

The foundation stone of a new Congregational church, at Purley, Surrey, is to be laid on Thursday, October 15, at 3.45, by Mr. Evan Spicer, J.P., at which several ministers and friends have promised to be present, including Mr. Carvell Williams, who will speak at the evening meeting. The whole scheme, including a freehold site, will cost £6,000, but at present only the main building is to be erected, to seat 300, costing £3,700, towards which amount £1,850 has been promised.

Baptist.

A site of about an acre in extent has been secured, at a cost of £3,000, in Tyndall's Park, Bristol, for the new Baptist College for the West of England. It is situate near to the University College, at which the students take their arts course, and to Western (Congregational) College, where they attend some of the theological classes.

Rev. William Williams has commenced his twenty-seventh year as pastor of Upton Chapel, Lambeth Road. Coming to Upton when the church was small and the outlook full of fear, Mr. Williams, by earnest pastoral effort and marked devotion, united with preaching power, has built up a united church of 600 members, with a fine network of organized agencies for reaching the people.

Rev. W. Joynes has celebrated his fifth anniversary in connection with the church at New Southgate. The secretary reported that sixty-four members have joined the church during the year, making a total of 270 during the pastorate. At the public meeting Mr. F. J. Marnham presided, and the speakers included Revs. G. White, J. E. Jasper, Will Reason, M.A., and Allon Poole.

Three years ago memorial stones were laid for a large hall, class-rooms, and vestries at Chatsworth Road Chapel, S.E. The building cost £6,000. Pastor Archibald G. Brown announced on Sunday week that only £100 remained to be raised, and that the collections made that day would be the last, as one friend had offered to make up the collection to the required sum. Over £56 was contributed, and it was announced that "Chatsworth Hall" was now entirely free from debt.

On Saturday, September 26, a missionary rally for children, conference for workers, and public meeting were held at Vernon Baptist Church, King's Cross, W.C., under the auspices of the Y.C.M. Union, a society founded for the purpose of stirring up enthusiasm and interest in missionary work. Very encouraging meetings were held from 3.30 to 9 p.m. Among the speakers, besides Revs. A. Connell, and D. H. Moore, were Rev. J. G. Dann (India), Dr. T. G. Churcher (Tunisia), Mr. P. Huskisson (South Africa), and Miss Benham (China).

Methodist.

The general committee of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society is issuing a statement of the present needs of its foreign work. The £100,000 furnished by the Twentieth Century Fund is to be wholly expended on the laying down of new plant. About 250 more missionaries and £130,000 additional income are needed without delay, if the present responsibilities of the Wesleyan missions are to be fulfilled.

Additional accommodation has been provided at the four Wesleyan ministerial colleges for 262 students. It is anticipated that in two or three years this enlargement will enable the Wesleyan Conference to send all accepted candidates to one or other of these colleges, and meet the demands of the circuits by the appointment of trained men. The cost of the enlargement of Richmond (Missionary) College will be met by the Wesleyan Missionary Society. An appeal is about to be made for an increase of at least £3,300 in the present annual income.

The first service has been held in connection with the newly-formed mission at Chatham. It was conducted by Rev. R. Hall in the fine Town Hall, which has been rented for a period of twelve months for services until the new hall is built in the east-end of the town. The prayer meeting at the close was attended by about 200 people. There was a high spiritual tone throughout the whole service, and already the mission is creating an interest in the town, which speaks well for its future. The Navy and Army were well represented at the service. Mr. Hall is using the lecture room at the Soldiers' Home for his week-night meetings until the new hall is erected. In future three services every Sunday will be conducted in the Town Hall.

Presbyterian.

The twenty-fifth joint anniversary of the formation of the congregation of Union Church, Liverpool, and the settlement of Rev. A. Bannerman Barkway as minister, has been celebrated. Sermons were preached by Principal Dykes. The minister intimated that the membership was now 400, and that during the twenty-five years 1,803 had been received into fellowship.

The Mission Hall at Willesden Green, N.W., has been renovated. The walls of the Hall and kitchen were cleaned down and coloured by the members of the Men's Working party. The result won the warmest approval. The work was done at a trifling cost financially, and has meant real self-sacrifice on the part of the friends who worked after their ordinary labour during the day and on Saturday afternoons.

The new church at East Ham (Rev. T. G. Murray), built at a cost of £4,000, £3,000 of which was provided by the Synod, and the remainder by friends connected with St. John's congregation, Kensington, has been opened. A dedication service was conducted by Revs. J. R. Gillies and C. Anderson Scott, and the inaugural sermon was preached by Dr. George Hanson. A public meeting in the evening was presided over by Mr. Henry Robson.

Society of Friends.

The twenty-third anniversary of Sherborne Street Mission, Gloucester, has been held. William Baker and Harriette Withers-Austin gave helpful addresses to a large congregation, and at a public meeting the secretaries of the various branches of work gave encouraging reports. Mary H. Seekings presided. A series of special meetings succeeded the anniversary, conducted by William Baker and H. Withers-Austin.

Two conferences have recently been held at York to allow younger Friends the opportunity of meeting William Littleboy, of Birmingham, and two or three associated Friends. Two afternoon Bible-readings were also given by William Littleboy, and a special meeting, held at the house of a Friend, was attended by many of the young men in the meeting, when careful consideration was given to the question of each one taking a full share in the religious life of the congregation. The subjects of prayer, faith, and hope were specially dwelt upon at these meetings, which were felt to have been very solemn and heart-searching opportunities.

Thanksgiving services were held last Lord's Day at the Central Hall, Leytonstone, N.E., in recognition of Mr. Ernest Borton's recovery from a serious illness. The hall was densely packed, many having to stand, and a number had to be turned away. Mr. Ernest Borton preached in the evening. The collections taken were sent to the London Hospital as a thankoffering.

The third anniversary of the settlement of Rev. D. Hayes as pastor of Berger Hall, E. (Home Mission centre of the Regions Beyond Misssionary Union) was celebrated with much enthusiasm on September 28. Rev. Archibald G. Brown preached in the afternoon, and a public meeting followed in the evening, at which Mr. Will Crooks, M.P., presided, and addresses were given by Revs. John Wilson, of Woolwich, F. H. King, Dr. Harry Guinness, and others. The Secretary, Councillor A. W. Yeo, reported good progress; the church was never so healthy and prosperous.

Owing to the stormy weather it has been deemed advisable to remove the tents in which services have been conducted throughout the summer at Cobo Bay by Mr. B. H. Angel. The mission will be continued for the present in La Croix Room. Ever since its commencement the work has aroused an interest in the neighbourhood which justifies the scheme which is now being brought forward for the erection of a mission hall. Already a sum of £140 has been subscribed toward the cost. It is encouraging to the local workers to welcome so many regularly to the service, and they are leaving no stone unturned in their efforts to accomplish the undertaking. They are hopeful that with the assistance of friends it will be possible to erect the new hall at an early date, as the room utilized last winter proved much too small.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. Canon Burkitt, for many years incumbent of Kilcooly parish, aged eighty-nine years.—At Belfast, Mr. James Beatty, for a long period an elder in the Presbyterian Church, and a zealous Sunday-school and church worker, aged seventy-seven years.—At Belfast, Rev. Thomas Johnston, senior minister of Trinity Church, Bailieborough, aged sixty-six years.—At Portstewart, Rev. Canon Wade, late rector of Magherally, co. Down, aged seventy-eight years.—At Portrush, Mr. Andrew Huston, a devoted Methodist class leader and local preacher, aged eighty-three years.—Miss Ferguson, Belford, Northumberland, very suddenly, at the age of seventy-four; but strong and well, and active in many branches of Christian work, till in a moment she was called to the higher service of the life beyond. Her helpful, loving sympathy will be missed by many.—Rev. Jesse Aubrey, Baptist. He entered the Pastors' College in 1881, and laboured, first at Aldershot, and then at Windsor. At the commencement of 1902 he was stricken with paralysis, and was ordered by his medical adviser to go to the South Coast. He went to Bexhill, and there, on September 24, entered into the joy of the Lord.—Mrs. Pope, wife of Alderman Pope, L.C.C., and the oldest member of the Presbyterian Church at Wesbourne Grove, W., having joined when the late Dr. King came to London to form the church in October, 1860.—Samuel Rogers, of Toronto, a member of the Society of Friends. His death will be a heavy blow to the Friends of Canada Yearly Meeting. For many years he had been as a father in the work of the Church.—Rev. Dr. J. W. Hathaway, for eighteen years a Presbyterian minister at Jersey City, U.S.A.—At Torquay, aged 81, Rev. Charles Noel Mann, formerly vicar of St. Issey and rural dean of Pyder.—On Friday last, at Blackburn, Rev. F. L. Shillito, chairman of the Lancashire Congregational Union, pastor for twenty years of Furthergate Congregational Church, Blackburn, and chairman of the Blackburn Free Church Council. A native of Hull, he relinquished the shipping trade for the ministry, and studied theology at Rotherham College. Two of his sons are in the Congregational ministry.—At Belfast, Mr. George Wilson, an earnest elder and an active worker in connection with the Presbyterian Church.

Irish Notes.

NINETEEN Irish missionaries are going out to the mission field this autumn under the auspices of the Church Missionary Society. Eight of these are returning after furlough, and eleven are going out for the first time.

Encouraged by the result of the round table conference on the Irish land question (the outcome of which was legislation leading up to the recent Land Act), Captain Shaw-Taylor now proposes a similar gathering for the purpose of considering the Irish University problem.

During the decennial period, 1891-1901, the Roman Catholic population of Belfast increased only 26·12 per cent., while the Protestant population increased 40·84 per cent., a fact which shows that Ireland is becoming more Protestant than it was, and that Protestantism is increasing in Belfast much more rapidly than Roman Catholicism.

At present several Jews are engaged at the Cork International Exhibition, and several of these are quite distinct from the Jews resident in Cork. Two Church of Ireland missionaries have been working among them, and one of these states that "some are indifferent and some are self-righteous beyond measure," while a small number "are very willing to speak about religion."

Mr. M. J. F. M'Carthy, author of "Priest and People in Ireland," in his address to the electors of Stephen's Green Division, Dublin, says: "I denounce, in the name of Christianity, the policy of extermination now pursued day after day toward our Protestant fellow-citizen." He adds, "I shall oppose the endowment by overt or surreptitious means of any sectarian religious college or university, to be dominated by priests with power to confer degrees in science and arts and the liberal professions." It is a pity there are so few Irish Roman Catholics with the same enlightened views of matters as those possessed by Mr. M'Carthy. If there were, Ireland would be a more prosperous country than it is.

Reformers in Spain.—An influentially-signed circular is sent out by the Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society calling attention to the need for a trained native ministry in the Peninsula. At least once a year the congregations are visited by the Spanish-speaking commissary of the Irish Council of Bishops, and visitors bear uniform testimony to the zeal, Evangelical spirit, and self-denial of the Reformers; but they cannot maintain their ministers and teachers without external help. Last year Rev. J. M. Harden, B.D., was appointed principal of a training college in Oporto. To meet the cost of maintaining this institution and recent extensions an additional £1,000 per annum is necessary. The Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society warmly commends to its friends the cause of the brethren who are bravely and earnestly struggling to free their fellow-countrymen from unlawful terms of Roman communion and the darkness of unbelief. The secretary is Rev. T. J. Pulvertaft, Church House, Deans Yard, Westminster, S.W.

Mr. JOHN A. GROOM, in connection with the WATERCRESS and FLOWER GIRLS' CHRISTIAN MISSION, receives into his Industrial Training Homes, girls who are Blindness and Acute Suffering.

An Old Man, 74 years of age, blind through cancer in the eyes, which is now spreading all over the face. In addition to this sad affliction he is also suffering from an internal disease. He and his aged wife are greatly in need of assistance, as apart from the little their married children are able to give them they have nothing at all to depend on except charity. Who will help to make their old age free from anxiety? Surely pain and blindness are terrible enough without poverty.

Death of Mrs. D. L. Moody. It is with deep regret that we announce the death, last Saturday, from Bright's disease, of Mrs. D. L. Moody. Never aspiring to personal leadership, or to prominent public appearance, she was a tower of strength to her husband, and, in the words of their son, "his greatest human resource." The beloved evangelist owed more than he could tell to her wise counsel; and spoke of her as "the best wife God ever gave to a man." Travelling widely in America and on the other continents, she was loved wherever she was known. Mr. Moody made the acquaintance of Emma C. Revell in 1858, when she was only fifteen years of age, and was associated with her in Christian work till their marriage in 1862. The outcome of the life in that home, where her influence was paramount, may be read in her sons who have responded to the parents' example, and, each in his own measure, are witnessing for Christ.

The Open Fields. The time of harvest has nearly passed, and the wheat is stacked upon the ridges of the Downs. In all the woods and coppices the leaves are browning and falling. A feeling of autumn is over everything, and in our hearts there should be thankfulness to the Giver of all good gifts for His mercies. Remembering the Divine promise to Noah, that "while the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease" (Gen. viii. 22), we ought not to forget those other harvest fields to which our Lord alluded, and the perennial time of sowing the seed of the word of salvation—that grain may be scattered in the crowded streets of the great city as in the lonely hamlet or the moor side, for "the field is the world" (Matt. xiii. 38). The harvest of that seed-time will not be seen in its fulness until it is gathered in the heavenly garner, glorious with those who wear Christ's white raiment, "that both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together" (John iv. 36).

Petting the Wolf. There was launched the other day from the shipyards of Messrs. Armstrong and Co., Limited, Newcastle-on-Tyne, not only a State barge for the Sultan of Turkey, but also a war cruiser for the Ottoman Government. As though the fact were not sufficient in itself, in face of the feeling of the best portion of the nation in regard to Macedonia, the occasion was made one for rejoicing at a luncheon, and for gratulation of the Turk and his abominable rule; for defence of the Sultan as "more sinned against than sinning," and for an attack upon "the emotional" gentlemen who, one speaker said, "make mischief in the papers." Lord Armstrong lauded "the great Sultan who guarded so wisely the destinies of Turkey," and said that, by building that war vessel "we are strengthening the hands of a brave and loyal ally in upholding her just cause against the most unprincipled of adversaries." Surely revenue derived from such trade as this must be cankered, and the rust of it shall be a witness (James v. 3).

The Negro Problem again. Mr. J. A. Hobson deals trenchantly in the Nineteenth Century with the present revived dominancy of slave-owning sentiment in portions of America; and, basing his views upon the trend of opinion in regard to recent unpleasant events in the States, he remarks:—

> It is no exaggeration to say that the democracy of America is on its trial in finding a solution of the Negro question. If the White Southern opinions are permitted to dominate the situation, the festering sore will eat away the democracy of the nation. For the Negro race does not die out, it grows at almost the same pace with the White population.

And that growth, Mr. Hobson testifies from personal observation, is largely in noble directions:—

> The proved capacity of a considerable section of the coloured population is to build up a national and moral civilization for their race along the lines of American progress . . . I found in Charleston a population of at least 4,000 belonging to this class, earning a good livelihood as professional men, clergymen, lawyers, teachers, &c., with four or five churches, several schools, and a highly organized society of their own. In every city of the South this class is found.

Surely the problem is not merely that of fidelity to the principles of the Federal constitution, but one for solution by the Church of Christ in America.

The Church and the Child. All lovers of childhood will be grateful to Mr. George White, M.P., for his very candid and sympathetic presidential address at Derby on "The Church and the Child." Nobody will be flattered by it, but it cannot fail to stir the conscience as to the Church's duty. It is alarming to be told that, in proportion to the number of the children, there are 50,000 fewer teachers in Sunday-schools than there were a decade ago, in consequence of which many superintendents are driven to accept any volunteer teacher, whether fit for the work or not. It is little wonder that there is such a terrible abyss between the school and the Church; a mere minority passing from one to the other. We need teachers—real teachers—who can do something more than "say a few words" to the young. Children want teaching.

What is Teaching? We often wonder if many people grasp the meaning of the word "teach." To entertain them with stories, keep them quiet in view of prizes, lecture them—this is not teaching. Anybody will not do as a teacher. There must be tact, love, and training. The whole question of religious training for the young will have to be faced as never before, in view of recent events and future developments. But, above all, parents need to know the Divine art of teaching their own offspring the ways of the Lord, for there is no school like the home.

"Holy Corners." In an article on "Children's Prayers and Prayer Manuals," which appears in the current number of the Contemporary Review, Mr. E. A. Cooper deals a little flippantly with some aspects of children's devotions, but his paper is valuable if only because it throws light upon some of the numerous books of "instruction" for which we have to thank the Ritualist trend towards Rome. One of them has full directions for fitting up a "Holy Corner" in the nursery. Of others, written for girls, Mr. Cooper says they contain > passages of sickly sentimentality, many attempts to teach highly exaggerated respect for the clergy and other ecclesiastical authorities, and some of the writing on the subject of confession becomes hysterical and vulgar.

Prayers and Votes. Some suggestions on prayer which are contained in another booklet to which Mr. Cooper refers are, however, worthy of the consideration of children of an older growth, for the writer has a thoughtful word of warning against the habit of "rushing into prayer the moment we are on our knees, while the echoes of daily life are still vibrating in our ears." The writer says also to older readers:—

> Imperialism is in the air, and how much of it penetrates our prayer? We feel citizens of no mean city, but do we pray for our fellow-citizens? We regret War Office mistakes, do we pray any harder against war? Do we regret that we have no direct interest in public affairs, and yet neglect to pray that earnest public-spirited men may be elected? Surely prayers are as powerful as votes!

The Place where the Lord lay. It would appear that there is nothing sacred to the modern dramatist and novelist. A recent announcement notifies the advent of a work of fiction "which deals with sacred events in a bold manner," and which will have a frontispiece from a photograph of a Greek inscription upon the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea impugning the "historical fact of the Resurrection." The brief story of the secret disciple of Christ, the "honourable counsellor" who had waited for the Kingdom of God (Mark xv. 43), and who went boldly to crave the body of Jesus, is not to be swept aside by the pen of a novelist. The short narrative is too circumstantial for that, and although such interesting traditions as that which brings him to Glastonbury may be doubted, there is no ground for supposing that the man who was privileged to lay the body of Jesus in the sepulchre was not fully acquainted with the facts of the Resurrection of our Lord. Few events narrated in history have a stronger base of indisputable evidence than the Resurrection and Ascension of Christ (Luke xxiv. 36, 48).

What Next is to Go? We have been informed ad nauseam that all the "legendary" elements of the Bible may go—all miracles and early histories—and yet there will remain to us a solid foundation for faith. Those who make the statement seem sadly deficient in logic and in observation. As a fact, the majority of those who have discarded the "superfluous" elements in the Bible (as they term them) have discarded the foundation too. When men begin to tamper with one thing, they too frequently end by renouncing all. We confess to some astonishment that Professor Garvie can pen the following words upon the subject of the Fall :—

I have ventured to plead that Evangelicalism should give up using the story of the Fall as a foundation for its theological structure. . . . There is "full and good reason for letting this doctrine fall out of the Gospel we believe and preach."

This "full and good reason" he finds in a newly-published book in which the story of Genesis is declared to have for us no theological foundation, and Paul's authority upon the subject is discounted. Are students for the ministry to be taught this? The giants of the pulpit have believed in a Fall for better reasons than their poor successors have for denying it. A man cannot preach with power of the Second Adam, who came to destroy the works of the devil, and at the same time relegate to the limbo of myths the First Adam and the fall of man. In very truth we need a revival to banish these fogs of destructive criticism.

The Vanishing Sense of Sin. Our spirited contemporary, the Christian Endeavour Times, is publishing a symposium upon "The Next Revival." By one of the contributors the present deadness is thus accounted for :—

The religious deadness which prevails to-day is entirely due to the fact that men hold loose views about sin, and consequently about redemption. They do not mind sinning against God, the Centre of all; is it astonishing they have no conscience about sinning against their brethren? Hazy notions about evolution and criticism have produced a false philosophy of life, which is working ruin to the people.

This testimony is true, and such utterances as that of Dr. Garvie will not tend to make consciences more sensitive about sin. We must go to roots and causes, and there is nothing which so truly accounts for the beginning of wrong as the Biblical Story of the Fall. Sin is not an accident, it is an hereditary taint and it had a beginning. The Bible tells us of that beginning, and no philosophy will shake it. An Indian missionary of great experience, in delivering his farewell address last week before his return to India, said, "To us who see human nature at its worst, there is no question of a Fall." There are too many men we fear who only see human nature from the study, or through coloured glasses. One of the deepest needs of our day is a revived conscience about sin.

The New Paganism. We are hearing much from our statesmen, day by day, about the material solidarity of the Empire, yet the dream is apt to be rudely dispelled by an adequate study of the character of the nation at large, which, alas! seems to be forgetting the Divine dictum that "righteousness exalteth a nation." Under the title of "The New Paganism," the Daily News of Tuesday pointed out the danger of "the Paganism into which we are sinking —a Paganism of sheer animal hunger and craving." Our contemporary rightly avers that "the life of that section of society which has cast off all Christian ethical restraints, and repudiated all Christian spiritual influences and ideals, is not in its pleasures or pursuits what anyone would call Greek, and certainly it does not reproduce the rough, healthy vigour of the Teuton or Norseman."

London's Outcasts. A pitiable state of things has been revealed by the Daily Graphic in an illustrated article describing the human denizens of Hackney Marshes. This spot is the dumping ground of much of London's refuse, and here are to be found men who live in holes that their own hands have made, and feed upon the garbage that is unloaded there. The diet of the Prodigal was a feast compared to theirs. It is a horrible revelation of the depths to which men made in the image of God can fall, and a ghastly satire upon our vaunted civilization! Cannot some tactful Christians in the neighbourhood go to these degraded outcasts, and take them the message of the Saviour's love? It will not be an easy task, and may need special wisdom, but this is to be had for the asking.

A Report upon Housing. The report of the Housing Committee of Birmingham just prepared for the city, contains a number of suggestions which will be exceedingly useful elsewhere. The evidence proves conclusively that a great deal of the squalor found in decaying houses is self-induced by drink, gambling, and improvidence, and that too often the condition of the houses is due to the habits of the tenants. The provident and thrifty among the very poor when living in slumdom are reported as keeping their houses clean. These two things are significant, and they apply, we fancy, nearly everywhere. The Birmingham Committee is against the idea of municipal building, yet it only "encourages or compels" landlords and tenants to keep the property sanitary. There ought to be no alternative. "Compel" is the only word in place here. Yet we think that cities like Birmingham might with advantage study the L. C. C. work at Tooting. It is all nonsense to say that this "does not pay." Nothing pays better in the long run. It would really pay any town to destroy its "rookeries" and to start again —that is, it would "pay" in the best and most enduring sense.

An Appalling Picture. In view of the threatened legislation by the Government next session on liquor matters, some facts unfolded in an address by the venerable Dr. J. B. Paton might well be impressed deeply on the mind of the public. £180,000,000 a year is spent by this nation on drink, which means that every family of five spends £21 annually on intoxicants. Making allowance for teetotalers, and remembering the proportion of working-men in the nation, this means that something like nine shillings a week is spent by these "families of five" on drink. This fact is in itself appalling, and becomes more so when we remember the innumerable evil consequences that flow from the habit. It almost makes one feel, as the speaker said, that "this country is sweeping down into a fœtid swamp of alcoholism." Any further facilities and immunities given to the drink trade by the Government would be criminal when we remember that, already, it seems to hold the people in the hollow of its hand.

Public-Houses as Landmarks. We are glad to welcome the action of the London County Council in substituting the names of streets for those of public-houses in designating the various stages of tramway journeys. The bad custom of thus marking distances by "houses of call" was obviously a survival of the old coaching days. Lingering on into another era, it not only gave drink-shops a free advertisement and a false importance, but at the same time had the evil result of bringing the drivers and conductors of omnibuses within reach of perpetual temptation to drink and low company; and though the great majority are highly respectable and sober men, some have been known gradually to succumb to the constant sight and smell of intoxicants, and so to contract habits of intemperance. It would be well for all omnibus and tram companies, and for the public, if this reform were followed throughout the land.

The Proposed Garden City

A FRESH stage was marked last week in the progress of the experiment, under the auspices of the Garden City Association, for the solution of the allied problems presented by over-crowding in the cities, and the continued desertion by the labouring population of the rural districts for the centres where there is no room for them. Members of the Press, leading citizens, and the general public were on different days invited to view the site which has been purchased near Hitchin, Herts, for the First Garden City; and, while many points are still to be settled which may materially affect the value of the project, the directors have our heartiest good wishes in their efforts for the well-being of those who are least able to protect themselves.

At the same time, we are disappointed with the attitude assumed to the drink traffic. There are evils underlying overcrowding, and though it is true some of these are beyond the reach of the political economist, this one at least is capable of being grappled with, so far as the particular area is concerned. It is of the utmost importance, therefore, that this should be done at the outset. Men and women are huddled together mainly because they have spent their earnings on drink, and it was hoped that with healthful conditions of life they would also have been freed from the temptations presented by the immediate proximity of the public-house. Our lawmakers and respectable citizens generally are too often ignorant of the extent to which poor weak mortals yearn for deliverance from a snare which they are unable to resist. The weak find themselves continually subjected to a strain which those who are stronger take care to banish from their own vicinity.

AN INDISPENSABLE CONDITION.

One of the papers issued by the company promises that the liquor traffic shall be "under strict control." Far better that it be abolished. Two licensed houses exist on the property as taken over, and there seems to be no intention on the part of the directors to close these; while the phrase quoted indicates that additions to their number may be expected. The fact that the community will probably benefit by the profits of the traffic does not help matters, but rather introduces complications which make them worse. Many have been watching this movement with keen and sympathetic interest, and we trust it is not yet too late for those who have influence in its councils to exert themselves so as to secure this much-to-be-desired end. Otherwise we believe the experiment is doomed to comparative failure as a means for the righting of social ills, whatever promise it may give at the outset. The Cadbury experiment at Bournville abundantly justifies the elimination of drink from succeeding Garden Cities.

"Love to be well out of Sight" was the motto of more than one of the great saints. And though that does not sound at first sight like great saintliness, yet it is. There are few better evidences of great and sure saintship, than just to "seek obscurity."—Dr. Alex. Whyte.

THE UNVEILING.

THE TWO VISIONS OF REV. VII.

THIS chapter (vii.) is a test of what has been advanced in the previous notes, as to the symbolism of this book, which is the top-stone of the Scriptures. Are the Twelve Tribes of Israel here mentioned to be regarded as the literal tribes of the literal Israel, or as symbolic of the Israel of God—the Church of the living God? This question may be answered by another: Are the seven lampstands of John's first vision to be regarded as merely the literal branches of the seven-branched lampstand or as typical of the seven churches? Is the "One like a son of man," a Levitical priest, or the Priest after the order of Melchizedek?

It has been laid down as an axiom that the first mention of any significant or important word in Scripture supplies the key to its subsequent use. Adopting this as a truth, it will be observed that the first symbol employed by the Revealer is the twelve golden candlesticks or lamp-stands, with the explanation that "the seven lamp-stands are seven churches" (ecclesiai). If the lamp-stands seen in this vision were typical of the Christian assemblies (which is the N.T. meaning of the word ecclesia), and if the "One like unto a son of man," typified Our Great High Priest, Jesus, the Son of God (as is generally believed), must not this be regarded as the key to the book, affirming its symbolic character, and requiring, or at least suggesting, that the other visions should be interpreted on the same scale?

If the seven lampstands represent seven churches, the "One like a son of man" must represent not one of the peculiar nation, but one of the entire race (John i. 49-51). One with human sympathies (Heb. v. 1, 2). The One who walked in the midst of the lampstands—the churches, was necessarily the Melchizedek Priest, King of Righteousness and King of Peace (Heb. vii.); the First and the Last and the Living One, who died, but is alive for evermore, and has the keys of Death and of Hades. This is the faithful Witness, the Firstborn from the dead; and the Coming King. Must not the twelve tribes of Israel therefore represent the Israel of God, the bride the Lamb's wife, the Holy City with twelve foundation stones engraved with the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb? (xxi. 9-14)?

The 144,000 were in the vision seen and sealed before the winds of the great and terrible tribulation of the ages were permitted to begin to blow. After this vision had passed the Seer beheld an innumerable multitude of all nations and kindreds and people and tongues, who have come through that great tribulation; and prominent among them the last generation, who have suffered through its awfully intensified closing crisis. The Lamb, their Shepherd, guides them to water-springs of Life, and God wipes all tears from their eyes.

Who are they? They are the same people as the 144,000 seen from another point of view, the Redeemed in their largest and most comprehensive circle, from Adam and Eve (for we trust that our first parents repented toward God and believed in the promised Seed), down to the last of the regenerate generation, who shall be one of the witnesses of Him who cried, "It is finished!" (Psa. xxii.).

No opinion is here expressed as to whether the Church, in the limited sense of the word, dispensationally begun at Pentecost and completed at the Lord's return, passes through the final crisis of the tribulation, or otherwise. Is not this amazing unveiling larger than dispensational distinctions? As the roots of all God's revelation are in Genesis, so the fruitage of it all is in the Apocalypse. As the topstone of the pyramid is itself a pyramid, so this topstone of the Bible is itself a Bible.

Dispensations are like the scaffolding necessary in the process of building, but to be removed when the building is complete. Or like the forms in a school, which are done with when the education is finished. Therefore must not the Church of the Redeemed comprise all who are of faith, from the first believer to the last? And does not this wondrous Bible-in-miniature give a bird's-eye view of the past, the present, and the future, revealed in Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalms; in the Gospels, the Acts, and the Epistles; gathered up and pictorially presented in these vivid visions to the spiritual sight of this banished man in the Isle of Patmos, in spirit in the Lord's day? M.

THE SYMBOLS IN REVELATION VII.

The four corners of the earth.—East, West, North, and South.

The four winds.—Cp. "The four spirits [winds, mar.] of the heavens, which go forth from standing before the Lord of all the earth" (Zec. vi. 4). "Who maketh His angels winds, His ministers a flame of fire" (Heb. i. 7). "The winds are those on which God rides, and are the symbols of His judgments."

The seal of the living God.—A seal is used for many diverse purposes: e.g., ownership, preservation, concealment, appointment to office. Here ownership and preservation are included.

The earth, the sea, the trees.—Earth and sea comprise the whole world (as ch. x. 2, 5, 8). Milligan says: "The word tree is used in its ordinary sense, not as meaning the great ones of the earth," though he adds, "such meanings are by no means out of keeping with the tone of the Apocalypse." See Isa. xiv. 8; Ezek. xxxi. 16. Why may not the trees here mean men generally, not only the great men?

The servants of our God.—Not servants as distinguished from sons, but servants of the lowliest and most devoted order, because they are sons: "His servants shall serve Him and they shall see His face, and His name shall be on their foreheads" (xxii. 3, 4). Their Lord took the form of a bondservant, and the Apostles regarded it as an honour to be His bondservants.

144,000.—The square of 12 multiplied by the cube of 10. Much might be said of the significance of this number, as of numbers generally, in creation and in Scripture, We confine ourselves here to this: "The number 12 (= 3 × 4) combines 'the signature' of God and 'the signature' of the world. Twelve is the number of the Tribes of Israel and of the Apostles of the Lamb. The number 1,000 is the number of universality. When 1,000 is multiplied by the square of 12 the meaning is 'a multitude which no man can number' (vii. 4, 9; xiv. 1)." S.C. More simply: the number 144,000 is a definite and complete geometrical number, to which not one can be added nor one taken from it, without destroying its symmetry. It is the number of the people of God: "I will sift the house of Israel among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth." "All that the Father giveth Me shall come to Me; and him that cometh to Me, I will in no wise cast out." "The Church which is His body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all." From the Head and His members, the one body, the Christ, nothing can be taken away, and nothing added (Amos ix. 9; John vi. 37; Eph. i. 22, 23; v. 30-32).

Out of each Tribe, 12,000 sealed—the same number out of each.—Here again, the purpose of God according to election is expressed. As the same number from each tribe is sealed and safe; as Pharaoh welcomed all Joseph's brethren simply for Joseph's sake; so, as many as receive Him, the Word made flesh, become children of God and are accepted in the Beloved (John i. 13; Eph. i. 6).

The children of Israel.—The Israel of God—the Church of the living God on earth, sealed with the seal of the living God (Gal vi. 16; 1 Tim. iii. 15; Rev. vii. 2). The vision shows them to be sealed for preservation from apostasy, before the winds of tribulation blow.

The Innumerable Multitude.—The same people of God, out of all nations through all time, after the winds of tribulation have blown.

The Unworldliness of Missionary Work.

By Rev. J. P. GLEDSTONE.

THE apparent harshness of our Lord's command in sending forth His disciples to preach the Gospel of the Kingdom may well make us halt; and, indeed, if we were not so familiar with His words, we should often pause and ask what He really means. Between familiarity with His sayings, which allows them to glide over our minds like water running over a smooth stone, and the common worldly way of regarding things, we are always in danger of going our own way and grieving the Holy Spirit. For example, our Saviour has enjoined us to pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth labourers into His harvest. How much is that command observed? Does it prompt and guide public prayer as much as it ought to do? I do not at this moment remember whether it has a place in the Book of Common Prayer. Is it often heard in ordinary prayer meetings? In missionary prayer-meetings it may be, but they are special. Has the prayer its honoured place in family and private prayer?

I do not think it can be pretended that Christians are as mindful of it as they might be, and yet it is the very spring and fountain of missionary work. Without Divinely-sent workers the enterprise can never flourish. Money and organization may be supplied, but everything depends upon the missionary, and he depends on God. God will never send the incompetent, the unworthy, the unfaithful; He will send those whom He can use and honour.

But is it not too much the way among Christians to restrain prayer for more workers until more money is in hand? The exchequer rules the policy, and determines too much the number of workers. But surely our Lord meant us to believe that when He had sent the workers, He would also send the means of their support. There may be difficulties, times of straitness, but they are only to try faith, to intensify desire, to provoke more prayer, to deepen the sense of dependence upon God. In the end, our Heavenly Father will justify the obedience that has dared to be true to His word. The Divine policy is—pray for workers, and then look to God for the means needed to maintain them and the work. The worldly policy is—count your money, and then look for your workers. Where faith and obedience come in along this line, no one can tell.

Again, our Lord said to His disciples that He sent them forth as "lambs among wolves." And it was literally true. The rulers of the people, the Herods and the Neros; the priests, Caiaphas, and the men in the temple of Jerusalem and those in the temple of Diana; the crowds in the cities, ignorant, superstitious, bigoted, sensual—were they not like wolves? What was life to them? "Herod killed James with the sword, and when he saw that it pleased the Jews, he proceeded to take Peter also." How like a lamb among wolves was Stephen among the crowd that stoned him! And the missionaries and native Christians among the Boxer mobs in China! This is the only way in which the Divine work can be started. Some must perish. But they are received into the everlasting mansions, into the very hands of Christ. The brief struggle or the lingering torture is "but for a moment" when compared with "the far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

And not one of them dies in vain. To die for a cause is to compel others to think of it, as no argument of words can compel; it states the nature of the cause, reveals its inmost heart and purpose, as no eloquence can unfold them; it pleads the cause in the most impressive and persuasive manner. It is no fancy to believe that Stephen's death affected the heart of the young man called Saul, who held the clothes of the murderers. The outbursts of deadly ferocity in China have always been followed by times of religious advance.

The only way by which fierce men, whose hearts are full of bitterness and deadly malice, can be changed into Christians is by a supreme display of the pre-eminently Christian spirit of meekness and forgiveness. Hatred fans hatred, spite intensifies spite, force repels force, but what can the world do against a spirit that accepts persecution and death? It can only capitulate. "God chose the foolish things of the world that He might put to shame them that are wise; and God chose the weak things of the world, that He might put to shame the things that are strong; and the base things of the world, and the things that are despised, did God choose; yea, and the things that are not, that He might bring to nought the things that are: that no flesh should glory before God."

The history of the progress of the Gospel has abundantly justified the method of its propagation. The lambs have not been devoured by the wolves—all of them; the wolves have been, and are being, changed by the lambs. Human prudence is not the measure of the Divine thought. We ought to be "wise as serpents and harmless as doves," but it is with "wisdom that is from above," which is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without variance, without hypocrisy.

The Glory at the Appearing—2.

By Rev. G. P. McKAY.

III.—SOME FEATURES OF THE GLORY.

THAT any glory should be brought to us who, because of sin and wicked works, deserve "shame and everlasting contempt," is in itself a wonder of redeeming grace. That such glory as is outlined in the Word should be reserved for us, may well produce amazement and profoundest awe. But there it is; and we do well to seek to measure it, that gratitude, and praise, and love, may be aroused within our hearts.

(1) "With Him in glory," is the first glad thought that we obtain. As "he that had been possessed with the devil prayed Him that he might be with Him," so have we all who in His precious name have learned to trust. It is the new creation's most pronounced desire. It is the heart's wish also of the Lord Himself. "Father, I will that they also whom Thou hast given Me be with Me where I am, that they may behold My glory." The promise is distinctly given regarding it: "When Christ who is our Life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory." The manner of the entrance into His bright presence has even been revealed. "For the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, . . . and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so (in that way) shall we ever be with the Lord." Or, as the Apostle elsewhere puts it: "He which raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise up us also by Jesus, and shall present us with you." By a glorious resurrection we shall be "absent from the body ('this body of death'), and present with the Lord."

For ever with the Lord:
Amen, so let it be!
Life from the dead is in that word:
'Tis immortality!

(2) "We shall see Him as He is." The pain of our present position is that we love Him but have never seen Him, and the heart cries out for a sight of its Well Beloved. By faith, it is true, we may be said to see Him. We see Him in His Word, in His ways, and in the experiences of our daily lives. But this is only "seeing" in a secondary, or figurative, sense—"through a glass darkly." The day of "His appearing," of His revelation, or unveiling, is approaching. Then "thine eyes shall see the King in His beauty." In all His living, grand, reality He will be manifested, and this feast to the eyes will be part of the glory to His saints. The very directness of it will bring the bliss. Not "through a glass," but "face to face." Not with the eyes of Matthew, Mark, or Luke, or John, or Paul, or Peter. But "I shall see for myself!" "Oh, that will be glory for me!"

(3) "We shall be like Him." Now, though "partakers of the Divine nature," how very little are we like our Lord! How far short of His glory do we fall! His is the beauty of holiness—the radiant lustre of perfection. Alas, that those who own His name do not more fully bear His image! His is the glory of absolute knowledge and eternal wisdom. "Now I know in part," and that is all. He hath been raised and glorified; and in a nature destined never more to die, He sitteth at the Father's side. But His people are still in the flesh; still have the body of their humiliation. Well may they, therefore, hail the day when all this shall be changed—when He "shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of His glory," and when we shall be wholly like Him in His sinless character and perfect mind.

VICTORY AND POWER.

(4) "We shall also reign with Him;" that is, "if we suffer" with Him. This honour have not all, even of the saved. There are some—multitudes—who shall be reigned over, rather than reign. "To Him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with My Father in His throne." "One star differeth from another star in glory; so also is the resurrection of the dead." Princes and commoners shall be there as well as here; but there the difference between the two shall not be "of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man"—it shall be through the character attained while here, and "according to the deeds done in the body." "If so be that we suffer with Him, we shall be also glorified together." The palm of victory and place of power are surely for the conqueror.

(5) "Every man shall receive his own reward." "Praise and honour and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ." That is the order of things. "Behold, I come quickly; and My reward is with Me, to give every man according as his work shall be." Then is "the time of the dead, that they (being raised again), should be judged, and that Thou shouldest give reward unto Thy servants." Soul-winners shall then, like the Saviour, "be satisfied." They shall see around them those whom they have led to Him: "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at His coming?" Martyrs shall then be crowned; and even lowly saints, who in obscurity have served the Lord, shall be partakers of the glory; but the bestowment upon all must be "according to their works."

ETERNAL SERVICE.

(6) "His servants shall serve Him." This will be "joy unspeakable, and full of glory." Even at the present time there is no happiness to be compared with that of serving Him in any way. Alas, how feebly and imperfectly this service oft is given! When with unwearied powers, nay, powers all perfected, we hasten to fulfil His will, how rapturous will be our joy!

In what way we may render service, through the ages to come, it is impossible for us to know; but in "the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God," there shall be many ministries. "The nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it"; and this may mean that God shall use the Church of Christ as the channel of blessing to the whole wide world. It may be thus that "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." At any rate, the Master means to give His servants work to do, and much of the glory promised shall be found in doing it.

(7) "The Communion of the Body of Christ" shall then be perfected. All the members of that body, formed and fashioned according to the places to be occupied, shall be brought unto the Head, and the whole compacted together as only love Divine, in the eternal glory, can unite them. "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." "A glorious Church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing." Oh, what amazing bliss to find oneself in that glad throng! What joy to meet there honoured saints whose names have been as household words! What rapture there to recognize, and to commune with, those to whom by earthly ties of kinship and of love we had been bound! All this is part of "the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ."

Much might be said regarding the vast influence this theme should have upon our daily lives. But space forbids. "The faithful and wise servant" will surely seek to occupy each hour for Him whom he expects to meet. "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when He cometh, shall find so doing." Let all of us so watch and wait, and work and pray, "that, when He shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before Him at His coming."

"Our Father in Heaven."

By Dr. BALGARNIE.

YOU have heard, perhaps, the story of the actor who was asked at a social gathering to favour the company by giving his famous reading of the Lord's Prayer. As he rose to comply with the request, the spirit of that prayer took possession of him. He had taken upon himself to address "the King eternal, immortal, invisible;" he was face to face with God. As never before, he felt the awe and solemnity of his position. With trembling lips and uplifted eyes he began to repeat the sacred words, "Our—Father—which—art—in—heaven." He got no further. A great sob of uncontrollable emotion on the part of his audience put an end to the episode—the company broke up in tears.

Ah, if we only paused a little to think of what is implied in those time-honoured words before repeating them; of the sacred and tender relationship which they assume to exist between the worshipper and the Hearer of our petitions; of the love of Him who spared not His Son for us, and has promised with Him also freely to give us everything, that prayer of the ages would be more to us than it often is; it would be more reverently uttered; it would have a deeper meaning for our hearts; it would give to us a truer sense of the unity of the family of God and the love and beneficence of our Father in heaven; it would be

THE PRAYER OF SONSHIP.

But we must look upon this prayer of the ancient Jewish Church, formulated by our Lord for the use of His disciples, as amplified, elucidated, and brought home to our hearts, in Christ. It is God, our Father in Christ, that we know and pray to, whom we trust, and reverence, and love. It is His Name that is to be hallowed above every name. It is the advent of His kingdom we supplicate, and His will we bow to. In coming to Him we shall never hunger. Through Him we have forgiveness, and are enabled from the heart to forgive others. He keeps us from temptation, and delivers us from evil. He is, in short, all our salvation and all our desire.

And so this prayer which our Lord has taught us, is still the prayer of the ages. It is the cry of humanity. It is such a prayer as Abraham might have been inspired to offer when he had seen Christ's day afar off; as Socrates and Plato might have been taught to utter in moments of highest enlightenment; as the men of Athens in Paul's day were groping for—"feeling after God," striking the harp-strings in search for the lost chord—and such a prayer as the Christian Church now daily offers, in the fulness of its meaning: "Our Father which art in heaven . . . deliver us from evil."

For our Father is in heaven. "Neither in this mountain, nor yet in Jerusalem;" neither in the east nor the west; neither in this church nor that church; neither on the altar nor among the priesthood; but God over all and near to all that call upon Him in truth.

O Thou by whom we come to God,
The Life, the Truth, the Way,
The path of prayer Thyself hast trod,
Lord, teach us how to pray.

Baptists at Derby.

AFTER the gatherings of Monday evening last week, the delegates to the Baptist Union assembly at Derby turned to the consideration of the work of the Baptist Missionary Society. Notwithstanding a dull morning and drizzling rain there was a large attendance at the two seven o'clock services. Rev. John Bradford preached at Pear Tree Chapel, and Rev. W. H. Whitley at St. Mary's Gate. The designation and valedictory service was held in King Street Wesleyan Church, and was presided over by Mr. Edward Rawlings, of Wimbledon. He assured the missionaries around him on the platform of the deep prayerful spirit with which they were regarded by all Baptists, and in their name he wished them God-speed as they returned to their labours, or went out for the first time with hearts burning to extend their Master's Kingdom in the dark places of the earth.

The following missionaries are returning to their respective fields of labour: Rev. H. E. Crudgington, Rev. C. J. and Mrs. Dann, Rev. W. and Mrs. Davies, Rev. F. W. and Mrs. Jarry, Rev. S. S. Thomas, and Rev. T. and Mrs. Watson, for India; Rev. R. C. and Mrs. Forsyth, for China; Rev. J. R. M. and Mrs. Stephens, Rev. A. and Mrs. Stonelake, for the Congo; and Rev. W. K. Landels, for Italy. Leave was also taken of the following, who are going out as reinforcements: Revs. J. W. Ginn, F. Hasler, O. J. Millman, P. Noble, Dr. G. Orissa Taylor, and Miss Esther Armitage Taylor, for India; Rev. G. T. Wood, for Ceylon; and Miss Emily Denton, for the Congo. The departing missionaries spoke briefly and received a sympathetic hearing. Several of them pleaded for reinforcements, pointing out that the magnitude of the task before them is far beyond the powers of the present small band.

The valedictory address, from Rev. James Owen (Swansea), was a plea for great sympathy with, and consideration for, the missionary, who finds it terribly hard to gain access to the minds of men of another race, another language, different prejudices, and different ways of looking at things. Globe-trotters, newspaper correspondents, army or navy officers, and traders, were often cruelly unjust to the missionary, of whom they only caught a flying glance. Mr. Owen very touchingly bade the missionaries farewell, in the name of those who would remember them in their prayers, and be eager to hear of their success. They were afterwards commended to God in prayer by Dr. Glover, of Bristol.

The missionary sermon drew a crowded congregation to King Street Chapel in the afternoon. The preacher was Rev. Hugh Black, who took for his text Acts xiii. 49. He uttered a solemn warning on the possibility of Britain ceasing to become, as Jerusalem ceased to become, the chief focus of religious activity A nation which ceased to realize its responsibilities would soon lose its privileges. The time had come for the Gospel to be sounded in this land with an insistence that would compel attention and obedience. The ambassador for Christ must stand up boldly and state to the world the terms of reconciliation. In this Gospel-hardened land of ours, we need a more strident note of warning, for we, too, are having our chance, like the Jews. It might be, we might be passed over for the hardness of our hearts—God forbid it! It would be so unless we repent—God grant it!

The public meeting in the evening was held in the Drill Hall. At this gathering, Mr. W. P. Hartley (treasurer of the Primitive Methodist Missionary Society), who was in the chair, welcomed the opportunity of associating himself with another branch of the Free Churches. He was glad to find that the spirit of Carey abides with Baptists to-day, and pleaded that the great bane of all missionary enterprise—lack of funds—should be removed by the followers of Christ devoting a definite share of their income to His work. Rev. J. M. Logan made a passionate appeal for better support of the missionary cause.

As a Congo missionary, Rev. W. L. Forfeitt, of Bopoto, told the story of the pioneer work that had been accomplished, and the progress that is daily reported in civilizing and Christianizing the natives. Dr. Vincent Thomas held the attention of the audience while he described what is being done in Palwal, North India.

NONCONFORMISTS AND CHILD-LIFE.

Wednesday was mainly spent in discussing public questions. The first session proper of the Union was held in the morning in Victoria Street Congregational Church. The President's address was considered to be one of the most practical ever delivered before the Union. It dealt with "The Nonconformist Conscience in its relation to Child-life," and as Mr. White has been a Sunday-school worker for nearly fifty years, and since the age of four has not spent a Sabbath out of school except when on holiday, he is looked upon appropriately as an authority on the subject. The main purpose of his address, as he made clear at the outset, was to impress upon the churches the urgent need which exists to give the Sunday-school a more important place in their life and work.

From this he branched off into the general question of national education. Mr. White began by admitting the enormous improvements in the conditions of school life which have taken place within the last thirty years. He went on to insist that very much remains to be done, instancing striking statistics as to the employment of school children out of school hours. While there had been improvements, "it is my conviction that interest and sense of responsibility have not increased inside the Church in the same ratio as outside, and in no branch of educational work has so little real advance been made as in the Sunday-school and other Christian agencies for the help of the young." The membership of the churches showed that there was only about one in 500 under fourteen years of age, and about three in 100 under eighteen.

It was now commonly agreed that it was the duty of the State to pass protective laws for the children, and that it should assist their physical, mental, and moral development, and provide educational facilities by which there was equality of opportunity. Mr. White here briefly sketched the history of national education. "We have fought," he said, "for a national as against a sectarian system, for the people against the priest. And for the moment we are beaten; but one battle does not end this war. Meanwhile the 'child in the midst' suffers; but we repudiate the charge that we think more of the wrongs of Nonconformists than we do of the rights of the child."

Proceeding, Mr. White went on to criticise defects in Nonconformist Sunday-schools. The church is put well to the front, the Sunday-school behind or underneath. Numberless colleges train ministers to preach to parents; not one trains teachers for children, and in most colleges there is no class in which the future minister can learn how to talk to the young. The teaching staff of the Sunday-school rarely contains the best that the Church can give.

In making a series of suggestions for improving the Sunday-school of to-day, the President contended that there should be among other things more suitable buildings, on day-school lines, with special attention to the necessity of retaining the elder scholars; organized house-to-house visitation, as in America, to bring children into the Sunday-school; recognition of the Sunday-school as an integral part of the Church in Church meetings, where teachers should be solemnly set apart for the work. The Church will lose itself it it does not work more earnestly for the salvation of the children.

IMPORTANT RESOLUTIONS.

The delegates adopted unanimously a resolution expressing satisfaction with the ratification by the Court of Appeal of the action of the Farnham magistrates in declining to renew licenses on the ground that they are not required, "thus again authoritatively declaring that the discretionary power of the justices is unfettered and absolute." The churches were urged to offer resistance to any legislative proposal which may tend to fetter the magistrates in their patriotic attempts to reduce licenses.

A resolution on the question of the insertion of degrees in the Baptist hand-book was moved by Rev. S. Hirst, of Burnley. As finally carried, it laid it down that the action of the Union, as far as the insertion of degrees was concerned, should be retrospective for the last five years, "provided that no degree shall be inserted unless the name of the body conferring it be added, and the Council are satisfied that it has been conferred by a genuine educational institution." With regard to degrees from any source outside Great Britian, no new one should be inserted unless the Council was satisfied as to its origin.

Rev. J. G. Greenhough introduced the Free Churches' resolution on Macedonia. He pungently criticized the Government for its inaction in the face of the admitted horrors of Turkish misgovernment, and pointed out that the only anger expressed in Mr. Balfour's letter was anger against the insurgents, who had risen after enduring intolerable sufferings.

The afternoon session took the form of a protest meeting against

THE EDUCATION ACT.

Several messages of sympathy were read from Baptist bodies in this country and abroad. Among them was a resolution passed by the German Baptist Conference held in Berlin last month, expressing regret at the infringement of religious liberty in England, and joy at the courageous stand of the passive resisters. A resolution, passed by the Baptist Convention of the Maritime Provinces of Canada, said that nothing could have occurred more calculated to quench colonial ardour for the mother country than this reversion to ecclesiastical inequality and injustice. Several addresses condemnatory of the measure followed, the speakers including Rev. Charles Williams, Mr. George White (president), and Dr. Clifford, who was greeted with great cheering. He claimed that the Education Act, "intended for our suppression, will prove our exaltation, and will lead to our freedom from manifold fetters to a larger usefulness. We feel the heel of the Pope on us, and are determined to have it off."

Mr. T. H. Engall spoke in terms of disapproval of passive resistance, which he denounced as illogical and without Scriptural sanction. Some experiences of the working of the Act in a country district were given by a minister from Sudbury, in Suffolk. He had some startling stories to tell about clerical influence on the newly-constituted educational bodies.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNION.

Amendments in the constitution of the Union occupied the assembly on Thursday. The most important of the proposed alterations in the Council's scheme had to do with the meetings of the assembly of the Union. It is proposed that instead of holding two meetings in the year, one in the spring and another in the autumn, there shall be only one gathering, namely, the autumn assembly. According to the scheme, this meeting would be held in London every fourth year, and the remaining three years in the provinces, the Council to have power to convene special assemblies. Roughly summarised, the alterations would have the effect of reducing the size of the Council by about one-half, and abolishing the power which at present rests in the Council of electing honorary members to their own body. After considerable discussion the scheme was withdrawn for the present.

Apart from the actual business sessions, one of the most significant events of the week was the public meeting in the Drill Hall on Thursday evening, for "the enunciation and exposition of Free Church principles." The building was filled to overflowing. Dr. Clifford spoke on "Religion and the State" with a passion and eloquence that moved the entire audience; and Mr. Lloyd George, M.P., who followed, spoke of the serious crisis with which the nation is faced, the result of the triple alliance between priestcraft, drink, and the force of political corruption.

Out-going Missionaries.

GOOD-BYES were said last week to a large number of missionaries proceeding to all parts of the world under the auspices of the Church Missionary Society. As in recent years, it was necessary to divide the friends into two companies, and on Wednesday evening words of parting were spoken to and by those proceeding to Egypt, Palestine, Turkish Arabia, India, and Mauritius. Sir John Kennaway, Bart., M.P., who occupied the chair, referred to the wonderful progress that had been made with missionary work, and traced how the C.M.S. from small beginnings had grown and prospered, and had found a world-wide sphere for its labours. He showed that during the last twenty years the number of missionaries had been doubled; and yet they had times of difficulty and depression, and only last year God had put their faith to the test.

When reading the roll of names, Prebendary Fox called attention to that of Archdeacon Buswell, mentioning that when first "dismissed," forty years ago, he was the youngest worker among an outgoing party of seventeen; that night he was the oldest amongst a party of 182. It is interesting to note that Dr. Muriel Scott, who is proceeding to the Punjab, is the first lady who offered herself to the C.M.S. to be trained for medical work.

In the course of a brief but earnest speech, Rev. A. D. Lash, who is returning to South India, exhorted the young workers to "live in the sun." It was only by living in the sun of God's presence that they could have strength for that work.

THE CRY OF THE SOUDAN.

A very strong appeal on behalf of Khartoum and the Soudan was made by Rev. Ll. H. Gwynne. He mentioned that in one sense the death of Gordon meant the salvation of the people of Soudan; and already since his death the principles of justice, liberty, and righteousness were spreading abroad all over the country. There was a grand opportunity for British Christianity to win the Soudan for Christ, and yet, in spite of that, they allowed one man to hold the fort where there ought to be fifty. Dr. A. H. Griffith, going back to Palestine, spoke as the representative of Medical Missions, and Miss S. Bland, who has seen twenty years' service in India, represented the missionaries to India's women. She enlarged upon the opportunities for work among the women of India, and the appreciation with which their efforts were received by their Hindu and Mohammedan sisters.

Rev. R. H. A. Haslam, representing Canada, said that if those who stayed at home were only true to Jesus Christ, he believed that the financial problem of Missions would be solved, and that not only would they get 500 extra workers, but ample funds to support them in the foreign field.

A deeply interesting valedictory address was given by Rev. E. Grose Hodge, rector of Holy Trinity, Marylebone, his theme being the necessity for a closer study of the missionary problem and a deeper realization of the Divine Will. There had been voices, he said, telling them of a crisis in the Society, whispering of retrenchment and retreat. He did not think the answer would come first in a great wave of enthusiasm, in larger giving, or in a new organization, but rather in a new revelation of the claims of Christ. He wanted not merely a consecrated purse, but a consecrated life; and their earnest prayer should be that they might all have a soul consecrated to the Divine Will, that He might use it for the good of men.

THE CHURCH'S DUTY.

On Thursday evening, Colonel Robert Williams (treasurer) presided over another great meeting, when leave was taken of the missionaries proceeding to Africa, Ceylon, China, and Japan. In his opening address, the chairman made a frank reference to the present state of the missionary funds, saying that though they were but a small company, it may not be possible to send as many next year. The message so often reiterated, that God's calls were never louder, and the openings among the heathen never larger, does not seem to have taken hold of Christ's Church as it ought; and the Society is feeling that there is at least a pause in the regular increase of gifts that might be expected. Yet even sending these missionaries ensures more calls in the future, because every soul converted becomes a centre of Christianity, and extends the bounds of the ever-spreading work.

When introducing the missionaries by name, Rev. Prebendary Fox explained that the numbers were not to be taken as a subject for self-congratulation or complacency, but rather as a cause for humiliation because of their smallness. The missionaries returning to the field numbered 111, and the new recruits seventy-one, in all 182. Of the 111, thirty-six are clergymen, four doctors of medicine, nine laymen, twenty-seven wives of missionaries, with thirty-five unmarried ladies. Of the new missionaries, fourteen are clergymen, four doctors, thirteen laymen, nine wives of missionaries, with thirty-one other ladies.

Representing West Africa, and also speaking for those who were returning after furlough, Rev. H. Proctor (of the Niger Mission) reminded his hearers that the missionaries do not desire pity, believing that it is those who remain at home for whom pity should be felt; but they do yearn for prayers and sympathy. The missionary's life is a happy one, in the knowledge that he is obeying the Master, and in the sense of His continual presence. In 1891 a copy given to him of the little book, "Do not Say," led him to think, and pray, and act, so that he was soon described in his own neighbourhood as "missionary mad." As a motto he left the words, "Helping together by prayer" (2 Cor. i. 11).

UNTHOUGHT-OF POSSIBILITIES.

A searching word was spoken by Rev. D. J. Rees (of the Usagora Mission), as representing East Africa. Recalling the way in which the Lord took the rod in the hand of Moses, and proved that there were in it, when used by Him, possibilities undreamt of before, he showed that in God's hand there are in every Christian possibilities undreamt of, undiscovered, unthought of, untried, for missionary work—"possibilities that would astonish yourselves if they were tried." How much there is in each one for missionary work is a mystery, until God uses and handles His servant.

Rev. W. R. Gray (Japan) called for volunteers from among strong Christians who have done with self altogether, Christians who have the Holy Ghost and who know it.

An innovation at these meetings was an address given by Miss M. E. Turnbull, who spoke of village work in the district round Ningpo, and pleaded with all her heart the cause of the women whose lives are so full of sorrow and hopelessness.

As a missionary going out for the first time, Rev. J. E. M. Hannington (son of Bishop Hannington), who goes to Uganda, deplored the small proportion of professing Christians who really pray for foreign missions.

As a recruit from Islington College, Rev. J. J. Butler (Fuh Kien Mission) compared Christians who do nothing to spread the Gospel to a courier bearing a pardon for captives under sentence of death who allowed other things to distract his attention, and did not deliver his message till it was too late.

Speaking for the "short-course" men at Islington, Mr. J. Parker (South China) traced the striking results which had come out of a preparatory class conducted by a voluntary teacher in Belfast, and of which he was a member. Addressing his brother young men, he quoted the promise of the Father, "Certainly I will be with thee"; the promise of His Son, "Lo, I am with you alway"; and the motto which had been his own, "Do it heartily." Behind all organization stands the Lord Christ; and he asked for prayer that all the lives of those now leaving might be lived in the power of the Third Person in the blessed Trinity.

The meeting was closed by a solemn message from Rev. E. N. Sharpe (Emmanuel Church, West Hampstead) based on God's call to faithfulness, and the assurance of His own faithfulness.

Dr. Horton on "The Marching Orders."

THE Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, in his presidential address, delivered on Tuesday morning in Richmond Hill Church, Bournemouth, delighted the Assembly, to which over 1,300 ministers and delegates were appointed, by the way in which he left the beaten tracks, and struck out for himself a new path, delivering an earnest plea for faithfulness to the Commission received from the Lord Jesus Christ. To Him Christianity is an Evangel, and the Church of Christ exists simply and solely to deliver God's message to men. "The expansive movement, therefore, is not," he said, "accidental or occasional, but permanent and essential. Only as the banners move forward does the army remain in discipline. It can know nothing of barracks or winter quarters, for its purpose is to move on, and always on, until the message is delivered to all nations, and the Evangel has become the common property of humanity. From this it follows that whenever, or if ever, or even so far as, the host forgets its functions, plants the banners, and settles down, it falls into disarray, it becomes disorganized, it is found to be ineffectual for the camp, as it was unequal to the march."

The Evangel, or message, the meaning of which they needed to recover, so as to see the purpose of their existence, and feel the thrill of the forward movement of the host of the Lord, was, he said, so brief and so definite that a compendium could be made in a sentence. Here it is: "God so loved the world, that He gave His only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." The salvation of the Church from the "disintegrating work of criticism" was in the deliverance of this message; and here Dr. Horton made a very striking reference to the recently-published "Encyclopædia Biblica," the dangerous nature of which has been pointed out in The Christian. Dr. Horton said that it tended "to show that we have no Bible, no Divine Redeemer, and no miraculous power to work," adding: "If my friend Professor Cheyne had spent his life in demonstrating the miraculous power of the Gospel among the Hindoos, we should have missed that monument of his prodigious learning and industry, but he would have contributed to an encyclopædia of even greater practical value. A few facts from the front, the shout of the King with the advancing host, are better evidence for Scripture, for Christ, and for the Spirit's power than any other arguments. And if the Church were better employed in that respect, she would be able to smile far more serenely at the extravagances of criticism."

At some length Dr. Horton dwelt on the duty of setting the missionary enterprise in the forefront of the work of the Christian Church as (1) proved deductively from the very nature of the Gospel, as it was given by Christ, and as it is experienced in our hearts; then (2) as verified inductively by marking the general lines of Church history, for the quality and efficiency of the religious work of the Church had always been determined by the degree and the progressiveness of the missionary enterprise.

In his closing remarks Dr. Horton pleaded with his fellow Christians to make it clear to themselves as well as to others that they were an army of conquest. The cause of apparent failure to-day arises from their not presenting Jesus Christ as He is to those who are not Christians. "Our missionary work must be a part of our faith, wrought into the texture of our life, a part as integral as the conviction that we are pardoned and saved for Christ's sake. . . . If only the Churches would realize this opportunity, and would commit themselves to this act of obedience, they would find that they had all means and power for the work at home. He who issued the great order prefaced it by saying, 'All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth.'"

The Kensit Commemoration.

A YEAR has elapsed since Mr. John Kensit was laid low by a cruel hand, but the work which he inaugurated with such spirit to counter the efforts of Romanizers in the Church of England, has gone vigorously forward. The first anniversary of his death was celebrated last week by a series of demonstrations of the Protestant Truth Society, which were marked by large attendances and by enthusiastic appreciation of the evident intention of Mr. J. A. Kensit and his friends vigorously to maintain their enterprise.

Two meetings were held in the Memorial Hall, E.C., on Thursday last. In the afternoon Mr. A. R. Macdonald, J.P., presided. He advocated the extension of the work of the Wickliffe preachers, particularly on account of the invasion of England by nuns and monks, and of the efforts made by Romanists to influence the children of Protestants. In this connection the speaker gave a strong warning to parents, and instanced the case of a district in which many of the Protestant young people are sent to Romanist schools, drawn by the specious promise that "there shall be no interference with religious belief." Thus the rising generation are familiarized with Rome.

PROGRESS OF THE MOVEMENT.

At the outset of a striking address, Mr. J. A. Kensit, who followed, repudiated the charge that his late father took up the Protestant cause in order to gain notoriety. On the contrary, it was his life-work; even while a choirboy, when taken to oppose a Protestant meeting, he was impressed by the Bible truth there proclaimed, and soon came to realize the evils of priestcraft. It was so long ago as 1885 that the City Protestant Book Depot was started, and it was only when stronger action became positively necessary that he denounced the manifestation of Ritualism at St. Cuthbert's, Kensington. The file thrown at Birkenhead, while slaying the man, could not destroy the principle, and the crusade for upholding Protestant principles goes rapidly forward. There are now thirty agents at work, and these during the past twelve months have visited 441 towns, and held 2,561 meetings, with an estimated aggregate attendance of 690,000. Thousands of copies of controversial and Gospel pamphlets have been given away. Through the labours of Mrs. Kensit, the Ladies' Union has doubled its membership. It is hoped to carry out, ere long, the scheme for the erection of a memorial training-home, so that the preachers may go forth fully equipped for their two-fold work of proclaiming the Gospel and sounding urgent warnings against sacerdotalism.

FROM LANCASTER GAOL.

Three Wickliffe preachers, Messrs. W. C. Moss, John Hodgkinson, and A. Simpson, next gave breezy reminiscences of their late experiences in Lancaster Gaol, where they were sent for a month, for open-air preaching at Barrow-in-Furness, and were detained until the Home Secretary interfered. They sang hymns in their cells until reminded that "silence was the order of the day." Declining Ritualistic manuals, they improved the time by Bible study, and met the protests and arguments of the Ritualist clergy who visited them.

The last speaker was Rev. F. S. Webster, who, in the course of a cordial endorsement of the Protestant Truth Society, and the work of the preachers, said that in these days, "when it is regarded as a sign of deep intellect to have no convictions in particular," it is refreshing to find young men willing to go to gaol for the Gospel's sake. Doubtless there are many difficulties to surmount; but, though justice fail and the leader fall, let the preachers rejoice in the God of their salvation.

In the evening Lord Kinnaird presided, and the speakers included such Protestant champions as Revs. Dr. C. T. Porter, H. Lindsay Young, and Pastor W. Cuff. The final gatherings were at Hampstead on Saturday last, when, after the unveiling of a memorial erected by the London Council of the United Protestant Societies over Mr. Kensit's grave, there was an impressive meeting of friends and sympathizers on Fortune Green.

Good Work in Billingsgate.

THE twenty-fifth annual meeting of the Billingsgate Christian Mission drew together a good company of friends on Thursday last. For a quarter of a century the work of ministering to the needs of men labouring in the fish markets has grown in importance and developed in its usefulness; and the noble pile of buildings in which the agencies of the mission now centre, serve as a forcible reminder to the outside world of the power and purpose of the Gospel. Among those who benefit by the mission, are fish and fruit porters, sailors, ships' firemen, fishermen arriving with the steam trawlers, and men employed in the markets, wharves, quays, and warehouses in the vicinity. In addition to these, large numbers of warehouse porters, clerks, barrowmen, messengers of all sorts, turn to this centre of Christian philanthropy in their time of need; in fact, there is not a class in the dense mass of daily toilers whose work takes them into the neighbourhood, which is not represented among those who are helped in one way or another.

The president, Mr. F. A. Bevan, occupied the chair, and a survey of the year's activities was made by the secretary, Mr. Alfred Walters. The number of patients who receive medical and surgical attention increases yearly. In 1900 they numbered 2,016, last year 7,437; and computing the number for the last four months of the present year to be in the same proportion as the eight preceding, it is expected that the attendance for 1903 will reach quite 10,000. The new surgical ward (opened by the Lord Mayor in April last) is now in full working order, and the cost of the same, amounting to £447, has been defrayed. While the hospital is a beneficial subsidiary to "Guy's" and other similar institutions, it has, by meeting a long-felt need, become of supreme local importance. It is recognised by and receives support from the Fishmongers' Company, Grocers' Company, Salters' Company, Blacksmiths' Company, and others.

The services of the entire medical staff are rendered free of charge. There are four fully-trained hospital nurses and two probationers in residence, and a doctor in attendance each day. No charge is made for medical or surgical attention, but, where it is possible, patients are invited to contribute toward the current expenses. Mr. Walters had much to say that was cheering concerning

THE SPIRITUAL SIDE OF THE WORK.

A permanent missionary is engaged all day in the market or visiting the homes in the neighbourhood; opportunities for pressing home the claims of Christ have been taken full advantage of when dealing with the patients; the Monday noon meetings and other evangelistic services in the hall have been fruitful in results.

A statement by the Treasurer (Mr. W. H. Williamson) was followed by an address by Preb. Webb-Peploe, in the course of which he spoke to the workers on some of the things required of those who would follow in the steps of the Master. He had frequently met with two extremes among men; those who lack the grace of humility, and others who have let go all pride but are filled with despair. The path which Christ desires his followers to take is between these two. "Ye are the light of the world," was His designation of His disciples. A candle cannot give light unless it be consumed, just as the seed cannot fructify till it has died. The speaker went on to urge his hearers to preserve a calmness of spirit and demeanour, resembling a light, which only fulfils its true purpose when perfectly still.

A hearty word was also given by Dr. Harry Guinness, who referred to many signs of the times indicating that the end of the age draws near, and the second coming of Christ at hand.

The Chairman expressed the joy it gave him to be connected with a mission so progressive and useful, and spoke of the great boon the new ward is to those who are victims of accidents. Dr. Stansfeld added a few words in appreciation of the services rendered by the medical staff and nurses; and afterwards, on behalf of the committee, made a presentation to Miss Jack, a devoted labourer in Billingsgate.

47,000 Men in Bible-Classes.

A RECENT Sunday was observed throughout North America as Bible Study Rally Day by the Young Men's Christian Association. At their request numbers of the pastors spoke in their churches on Bible study. Last year over 47,000 men of the City Railroad and Student Associations were enrolled in Bible-classes. Notwithstanding much that has been said as to the Bible losing its popularity, it is not shown to be so with the Associations.

The college men alone will buy fully 40,000 copies of Bible-study books through its International Committee this year. These Associations have nearly 2,000 classes in 500 colleges and universities; 319 of these college associations have undertaken to double the number of men enrolled in their classes. They are arranging to hold fifty-three Bible study institutes in twenty-nine different States, with the help of the State and International and Student secretaries. These men expect to secure Bible classes in every institution, both high and preparatory, in North America. In one University a Bible-study secretary is employed by the Association, who has 290 students in thirty-three small group Bible-classes.

Jewish Work in Whitechapel.

IT is indeed a great joy to inform you, and I do so with profound gratitude to Almighty God, that at length the Gordon Calthrop Memorial Mission House of the Barbican Mission to the Jews, is free from debt. "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." By the gift of £200 from a valued and large-hearted friend, our buildings are clear of encumbrance, and henceforth, without let or hindrance, will be held in trust for the Lord's work among Israel. The same friend is very desirous to do another service to the Mission.

Many of you know that we have for some time been in doubt in regard to what we should do with the vacant site adjoining our mission building in the Whitechapel Road. Our first idea was to sell it and so pay off the mortgage held by our bankers; but we were not clear about this, as many friends, whose judgment can be trusted, advised that it would make an excellent open-air preaching ground, and suggest that it should be reserved for this purpose.

The same kind donor who has freed our building from debt asks me to make known that she is ready to give £500 towards the retaining of the vacant site, and fitting it up as a preaching ground, and also a place where little Jewish children of Whitechapel may play when it is not being used for open-air services. But this gift is conditional upon the whole of the £3,000 required being subscribed.

This offer the committee and myself feel it only right to accept. It comes in answer to definite prayer for guidance, and when the entire sum is received, it will be our great joy to devote the land to the same blessed service as the Mission House, in the walls of which the God of Israel has done great things ever since it was opened in May, 1901.

The importance of this open-air work needs no argument. Many Jews who will not enter a Christian place of worship will stop by the way and listen to an earnest preacher. We have been urged by many to make the most of our great opportunity, and affix an open-air pulpit to the Mission House property. This course has now been resolved upon in the fear of God, and with sincere gratitude to the Lord of the harvest who gives us this additional open door of service.

May I humbly venture to suggest to you who read these lines, prayerfully to lay this request before the Lord, that He may show you what is His will for yourself, and for others, in this matter. I will most gratefully receive contributions towards this praiseworthy object, which may be sent to my address, or to the secretary, Prediger C. T. Lipshytz, Gorringe Park House, Mitcham.

H. W. Webb-Peploe, President.

Itinerating in Qua Iboe.

THE following interesting letter, with details of visits paid to some of the towns lying between the Qua Iboe and Opobo rivers, has just been received from Mr. Edward Heaney. It will be seen that several of these towns, in common with hundreds of others in the same district, have never before been visited by a missionary:—

"During the past dry season I have been able to do a great deal of itinerating, especially in directions in which there is hope of starting permanent work in the near future. The work done in this way has been very encouraging, and the outlook is most hopeful. Altogether the distance covered has been about 300 miles.

About two months ago I went to a place called Essene, which lies about twenty-five miles west of Okat. We were quite a large company, each with its load of things necessary for the tour.

"On the way we called at Awa, as we heard that twins had been born, and that the people were afraid of them. On approaching the yard, we saw quite a crowd of women gathered together, and at a short distance a group of men, discussing the topic of the hour, for to them it was a terrible affair. On entering the house, we found the poor mother huddled in a corner, and the two children lying on the floor beside her, both dead. No attention had been paid to either mother or children, and according to native law no one dare help them. While such a thing would cause a sensation at home, it is but a trifling incident in the life of heathendom.

"How very different was out next gathering in a town only half-an-hour's journey away, where we had a large Gospel meeting, and where in a few months many of the people have learned the better way. The blazing heat of the noonday sun having abated somewhat, we got on the march again, and continued for about four hours, passing through quite a number of towns. We halted for the night in a town where at first we could see no one; after a little while, a few young men came and stood at a distance, but for some time could not be persuaded to come near. Ultimately, seeing that we were not likely to do them any injury, they approached, and took us to one of their houses. In a short time we had all the young men of the town assembled. For two hours we unfolded to them the story of Redemption. I have rarely seen an audience so impressed and so anxious to hear more. They asked us a great many questions, and invited us most heartily to stay.

"Next morning we started off again, and in the afternoon reached Essene. Here we got lodging in the Court-house, which has been lately built, and were, in fact, quite comfortable. In the evening we had a service in a little chapel erected by some of the Bonny traders who live on the beach. They were glad to have an opportunity of hearing the Gospel, as they are not visited by a preacher, but have prayers among themselves on Sundays. Next morning, we borrowed a canoe, and went down to a place called Egwanga, where there are four European stores. This is the furthest point at which the steamers call on the Opobo river. There were three homeward bound steamers lying at anchor. These caused great wonder to the boys, who had never seen anything larger than the coasting vessel which plies between Qua Iboe and Calabar.

"Our return journey was by a different route. At most of the towns we passed through, we stayed for a short time, and talked with the people, who generally refreshed us with cocoanuts, which were very acceptable. We put up for the night at a town called Okam, in the house of a friendly chief, who gave me his best apartment. We talked until a late hour about the things of God, and he was most willing to hear. We hope before long to start work there, as the town is very large, and some of the people are desirous of having a teacher.

"We branched off a little in order to visit the town of a powerful chief called Akrasi. We happened to be in good time, as he was judging palavers, and had a great number of the principal people there from the surrounding towns, who listened attentively while they heard the Gospel for the first time in their lives. We asked them if they would like a teacher in that town, and they said they would think about it. After another two hours' walk we reached Osong, where the court of the district is situated, from which we can reach the mission house at Okat in an hour by boat."

Mr. Heaney expects to establish the fourth station of the mission on the other side of the Qua Iboe river in a populous region on the border of the Eket and Obium tribes. He intends beginning work there, in response to repeated requests from the natives, during the next dry season. A good boat, costing about £25, is urgently needed for visiting the numerous villages on the navigable creeks that open up this part of the country. I shall be glad to hear from friends wishing to become interested in the mission.

Italians in Geneva.

DURING a six weeks' stay in Geneva, we have had the pleasure of becoming thoroughly acquainted with the work of the Evangelical Mission to the Italian Emigrants being carried on there under the direction of Rev. O. Golia-Mauro. Perhaps few in England realize what a great centre of anarchism Geneva is, and to what serious dangers the thousands of Italian emigrants who wend their way continually to that city, are exposed, in coming under the terrible influence of the anarchist party. These are the surroundings in which this Mission courageously labours, having to struggle on the one side with the hatred and persecution of the Church of Rome, and on the other with the violent force of the Anarchists. No one really knowing the facts can doubt of the importance and urgency of the work, nor fail to wish its devoted workers God-speed.

We had the pleasure of attending the meetings. Mr. Golia-Mauro makes considerable use of the magic lantern and explains the Gospel slides in a telling manner, bringing home by anecdote and otherwise many a practical lesson, whilst Mrs. Golia-Mauro sweetly sings the Gospel in the form of well-known hymns translated into Italian.

The children's school is a most interesting feature of the Mission; it is held three times a week, and the young folk are taught reading and writing, and Holy Scripture. Before leaving, each child receives a Gospel leaflet, so the influence of the school extends to the families. Besides this, there is an evening school three times a week for men and women, which is numerously attended in the winter.

We had the pleasure of accompanying Mrs. Golia-Mauro on some of her visits, and were thus able to see for ourselves the wretched condition in which these poor Italian emigrants live, a tiny, dirty room often doing duty for a whole family, and as to furniture, it is not worthy of the name; in fact, we had almost to sit on the floor in some cases. But the bright smile of greeting, the cheery word, and warm handshake showed how the workers have found a place in the hearts of these people.

And, not less important than the rest, is the work which this Mission accomplishes throughout the year by the free distribution of thousands of tracts and Scripture portions in the streets, at the station, in the workshops, and in the Brewery Halls and other places where the Anarchists hold their public meetings. But the work is greatly hampered by the lack of suitable headquarters. To provide this a fund has been started. The people among whom this mission labours are really further off from God than the heathen. Further particulars can be obtained from Rev. O. Golia Mauro, "Mio Nido," Route de Troinex, Geneva.

Soldiers at Gibraltar.

NEXT year will be the twenty-first year of work on the Rock of Gibraltar, and the thirty-fourth of my work among our soldiers—years of untold blessing to many in the navy and army, for which we give our Father and God all the honour and praise and glory. But just now I am faced with two great needs and difficulties, the first of which is want of room in our Soldiers' and Sailors' Mission Home, Europa Road, Gibraltar.

Gibraltar has become an increasingly important naval station, and sleeping and other accommodation for our Royal sailors is an absolute necessity. Miss Mitchell writes:—"It is so hard to turn the sailors away when they plead for a bed." Plans are in my hands to build a flat and make other improvements on our present Home. It is estimated that the cost, with furnishing, &c., will be £3,000. The other need is for our general expenses, from which we draw for Cairo, Gibraltar, Algeria, La Linea, our Scottish depôt Homes, and Royal Reserve Rally or Home.

Many of those who so lovingly helped to establish this work have gone to their rest and reward (my own husband among the number), and the work has grown and is growing, so that £1,000 is required to meet our present necessities.

It would be a great joy to be able to celebrate the twenty-first year of our work on the Rock by making this addition to our Home.

Veddahs of Ceylon.

AN interesting undenominational mission is carried on, notwithstanding difficulties, under the control and supervision of the Wesleyan missionary at Batticalva. In the latest report Rev. A. E. Restarick writes that the "spiritual work has of necessity been done in linguistic fetters" (owing to the difficulty in making the Veddahs understand Tamil), "but it has been done regularly and lovingly. The crude devil-worship which has been their only excursion towards the Unseen, and which they have learned from their Sinhalese neighbours, has already received rude blows, and when we can ensure teaching in their own language, there will be no hesitation in accepting the truth of the Gospel."

At the date of the last report (for the year 1902) the Tamil Catechist, Mr. Chellappa, was still resident at Kallodai, among these wild and untutored people, as Mr. Rastarick says, "faithfully fulfilling his calling in one of the most malarious districts of the island, surrounded by wild beasts," and enjoying "the respect of Europeans as well as Tamils and Veddahs." A ready tribute is paid to a man who has done a very hard piece of work well and cheerfully. There are now resident at Kallodai twelve families of Veddahs, including forty-four persons. Cultivation is pursued, and efforts made to render the settlement self-supporting. But that desirable time has not yet been reached, and the funds required yearly amount to between £60 and £70.

Being well acquainted with the settlement, and the urgent need for maintaining this mission in a desolate and unfrequented part of the forest, I have particular reason for recommending it to the notice of the benevolent, and to those who, like myself, think we ought to do something for the ignorant aboriginal races who are being, as it were, pushed aside by the encroachments of modern civilization.

The Y.W.C.A. in Milan.—Many will be interested to learn that the Y.W.C.A. in Milan are opening a Home for the convenience of Christian ladies staying in the city for the purposes of study. It is intended that the establishment shall offer all possible advantages and comforts, and ladies passing through Milan will also be received when rooms are vacant. Protecting Children in India.

THE Society for Protection of Children in India, under the direction of its Calcutta secretary, Rev. A. E. Summers and his Committee, is making good progress. Prominent and respected members of the Hindu, Mohammedan, Parsee, and Brahma communities have recently joined its Committee. A recent case is one of gross cruelty to an adopted native child by a surgeon's wife. The child has been placed in a Christian orphanage. During the last eighteen months more than 100 girls of different nationalities have been protected and cared for, with due regard to their religious parentage. But it is interesting to note that already, with consent of the parties concerned, sixteen non-Christian girls have been put under devoted Christian care.

Grievous cruelties are sometimes wrought in the secrecy of the zenana, many of which will come to light when the Society's existence is better known, for this is not an agency for spying into private life, but for remedying notorious evils and affording protection when it is sought for. It has already succeeded in arousing the attention of the authorities to the enormous number of little girls who are bought and sold for bad purposes, and steps are being quietly taken to check this fearful wrong. The Society has also proved itself invaluable as an auxiliary and legal adviser to other workers.

The local funds are improving, but are not yet sufficient. Further help from this country is still urgently required.

South Africa General Mission.

MANY of your readers will be interested to know that our chairman, Mr. Thomas B. Miller, and our treasurer, Mr. H. W. Maynard, together with Mrs. Maynard, are on a visit to South Africa. They left England on July 11, and are expected home on October 24. They have been visiting Cape Town, Durban, Johannesburg, and various S.A.G.M. mission stations in Natal, Zululand, Swazieland, &c.

We are thankful to say that the reports that are coming to hand speak of much blessing going on both among natives and Europeans. Some have been very definitely seeking the Lord in connection with the mission operations at Empami in Bomvanaland.

Writing from Nkanga, Pondoland, Mrs. Cyril Green speaks of two Pondo girls having yielded themselves to God, one at the morning service on the Sunday, and her sister at the afternoon gathering. Their earnestness to attend the meetings and hear about Christ may be judged by the fact that they had to walk at least twelve miles to get to Nkanga, and not on good level roads, but down deep valleys and up steep hill-sides—for all the country round is very much broken up—twenty-four miles, there and back, in order to hear the Gospel! They had learnt to read, and became the happy possessors of a Bible.

TIDINGS THAT CHEER.

It is very cheering to hear of definite conversions in connection with the Dutch village work. It would be impossible to over-estimate the importance of this branch of the Mission. Mr. Douglas Wood, B.A., has now quite acquired the difficult Tshinado language in Gazaland, and we shall hope to hear of blessing after years of sowing. The work among the soldiers and sailors has been very encouraging, and we hear of very special blessing attending labours in the Sailors' Rest so recently erected in Durban.

The income of the Mission has very considerably increased of late years, the total receipts for the year ending March 31, 1903, being £31,397 13s. 8d., although, owing to the war, a very large number of friends and supporters in South Africa have not been able to give as they otherwise would have done.

Rev. Walter and Mrs. Searle are at home at present, together with Mr. Edgar Faithfull, B.A., and Mr. Percy Huskisson, all of whom have a deeply interesting story to tell. We would ask much prayer for the meetings they will be addressing this autumn and winter, and that the £5.000 the Mission is needing at once, to meet the requirements of the work generally, may be speedily sent in. At the present time nearly a hundred workers—not including native evangelists—are scattered over South Africa labouring under the S.A.G.M.

Scholars at Pisa.

IN a recent issue we gave some account of the excellent work of Miss Carruthers at Pisa. An esteemed correspondent sends us some notes made on the occasion of a visit to Cisanello and San Michele, where Miss Carruthers has also organized institutions of great interest and value :—

Away out of Pisa, after miles through vineyards, below which the young corn was springing, and across the plain bounded by the mighty Apennines, with the winter snow still thick upon them, I came to the picturesque village of Cisanello, where Miss Carruthers has her villa, her little chapel, her garden, orchards, and several schools, all under her immediate inspection ; with pupils of all ages, from youths of fourteen and fifteen to baby mites (two with golden hair and blue eyes among the dusky locks and dark orbs of their fellows), whose answering in the kindergarten system was simply amazing.

Miss Carruthers is particularly fortunate in her teachers. All are Evangelical, and most of them have been with her for many years. The head teacher is a perfect treasure ; among his various qualifications, he is a musical genius, and has been most successful in training the boys, who, on the occasion of my visit, sang, in parts, several hymns and patriotic songs, and action songs; they also went through a drill which is a great help to them when called, as most are by the military conscription, to the severer exercises of the army.

What a pleasure and profit those hymns and loyal songs must be in the homes of the people. Musical Italians sing over their work, in the house, and in the fields ; and from the schoolroom Gospel words are wafted abroad, and must find a resting-place in many a weary and sorrowful heart. Here, as at Pisa, the incomparable system of question and response in Scripture language prevails. Happy the people who have such a wise and beneficent patron, such godly teaching! The result is visible in the neater aspect of the houses, the cleanliness and bright faces of the children. In all 137 pupils are under training.

There are more schools at San Michele, a large village, where there is a monastery and also a community of nuns, lately established in order to counteract Miss Carruthers' mission. These succeeded in taking away six pupils, who have, however, since returned. Of this school, visitors have written : "We all agree this is a wonderful school ; perfectly delightful to hear Italian boys repeat clearly and well the precious words of John iii. 16."

Let us try and calculate the cost of all this machinery—the rent, the teachers' salaries, the books, the materials, the repairs of building, &c. There is often a deficit which falls on the one brave woman whose life and property are devoted to this noble work, to which she was led by the guiding hand of Him whose work it is. Copies of the annual report may be had by addressing Miss Carruthers, Cisanello, Pisa, Italy.

Blind Girls in Jerusalem.—In the work of the home and school for blind girls in Jerusalem, the past year was a quiet but progressive one. Needs were graciously supplied in answer to prayer. Three new pupils have been admitted since last report, and these are readily receiving the truths of the Gospel. They know the "100 texts" of the Irish Church Missions, besides many Psalms, chapters, and hymns. Blind girls are received without payment, and the Home is entirely dependent upon the freewill offerings of God's people. Miss Lovell, care of British Consul, Jerusalem, is always happy to give information to friends of the work.

For the Burma Mission.

A LARGE number of Christian friends assembled, a few evenings ago, in the commodious Missions-Kapelle at Charlottenburg, Berlin, to bid farewell to the son of Pastor Rohrbach, leaving for missionary service in Burma. The Pastor praised God for the great privilege of giving his son to the mission-field, and showed in a few sentences the leading of the Lord. After this, Mr. ERNEST ROHRBACH, the outgoing missionary, referred to the definite call he had received some years ago whilst in England, through the faithful words of Dr. Soltau, who himself had been a missionary to Burma ; to the time of preparation at the Bible Training Institute in Glasgow, and at Livingstone College, London. He recalled the parting word given to him by Mr. Anderson, the principal of the Bible Training Institute : "Be true to God, be true to yourself." Resting on the Lord's assurance, "All power is given unto Me," and obeying the command, "Go," he was sure of the Lord's promise being fulfilled to him, "Lo, I am with you alway," and commended himself to the prayerful sympathy of believers at home (Eph vi. 19).

After this, Pastor SCHEVE, of the Baptist Church, a veteran in Christian work, dwelt on the fact that Christ's finished work is for every man in every nation, and the command is to make it known to every creature. The missionary spirit is the standard of a living or a dead church. From his visit to America he had learnt that wherever hands are stretched out to the heathen, there God stretches out his hand for blessing. He gave 1 Cor. xv. 58 as a parting message. Then Pastor MASCHER, sec. of the Baptist Mission, gave the ordination charge from John xv. 16. He spoke on the blessing of a well-ordered life according to the plan of God. Acts xiii. 2, 3, having been read, the congregation standing up, seven brethren laid their hands on the head of the young man, whom Pastor SPAETH commended to God and the work of the Gospel in earnest prayer. Several others followed with prayer. Then Pastor ROHRBACH gave his son as parting message the promise of the Lord : "I will never leave thee, never forsake thee." May the remembrance of the meeting be a blessing to him who is going forth and to all who remain, "till He come!"

The Overcoming Life.

BIBLE READINGS.—I.

ACCORDING to St. Paul there are two opposites at war in the believer, which are variously designated as—

I. (a) The law of "the spirit of life" in Christ Jesus (Rom. viii. 2). (b) The law of "Sin and death" (in my members) (Rom. viii. 2, with Rom. vii. 23).

II. (a) "The Spirit." (b) "The Flesh" (Gal. v. 16).

III. (a) The "law of God after the inward man." (b) A "different law in my members" (Rom. vii. 22, 23).

IV. (a) "Christ." (b) "I" (Gal. ii. 20).

V. (a) "The life" which I NOW live in the flesh (i.e., the body). (b) "I" have been crucified (Gal. ii. 20).

The life that He "now" lived was the Faith Life, and Christ was in full possession of Spirit, Soul, and Body. He points out the consequences of living according to the law of "Sin and Death," &c. But (Gal. ii. 18). Through one law—i.e., the law of the "Spirit of life," &c. (a). He died to the other law—i.e., the law of "Sin and Death," &c. (b) (Gal. ii. 19). Thus He lived the Overcoming life (Gal. ii. 20). Through Grace (Gal. ii. 21).

To sum up two opposites always at war (Gal. v. 17). But no condemation on that account (Rom. viii. 1). Because by faith the believer always overcomes (Rom. viii. 37-39). Never free from conflict, but always free from defeat.

SERVICE OF Rev. GEORGE WILKINSON.

BY the death, in March last, of Rev. George Wilkinson, the Congregational ministry lost an honoured member, with a long record of devoted and fruitful service. He was born at Wisbech (Cambs.) in 1817, and was only six years old when his father died, leaving a widow and six children. The boy's paternal grandmother was an earnest Christian, and one of the original members of the first Congregational Chapel at Wisbech. The children had been baptized in the Church of England; but her deep concern for them led her, on the Sunday following their father's funeral, to conduct the two youngest boys, Henry and George, to the Congregational Sunday-school. This was the first step towards their attachment to Nonconformity.

George was such a favourite with his grandmother that she called him her "little Timothy," and he was her chosen companion in her attendance at the week-night prayer meeting, he carrying the lantern to light her to the chapel. Notwithstanding these sacred influences, however, the signs of grace did not immediately appear in the lad. On the contrary, he was so unruly as to be in great danger of dismissal from the Sunday-school; but it was finally decided that he might remain, and, being subsequently placed under the care of another teacher, who pleaded with him tenderly and patiently, the boy's heart began to be touched.

In the meantime, his brother had been led into evil ways by bad companions, but was converted in a remarkable manner through the sudden death of one of them. Then he could not rest until he had won his younger brother to the same decision for God. At length, after his young soul had passed through much darkness, in deep conviction of sin, George Wilkinson was led, on his fourteenth birthday, to accept Christ as his Saviour, and to dedicate himself to His service.

At the age of fifteen he joined the Congregational church at Wisbech, and at seventeen he began to give addresses in the Sunday-school, and to preach in the villages; but his heart was set on missionary work abroad, the first desire for this having been implanted in his mind when quite a child, by an address by Rev. William Ellis, who had recently returned from the South Seas. As his brother shared the same longing, the two youths used to retire to their room, and pray together that they might be accepted as missionaries to foreign lands. This prayer was granted, for eventually the elder of the two was sent to the East, and the younger to the West Indies.

Meanwhile, his Christian work at home was so evidently blessed that George Wilkinson was encouraged to offer himself to the London Missionary Society; and after certain preliminaries, he travelled to London by coach to meet the directors. It is characteristic of him that when asked by the committee how he had spent his first Sunday in London, he mentioned a well-known preacher whom he had heard in the morning; and then added that in the afternoon he had preached on Islington Green. When further asked, "What was your text?" he replied, "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Having been accepted by the Society, he was sent to Cheshunt College for further training, and studied medicine for a short time in London, in which connection he was brought into companionship with Dr. Livingstone.

George Wilkinson was ordained to the Christian ministry, and set aside for missionary work on June 18, 1840, in the Barbican Chapel, London. He had previously married Miss Mullens, sister of Rev. Joseph Mullens, for many years a missionary in Calcutta, and afterwards foreign secretary of the London Missionary Society. Her husband always attributed, under God, much of his usefulness in after life to her helpful and spiritual influence.

The newly-ordained missionary and his wife sailed without delay for Kingston, Jamaica, and there Mr. Wilkinson laboured for eight years respected and beloved. An old fellow-missionary says: "My first impression of him was, he was truly a man of God, and to the last day I saw him, whether in Jamaica or England, that impression remained unchanged."

The present chapel in North Street, Kingston, was built under his direction, and through his efforts the congregation was raised to a self-sustaining position. Above all, he had the joy of winning for the kingdom of Christ many from among both the white and the coloured population. When failure of health necessitated his leaving the island, great was the grief of the little flock.

After his return to England, Mr. Wilkinson ministered for about six years to a small congregation at Chase Side, Enfield, and at the end of this pastorate, in 1854, he began his ministry at London Road, Chelmsford, with which church his name will always be associated. Over this large congregation Mr. Wilkinson presided for thirty-four years, preaching twice, for a period three times, every Sunday, his whole aim being to set forth "Christ and Him crucified," and to move his hearers to accept Him in all His fulness. He was an ardent student of the Scriptures, expounding the Word with great power.

He never sought to attract by sensationalism. Early in his course, he said: "If I cannot get a congregation by preaching Christ's Gospel, and explaining His truth, then I will go without a congregation." But he never had to go without one. Seven years after his pastorate commenced, the chapel was enlarged by 200 sittings, but it was soon as full as ever. On his retirement in 1889, it was officially stated that the membership, the congregation, and the contributions, had never been so large as in his last year.

Devotion to his own church prevented Mr. Wilkinson from being so widely known as a preacher as he might otherwise have been; but he often served the London Missionary Society as a deputation, and was ever ardently attached to the cause of foreign missions. In 1866, he competed successfully for a prize offered for an essay on Religious Revivals; and his work was published under the title, "Pentecost; or, the Revival of the Work of God," but it is now out of print.

On resigning the pastorate at Chelmsford, Mr. Wilkinson retired to Epping, where he passed through the great sorrow of his wife's death. He afterwards removed to Woodford, where his closing years were spent. His last utterance was to his old church at Chelmsford, at a Communion service held on October 1, 1899.

He died at Woodford Green at the ripe age of eighty-five. His last illness was full of suffering, but it was short; and through all his mind was at peace.

Rifts in the Cloud.—4.

By Rev. HENRY STURT.

THE UNCHANGEABLE SAVIOUR.

"God is not a man that He should lie, nor the son of man that He should repent." "Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling place through all generations." "I am the Lord, I change not, therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed." "The Father of lights, with whom is no variableness nor the shadow of turning." "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." "Having loved His own, He loved them unto the end."

THE unchangeableness of the eternal God is also ascribed to our Saviour. It is only one of the many instances in which the attributes of Jehovah in the Old Testament are ascribed to Jesus Christ in the New. "He that hath seen me," said Christ, "hath seen the Father."

When John saw Him in the visions of Revelation, he fell at His feet as one dead. He seemed so changed from what he had known of Him, when he leaned upon His bosom upon earth. But when Jesus laid His hand upon him, and said, "Fear not!" John found He was the same as when he knew and loved Him in the flesh. It was the same voice as he had heard in the storm on the Sea of Galilee; "It is I, be not afraid."

Though now ascended up on high,
He bends on earth a brother's eye;
Partaker of the human name,
He knows the frailty of our frame.
Our Fellow-sufferer yet retains
A fellow-feeling of our pains.

In the trials of life we are made to feel how changeable is all around us, and how changeable we are ourselves. Riches take to themselves wings and fly away. Friends are snatched from our side by the hand of death. Health and strength decline, and circumstances vary, from day to day. It is then the believer is led to say:—

Change and decay in all around I see,
Oh Thou who changest not, abide with me.

It is well for us that life is a changing scene, and that there is no continuing. It keeps us from settling down as if this were our rest, and prevents us from looking to the creature for what can be found in the Creator alone. Amidst the ever-changing scenes of time, the soul finds a home and a safe dwelling-place in God alone.

How sweet it is to realize the unchangeableness of our Saviour. Past sins may distress our minds, and new sins may trouble our hearts; we may lose our spirituality and comfort, and the moisture of the soul may be turned into the drought of summer; the fickleness of human friendships and affections may pain us and fill us with bitter disappointment. How sweet and helpful then, to turn in trustful love to One who is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. His faithful mercy drives away our guilty fears. We feel what an abiding portion we have in Him, and what never-failing springs of grace and consolation abound in His fulness. Lifted above the chances and changes of time and sense, the soul triumphs in Christ with unspeakable joy. Not even death, when everything earthly fails, can deprive the soul of the peace and blessedness of the unchangeable Saviour.

The changing scenes of life around I see;
Linked with them an existence bound to me;
By them I'm daily touched, on them I wait,
And yet my yearning heart mourns o'er its fate.

My weakness presses, and my need abides;
Death o'er the scene a mighty conqueror rides;
But when the tyrant's sword has cleft its way
Through human hopes, oh! where shall be my stay!

'Tis then a tender, still small voice I hear,
From out the depths, which calms my surging fear;
'Tis Jesus; yes, I know the precious name,—
For ever and for ever still the same.

Here in His fulness all I want I find;
To His strong arm my weakness will I bind;
I hear His words, and 'tis enough for me,
"Where'er I am, there shall My servant be."

This changeless One so human and Divine;
I know that I am His, and He is mine;
I bow beneath His sceptre, kiss His rod,
As my whole spirit cries, "My Lord and God."

A Soul-Winning Ministry.

Rev. J. B. BARRACLOUGH AND HIS WORK.

PROMINENT among the Evangelical stalwarts who strive so strenuously to maintain Protestant principles in the Church of England is Rev. J. B. Barraclough, the vicar of St. Thomas, Lambeth, who worthily represents among us that cultured ministry of "the black gown," which, by God's blessing, accomplished such great things for the cause of true religion during the eighteenth century revival. In the spiritual "line of descent" Mr. Barraclough comes of the Puritans; his Gospel preaching, in clearness and thoughtfulness, is of the school of John Newton. Our friend traces his earliest religious impressions back to the days of childhood, when a godly north-country clergyman was wont to take him upon his knee and talk with fascinating interest of the Saviour of men.

The influence of the good man gave the young life the needed turn in the right direction, and the outcome was seen when, at the age of fourteen, the lad was moved with fervent desire to win souls for his Master. With the mingled directness and simplicity which were characteristic of the boy (as they are to-day of the tried veteran) he engaged in Christian work, teaching a class of children at a village near Wakefield, and forming the determination to devote his life to the Gospel cause.

This early promise of usefulness in the Master's vineyard was richly fulfilled in manhood. During undergraduate days at Cambridge, Mr. Barraclough found many opportunities of proclaiming the Evangel in Sunday-school, church, and mission hall; and he recalls that it was on the then Prince of Wales' wedding day, now over forty years ago, that he preached his first sermon in the open-air. His first and only curacy was that of St. James', Riddings, which he held until 1867, in which year he became incumbent of Bolam, where he remained until 1869, when he accepted the incumbency of Witton Park, an important village in the Durham coalfield. Six years' labour among the miners was followed by a call to London, as association secretary of the London Jews Society.

Always strongly sympathetic towards the wanderers of Israel, Mr. Barraclough here found a field which, despite its arduous character, afforded many delights; while in charge of the Home Mission at Palestine Place, N.E., he had a three-fold ministry—as chaplain to the society, he supervised the various schools for Hebrew children and Jewish converts; he was minister of the Episcopal Jews' Chapel; and in addition preached to an eclectic Gentile congregation whose members found a particular pleasure in one who never wavered in his loyalty to Protestant truth. Mr. Barraclough was deeply impressed by the spiritual needs of the throngs of Jews who came pouring into England from the Continent, either en route to America, or to make their permanent home in this country, and he proved himself their true friend. He was for some years chairman of the British Jews Society, and being on terms of close intimacy with the late Prebendary Gordon Calthrop, he naturally took an earnest interest in the Barbican Mission. To the present time Israel has remained precious to him.

In 1893 came a removal to the dark and difficult parish of St. Thomas, Lambeth, which charge he still retains. In this squalid district, which is perhaps as poverty-stricken and degraded as any in the Metropolis, Mr. Barraclough has spent ten years of consistent endeavour to win the people to Christ. It must be conceded that, with changing conditions, the task of evangelizing the inhabitants grows more and more difficult. With improved train and tram facilities, decent artisans have migrated to the outlying suburbs, and in place of the small but respectable houses which formerly occupied the ground, are many barrack-like "dwellings." Low lodging-houses, too, abound; and the population largely consists of costermongers, riverside labourers, and porters at Covent Garden Market, with a large admixture of public-house loafers. Professional beggars are numerous, and pestilent vice, flaunting in spite of rags and dirt, is one of the prevalent evils. Indeed, the parish of St. Thomas might be described as "the home of the ne'er-do-weels." Nor are things much more encouraging as regards spiritual provision. True, Rev. F. B. Meyer makes a gallant fight at Christ Church, and secures large congregations, but on the other hand, aggressive sacerdotalism has its corps of "sisters-of-mercy" at work, and almost opposite Mr. Barraclough's church is St. George's, the Roman Catholic cathedral of Southwark.

REV. J. B. BARRACLOUGH.

Amid these surroundings, our friend has gone wisely to work. There are many services in mission rooms, and these are arranged so as to meet the needs of various sections of the community, there being no fewer than twenty services each Sabbath; in fact, day by day, there is a continuous course of gatherings for worship or instruction. Two curates, two Pastoral Aid lay agents, two city missionaries, six mission ladies, and a parish nurse, co-operate in the good work, and from Chislehurst, Brixton, and elsewhere, come several voluntary helpers, two of the mission women being provided by Christ Church, Chislehurst. Nevertheless there is still room in this dingy and drink-cursed neighbourhood for a large force of home missionaries. As Mr. Barraclough pertinently declares, the work done and to be done in his parish is "as thoroughly a missionary work as can be found in any part of China or India." Nevertheless, as a firm supporter of Lord's Day observance, he seeks no help which would involve travelling on the Day of Rest.

By an extension scheme lately floated, it is aimed to erect a mission church or hall, for which purpose about £1,400 has been raised out of an estimated cost of £5,000. Certain it is that those who may be gathered therein will hear the Gospel of the blessed God preached to them, for the vicar seeks first of all to win souls. In his recently-issued annual report, he says to his people:—

> I want you to have both faith and assurance—both to be saved and to know it. There can be no abiding peace or joy in your heart so long as you are uncertain about your salvation. That man cannot be a peaceful, praiseful, happy man, who is not certain that his sins are forgiven. And do not think that it is presumptuous to believe that you are forgiven. When God's declarations are concerned, it is doubt that is presumption. When He says, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life," and many other such gracious words; but you say to Him, by your conduct at least, "Lord, Thy word alone is not sufficient for me; I cannot believe a thing simply because Thou sayest it; I want something additional, something surer, something better"—is not this presumption? Assurance is as old as Job, who said, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." "We know," says John, "that we have passed from death unto life." "I know whom I have believed," writes Paul. Do not say, then, that a man cannot tell whether he is a saved man or not. He can tell, and he ought to tell. Honestly examine your heart in the light of God's Holy Word, and you will soon know whether or not you are truly "born again."
> Let not the simplicity and freeness of God's plan of salvation prove the obstacle that keeps you back from peace and rejoicing in Jesus!

But Mr. Barraclough's sympathies are far from being merely parochial. In addition to his efforts for the Jews, he gives earnest support to the C.M.S. and the Pastoral Aid Society; the Church Association and other Protestant societies recognize him as one of their most effective advocates, and his son is secretary of the Women's Protestant Union. He was a warm friend of the late Mr. Kensit. A firm believer in the inspiration of Scripture he helped to found the Bible League. Another line of Christian effort which he actively follows is in connection with Christian Endeavour. He is president of the Central South London C.E. Union and a vice-president of the Church of England Union. The society at St. Thomas' was one of the earliest formed in the Church of England. His hearty co-operation, throughout his career, with Christians of all Evangelical denominations, in spiritual work on Scriptural lines, has been repeatedly demonstrated. Two of the worthies whom he most admires are the late Bishop Ryle, of Liverpool, and Rev. Charles Haddon Spurgeon.

Mr. Barraclough has a trying fight, and should command the prayerful sympathy of all who love the Gospel, as he sounds forth the call to "true belief and true repentance," and stimulates his people with like messages to that which closes the report:—

"Let your Christianity be a clear, unmistakable thing, unblemished by inconsistency. Plead for more holy zeal, more devotion, more love for the Saviour's cause. Thousands are perishing around you; iniquity rolls down our streets like a torrent; souls are dying in sin. Up, and warn them! Be active, be diligent, be persevering for Christ! Speak, and write, and labour for Jesus, with a heart that is warmed by His love! The Lord grant it! Amen."

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, October 18. Proverbs iii.

IN this simple and beautiful poem the advantages of a sincerely religious life are depicted. Godliness is its own reward. God's children must adorn themselves with the ornaments of mercy and truth, and make these graces the regulating principles of their existence, and the charm of their characters will be recognised by God and man (3, 4).

The Godly Life is Humble and Trustful (5, 6). It does not rely on its own wisdom or prudence, but is ever leaning back on the bosom of that Father who seeth, and who is, in secret. Guidance does come. We may not realise it at the moment, but as we look back on our lives, we see that we have been Divinely led.

It is a Wholesome and Healthy Life (7, 8). To seek health as a supreme object is to miss it; whilst those who transfer all anxiety to God, and obey the natural and simple laws of temperance, enjoy a peace of mind and cheerfulness of temper which are eminently favourable to long and happy life. The tables of insurance societies prove that the wicked are cut off, whilst the godly inherit the earth.

It is Generous (9, 10, 27, 28). What we spend for God is always remunerative, whilst what we spend on ourselves vanishes as rain on the river. To hoard is to put into bags with holes; to give to the service of God and man is to secure lasting revenues.

It is Fair in its Dealings (29-35). The child of God can have no sympathy with the commerce which thinks only of the seller, and not of the buyer; only of making a profit, and nothing of contributing to the well-being of others. Do not take short cuts to success; but, in perfect faith in God, go forth week by week to your work, never soiling or selling your soul, never doing what is unworthy of your best, never failing to do business in the best of all markets (14, 15).

MONDAY, October 19. Proverbs iv.

We are favoured in the opening words with a little piece of autobiography. There is nothing more impressive and soul-compelling than exhortation based on the sweet and venerable experiences of early life. "Listen," says the speaker. "My parents made me what I am by their teaching and discipline, and what religion did in my home, let it do in yours."

5-9. Wisdom is a Pearl of Great Price. It is to be sought with eager care and self-denial. It can be gained only by saying, No! to the lower and, Yes! to the higher parts of our nature; and by opening all the avenues of our being to the entrance of the Spirit of God, receiving His holy monitions with meekness, and obeying them with reverence. The world's maxim is, "Money is the principal thing; and with all thy getting, get more." Not so, God's way.

10-19. The Contrast between the Ways of Wisdom and Wickedness. It is not enough to receive the heavenly doctrine of Christ; we must strain every nerve to hold fast that which we have, and follow it with painful care. It is only in this way that we can escape the allurings and deadly ways of sinners. There must be a parting of the ways, this up, that down, this even into deeper darkness, that going on and shining to the meridian.

20-27. The Necessity for Daily Watchfulness. These precepts were to be kept "in the heart" (21). The Greek version translates thus, "In order that thy fountains may not fail thee, guard them in the heart." All conduct is the outcome of the hidden fountains. Let God's Spirit be the warder of the soul, examining all going out and coming in. We are called to travel a level path, not unduly exalted or depressed, neither excited nor passionate or headstrong, but with eyes looking straight towards the goal of duty and the ideal of Christ (Eph. v. 15).

TUESDAY, October 20. Proverbs v.

The wisdom of God does not shrink from plain speaking, and sets herself with an unsparing hand to describe the deadly fascinations of sin, and the inevitable harvest of which self-indulgence is the seed. We moderns may shrink from the plainness and minuteness of the delineation, and yet the whole horror is unveiled in such a manner as to make sin distasteful and terrible. We are allowed to see evil in the light of Christ.

1-5. The Approach of Temptation. Whenever we are tempted, and from whatever side the evil appeal is made to our nature, there are always the syren voices, the smooth and pleasant words, the dazzling visions of all the delights that may be had for the taking. But how inevitable the awakening, the bitter wormwood, the two-edged sword, the paths that lead downward to the pit.

7-14. The Lament of the Prodigal. In words like these, the younger son might have bewailed himself in the far country. Every sin is weaving a chaplet of shame for us. Every sin is robbing us of spiritual, moral, and in some cases of physical strength. Every sin is storing up bitter and prolonged remorse. Oh, why, for a moment of gratification, sacrifice the rare jewels of the soul!

15-23. The Satisfaction of the Soul. Without doubt, the married life is the predestined path for most men and women; and happy are they who are so happily mated that they help each other against common foes. But where this is not possible, let the soul seek the love of the Son of God, and realize that there is a spiritual union possible, which fills the heart with a glow of peace and joy.

WEDNESDAY, October 21. Proverbs vi.

1-5. Against Suretyship. In the course of my life I have seen repeated instances of awful suffering accruing from disobedience to the distinct prohibitions of this paragraph. To back a bill for another, to be responsible for another man's debts, even though he be near of kin, is almost suicidal to happiness of mind. How often has the competence, which it has taken years to collect, been dissipated in the evening of life through one rash act.

6-11. Against Laziness. In every community there are people who may be described as constitutionally lazy. The question is whether such might not be quickened into industrious habits if they were taken in hand in childhood. The ants' example is adduced to quicken the young mind; how these little creatures swarm in the woods; how incessantly they toil; how vast and symmetrical are their homes and barns! Nature rebukes indolence, and how much more does grace!

12-19. Against Making a Friend of a Man of Belial. His portrait is graphically painted. Busily going from place to place, talking incessantly; full of hints, suggestions, and innuendoes; giving the impression of knowing more than he cares to say; full of whispering, bent on sowing suspicion and creating discord—these are the characteristics of such a life, but God beholds him (17), and his end shall be sudden and remediless.

20-35. Against Impurity. This memorable paragraph may well be pondered by young men. There is not a word of it that has not been verified by many instances. Though each generation thinks it can play with fire without being burned, the only hope for a man is to keep in living union with the purity of his Master, shuddering at the least thought of wrong that casts a shadow on his soul, and turning instantly for cleansing to the Precious Blood.

THURSDAY, October 22. Proverbs vii.

The introduction to this book consists of nine chapters, the last three of which (vii., viii., ix.) present a lively contrast between folly and wisdom. In this chapter the writer tells what he witnessed as he looked forth through the lattice window of his house.

1-4. The Safeguards of the Soul. The law is to be kept as the apple of the eye, the most sensitive, tender, and important part of our body. God's Commandments are to be as constantly before our mind as engraved rings worn upon the fingers. The precepts and prohibitions of God's will must be inwrought into the fabric of the heart, as the Ten Commandments into the slabs of Sinai. Wisdom's high ideal must be treated as a sister who exercises a beautiful influence over a young brother's life.

5-21. The Temptress. It is twilight. The young man comes round the corner of the street with an idle, effeminate saunter. His will is feeble, his heart given to unholy imagination. Is not such a man likely enough to be the easy prey of the temptress? Ah! how hollow it all is! Surely, the devil blinds the eyes of those who believe not.

22-27. The Unutterable Sorrow and Suffering caused by Sin. It is very pathetic to see an ox go to the slaughter; the butcher knows, the bystanders understand, but the beast is perfectly insensible, being lured by the offer of food or driven by the crack of whip. Suddenly it is stricken down. The slave of sin is like the bird caught in the snare; in vain are its struggles against the unyielding meshes of the net. He who commits sin becomes the slave of sin; none can stand against these attractions, or overcome their power, but by the "power of an endless life."

FRIDAY, October 23. Proverbs viii.

In the last chapter we were presented with a dark revolting picture of vice. Here wisdom is personified—the image of Him who was the Word of God.

2-9. Wisdom's Appeal. Unlike the vicious woman who lurks in the twilight, she occupies some central position from whence her ringing voice may be heard through the streets. Her voice is clear and full, her words must carry conviction to the open heart. Do you not often hear that pleading voice?

10-21. The Obvious Advantages of Obedience. Wisdom states her own value as more precious than the things men covet. Riches come in her train, honour she places as a crown upon the brow, righteousness and purity she breathes into the heart. Her home is prudence; she has the keys of knowledge and invention. Her disciples are fitted to occupy the highest positions among the sons of men. She is no niggard of her gifts, she loves all who love her, and causes her lovers to inherit substance.

22-31. Her High Descent. She was the first creation of God; she beheld creation arise at the bidding of the Eternal. Throughout all worlds she rejoices with a gaiety and mirth that the wicked cannot share. We cannot read this wonderful description without thinking of Jesus Christ our Lord, "by whom all things were made, and without whom was nothing made that hath been made." He stands amid the sons of men, loving those that love Him, found of those that diligently seek Him.

32-36. The Place of Blessing. Wait, O my soul, at His doors, listening for the least words of His mouth, until He shall welcome thee to His secret place.

SATURDAY, October 24. Proverbs ix.

1-6. The Palace of Wisdom. It is reared upon seven marble pillars, which indicate stability and permanence. Through the wide doorways may be seen the great courtyard, in which preparations are being made for a sumptuous feast. The beautiful owner of the palace has sent out her maidens to invite the guests (comp. Matt. xxii. 3). He saith, "Buy wine and milk without money and without price."

7-12. The Refusal of the Scoffer. There is no character so hopeless as the scorner's. It is useless to expend on him Divine warnings and reproofs. Our Lord cautioned His disciples against casting their pearls before swine: told them not to give that which is holy unto dogs. This is the rocky soil, in which there is no room for the seed to strike its roots.

13-18. The Appeal of Folly. It is couched in almost the same words (compare 4 and 16), but how different the tone. She too has her palace and throne, but her charms are tawdry, and her feast would have no attraction if its delights were not clandestine and forbidden.

The thoroughfares of the world are full of moral significance. Every day they are crowded with tragedies. In each you may hear the voices of the Son of Man and of the Syren.

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

FIRST WEEK AT DUNDEE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

A Letter from Dr. Torrey

TO THOSE WHO WERE CONVERTED IN THE MISSIONS IN SCOTLAND, IRELAND, AND ENGLAND.

DEAR FRIENDS,—My thoughts often go out towards those who during the past year have professed to accept Christ as their Saviour and Lord and Master in the different places that we have visited. Some of you have now been months on the way. Doubtless you have met with difficulties; some of you may be discouraged and tempted to fall out by the way. None need fall out by the way, for God has promised in His Word that He "will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it" (1 Cor. x. 13).

The secret of joy, and strength, and victory, and progress is to always keep one's eyes fixed upon Jesus. Let these three words sink deeply into your hearts, "Looking unto Jesus." If you have been tempted and fallen, look at Jesus on the cross; and know that your fall has been atoned for there, and that you need not be discouraged, but can get up and go right on. If you will confess your sin, it will be forgiven at once (1 John i. 9). If you are fighting with some temptation that seems stronger than you can bear, remember that Jesus rose again, and that He is now living to intercede for you (Heb. vii. 25) and that He has all power in heaven and on earth (Matt. xxviii. 18). Your temptation may be fierce, and the enemy be strong, but Jesus is stronger and all-sufficient. He can give victory over any temptation, appetite, or sin. It is your privilege to have victory every day and every hour, if you will keep "Looking unto Jesus." Ask Him and trust Him, too, to give you His Spirit, and you on your part give the Holy Spirit entire control of your life. This is the secret of a Christlike character (Gal. v. 22, 23; (Rom. viii. 2-4). In deciding what to do at every turn of life, keep "Looking unto Jesus," and follow Him (1 John ii. 6; John viii. 12).

Don't forget to use every opportunity that comes to you of confessing Christ before the world, both in public meetings and in your private association with others. When we confess Him, He confesses us (Matt. x. 32), and when He confesses us, God gives us His Holy Spirit in His fulness. "If you make a great deal of Christ, He will make a great deal of you; but if you make but little of Christ, He will make but little of you."

I trust that you are keeping up your daily study of the Word of God. No matter how busy you are, you cannot afford to let a single day pass without giving at least fifteen minutes to the faithful, thoughtful, prayerful study of the Word of God. It is by the study of His Word that you will grow (1 Peter ii. 2). It is through the study of the Word that Jesus abides more and more fully in you (John xv. 7), and it is through the Word that the Holy Spirit speaks (Eph. vi. 17).

Are you taking plenty of time for prayer? Begin every day with God, speak to Him before you arise from your bed, kneel down after arising and talk with Him before you talk with any human being. Tell Him everything that is in your heart, all your fears and troubles and cares, all your failures. Remember God is a Father, and you can be more frank and trustful towards Him than you could even to an earthly parent. Perhaps some of you have never had an earthly father to whom you could go and tell everything that was in your heart. Well, you can go to your Heavenly Father. He tells you to come boldly (Heb. iv. 16; x. 19). Have no secrets from God. Tell Him everything in your heart. During the day, whenever tempted, look up to Him to give you victory. It is well before leaving your room to think of the temptations that are likely to meet you during the day, and tell them all to God, and get the victory before you meet them. Speak to Him as the very last one you speak to before you retire for the night. Talk over the day with Him. Ask Him to show you if there has been anything that day that was displeasing in his sight, and then wait silently before Him to see if He has anything to tell you. If He shows you something that did not please Him, confess it at once and put it away. Never lie down to sleep with a single cloud between you and your Heavenly Father.

Don't forget to work for your Saviour and your Lord and Master every day of your life. It would be well to try to speak to someone about their soul every day. You may not always have an opportunity, but make this the principle of your life, that if you can possibly find an opportunity you will try to speak to someone about their soul every day. In helping others you will be helped yourself.—Your sincere friend,

R. A. TORREY.

How "Inquiry Work" was Organized at Liverpool.

BY W. H. PRIEST.

It has been suggested that an outline of the methods adopted among the inquirers at the Liverpool Mission should be given, the plan followed having been found to have worked well. Perfectness is by no means claimed; but it is thought that some thing similar might with advantage be followed in other places about to be visited by our two brethren whom God is using so greatly for His glory.

COLLECTING THE WORKERS.

At the outset, a sub-committee was formed to deal with this special work. Realizing its importance, special attention was paid to the selection of the workers to deal with those anxious about their souls. A circular was issued to the clergy and Christian workers throughout the city, asking to be supplied with the names and addresses of any who in their judgment were qualified for taking part in this most difficult but blessed work. The response was very gratifying, some 400 names being supplied. A meeting was then called and the mode of procedure was explained. Through the generosity of two members of the committee, each worker was presented with a copy of a book by Dr. Torrey, "How to Bring Men to Christ." This was a purely voluntary action, but was greatly appreciated by the workers, and will redound to the praise and glory of God.

NEED FOR CAUTION.

Badges were also distributed at the meeting, and in view of subsequent events attention should be given to the badge. At such meetings there are generally to be found those who, holding doctrines contrary to the Word of God, do not hesitate to resort to unscrupulous means to propagate their views. The Liverpool mission proved no exception to the rule, and it was found that some unqualified workers had crept in, and in one case the plain white badge had been reproduced. This necessitated the substitution for the white one of a red one with the words "Torrey-Alexander Mission-Worker" printed in black letters. The greatest possible care was exercised in the circulation of the new badge. Emphasis was laid upon the qualifications essential to a worker among the anxious.

These qualifications are stated in Dr. Torrey's book presented to the workers and are as follows:—(1) The one who would have real success in bringing others to Christ must himself be a thoroughly converted person. (2) He must have a love for souls, i.e., a longing for the salvation of the lost. (3) He must have a working knowledge of the Bible. (4) The one who would have real success in bringing men to Christ must pray much. (5) He must be baptized with the Holy Ghost.

GOING TO WORK.

No worker was expected to go to work without a Bible, as it was held to be important that those inquiring the way of life should be able to see for themselves "in black and white" from the Word what God says; to read for themselves the special passages applicable to their case. It is well to state the method adopted by Dr. Torrey in dealing with inquirers. When the invitation is given to those who desire to take Christ as their Saviour, instructions are given to clear as many of the front seats as may be necessary; the inquirers are then invited to come forward and occupy them. At this point the "red-badge" workers come forward from their seats in differents part of the Hall. The sub-committee's work here is one of direction. Wearing a special badge, their work consists in keeping the passages clear that inquirers may come to the front, and allocating the workers to the inquirers, taking care, as far as they possibly can, that male workers should deal with members of their own sex, and similarly women with women, and, as far as possible, about their own age. Dr. Torrey, when all have come forward, proceeds to explain the way of life, briefly, clearly, and simply, with instructions as to Christian living.

These instructions finished, the workers engage the inquirers in further conversation, seeking to clear away doubts and difficulties, indicating passages in God's Word, and praying with them. The sub-committee, provided with covenant cards, have meanwhile been distributing them to the workers, which they, in turn, explain to the inquirers. The covenant card is signed by the inquirer and retained by him or her. Accompanying the card is a second one, containing spaces for the name and address, the church usually attended, with the date, and a space for any remarks the worker may feel called upon to make regarding the case dealt with by him. The cards are subsequently collected and handed to the secretary, with a view to future distribution to the clergy and others, who are requested by circular to visit the cases and seek to engage them in Christian work and otherwise help them.

ORGANISING A FELLOWSHIP MEETING.

When the mission ended, the work was by no means finished. Within a few days from the termination of the mission, invitation cards were in the hands of nearly 4,000 people who had come forward as enquirers; and within a week the first "Converts' Fellowship Meeting" was held, an early gathering of the converts for fellowship being considered important. Each invitation card bore a number corresponding to a number in a register, containing the names and addresses, and as the converts enter the hall, their numbers are marked on the register. In this way their absence can be marked, and absentees visited.

THE FIRST MEETING.

It must have been with profound gratitude to God that the workers looked upon that first "fellowship meeting," and saw in it God's answer to the prayers that had gone up for many months before the mission, from His people in many parts. Although the night was an inclement one, the numbers were so great as to necessitate an overflow gathering, and the testimonies given were bright and cheering, filling the hearts of God's people with joy and thankfulness. Truly it could be said, "What hath God wrought!"

THE VALUE OF INDIVIDUAL WORK.

In conclusion, a word may be said as to the importance of individual invitation. Probably the supply of workers may exceed the demand. There is a great opportunity if the workers that have not been allocated to inquirers, to employ the time during the after-meeting in personally inviting people to decide for Christ. Many have been brought to a point, and they need just the slightest persuasion to bring them "over the line." This was found to be the experience of some Liverpool workers; and among the converts were some who had hesitated to come forward, but who, in response to a personal invitation from some worker in the hall, then come to the front.

CONVERTS' FELLOWSHIP MEETINGS.

Our hearts have been filled to overflowing with gratitude to God for the large number of converts as the result of the mission, so large a proportion of whom have been men.

The ministers of the churches to which they belonged, or to which they had expressed a desire to attach themselves, were notified from time to time as the mission progressed; and we trust that many have already identified themselves with the organizations of their own congregations.

It was felt advisable, in addition, to arrange for combined fellowship meetings as a means of drawing the converts together and helping them forward on their Christian life. A small subcommittee was appointed to organize these gatherings, and it was decided to hold one central meeting as being the most inspiring and helpful. The York and Hull Mount Pleasant, holding about 1,200 persons, was fixed upon, with provision for an overflow in a hall near by.

On the last night of the mission the announcement was made that a Convert's Fellowship Meeting would be held on the Tuesday following (Oct. 6), and continued each week during October, once a fortnight in November, and on the first Tuesday in each succeeding month so long as the attendance justified it. It was felt to be most desirable to restrict the meeting to the converts and the faithful band of two to three hundred workers who had the privilege of dealing with them during the mission.

METHOD OF REGISTRATION.

A ticket was accordingly posted to each convert giving full particulars of the meetings, and bearing a reference number corresponding to the number attached to the name on a roll prepared for the purpose—the scheme being to take the numbers each night on entering, mark the register therefrom, and visit those who were found to be irregular in their attendance.

Eight o'clock was the hour for starting on Tuesday, October 6, and fully half an hour before that time eager faces were at the door. The chairman, Mr. John C. Proctor, was in his place soon after, and the interval before the start of the meeting was very profitably and happily occupied with singing. Needless to say Mr. Alexander's Revival Hymns were used, and it is not to be wondered at that "Never lose sight of Jesus" was the first hymn to break the silence. By eight o'clock the hall was well nigh full, and soon after the provision for an overflow meeting was found to be needed. This was taken in charge by Mr. Alexander Armstrong, of the City Mission.

About 1,500 were present at the two meetings, and most happy, helpful gatherings they proved throughout. "There's not a friend like the lowly Jesus" was the opening hymn, followed by prayer, in which Mr. Thomas R. Kew led; then Rev. C. R. Green read Philippians i. 1-11, a portion of which had been telegraphed as a greeting from one who could not be present.

The chairman dwelt on the joys of Christian fellowship, and the special blessing promised to it in Malachi iii. 16, and indicated in how many ways such gatherings as these would bring help and encouragement to those who had so recently started on their journey heavenward.

Ten minutes was devoted to testimony, and a soul refreshing time it proved; convert after convert quickly rising with happy face and glowing word to briefly tell of the blessing received. Specially touching were the testimonies of men, two being very young disciples. Twenty or thirty spoke, and as, when the chairman announced the expiration of the time, five or six rose together in their anxiety not to miss the privilege of witnessing for the Master, it was felt that further opportunity should be given ere the meeting closed.

Rev. C. R. Green was appointed speaker, and his address was most earnest and practical, dealing first with the Christian's life in the world, then with his life in the Church, and finally with the Christian's secret or inner life. A ten minutes' interval of prayer followed, when many brief heartfelt petitions ascended. A second period of testimony proved to be as blessed as the first, and the meeting closed with "The Glory Song," in which every heart and voice seemed joyfully to unite.

Welcome at Dundee.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

At the welcome meeting to Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander, held in the Kinnaird Hall, Dundee, on Monday of last week, the platform and speeches spoke the spirit of expectation and augured well for success. The ministers of the city and surroundings gave their benison, and no section of Christian work was lacking in representation.

The platform has not for long had such a large gathering upon it. The Corporation lent countenance by the presence of Bailies Doig, Martin, and Nairn, with Lord Provost Barrie, who said: "I am here on behalf of the whole community generally to give Mr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander a most hearty welcome to our city. We welcome everyone to our city, more especially those who are likely to benefit it most. We believe that the mission of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander is for good. In America, a most hearty welcome is given to all our ministers and missionaries who go there, and they are not a few. No tariff walls are built up against the Gospel, and we will be very glad to give a free import to Mr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander into Dundee. I think I may bespeak for them not only a welcome, but a very hearty welcome. I think this meeting testifies to the interest that is here, for not only is the hall crowded, but on the platform and all around I see a great many people. There are many business men whom we might, in these times of depression and destitution among some of them, expect to find looking after the machinery everywhere; but instead we find them here, showing that these eternal interests have a fascination for them, and appeal more strongly to them than the matter of pounds, shillings, and pence."

Councillor Henderson, president of the Y.M.C.A., and Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements occupied the chair of the meeting, and read letters of apology from Lord Kinnaird, Sir John Leng, and others, all of which breathed interest, and desire for the blessing of God on the mission, and through it to the spiritual weal of the community.

THE GROUND PREPARED.

In his remarks Mr. Henderson alluded to the fact that the ground had been prepared for the reception of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander. "I am sure that is the simple truth, and we hope that the result of the preparation will be that a very great harvest will be ingathered by them. We not only expect them to do a large amount of reaping, but a large amount of sowing also, so that while others have been sowing and they come in to reap, they may sow also, and others may see the fruits of their sowing. We hope and believe a great blessing will attend the efforts which are to be put forth by the friends of the Gospel of the Christ of God; that the Gospel in all its simplicity and all its earnestness, I trust and believe, will be preached by them. Whoever it is who preaches this Gospel, in whatever way it may be preached or sung, if thereby people are uplifted and elevated, and taught to look to higher things, taught to respect themselves more and to respect and reverence everything that is higher and superior, then I am sure we shall have no cause to regret that Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander came to Dundee. I give you, Dr. Torrey, and you, Mr. Alexander, a very hearty welcome."

Rev. Dr. Grant, representing the Established Church, in words racy and genial, gave, as he said, a welcome as warm as one Christian could give to another. Then followed the veteran Rev. John McPherson, who was hailed with a storm of welcome that during the rugged words of his address expressed itself in many a wet cheek. He had seen 1,000 people saved within a week in a mission, over forty years ago, and he prayed God it might be even so now.

Rev. Wm. Hamilton welcomed in the name of Baptists, Methodists, Congregationalists, and all others, and said it had come to be known that there was a close connection between the eternal interests of the citizen and the civic behaviour.

To these kindly messages, Dr. Torrey replied, that he had never felt more at home in any city. The lives of W. C. Burns, Robert Murray McCheyne, and the book of the aged saint whom he had that afternoon shaken by the hand for the first time (Rev. J. McPherson), had had much to do with his tour round the world. He had no new gospel; they work ruin. He would preach the message that was for all time. What God had wrought in their journeyings had illustrated four or five things—(1) God answers prayer; (2) the power of the blood of Christ; (3) the power of the Word of God; (4) the power of the Holy Spirit; (5) the power of personal work.

Mr. Alexander told of letters he had received with their stories of God's mercy and power to keep.

At the noon-day prayer-meeting touching requests for prayer were read, and many hearts were poured out in fervent supplications.

The evening meeting, with its vast crowd of 2,500 men and women, with little ones sitting at the front, was a sight that looked most impressive from the platform. Mr. Alexander led the praise with that power and charm which grows upon one. Dr. Torrey preached upon the text, "Where art thou?" and there were few sinners who were not found out. About forty came out to confess Christ, and there were many who would not come to the front, not having courage to face the scorn and ridicule of companions. God is with us, and the Holy Spirit's power is beyond all question breaking the hearts of men. Professed Socialists and Secularists who were present seemed most genuinely uncomfortable. We dare to expect wonders from the hand of God.

THE ORIGIN OF "GET RIGHT WITH GOD."

Millions of little cards with the words, "Get Right with God," have been circulated during the Torrey-Alexander missions in different parts of the world. It will interest many workers who have helped to know the origin of the idea. One day Major Cole, one of the veteran helpers of D. L. Moody in days long ago, was conducting a mission in a town in America where it seemed hopeless to try and touch the hearts of the people. He went out for a walk alone, and flinging himself down on the grass he pleaded with God to tell him how he might break down the spirit of indifference. As he prayed, the thought came to him of printing on a little card the simple words, "Get Right with God." He rose from his wrestling with God with a new hope in his heart. He began to hand the little card about; then he printed more, and persuaded others to do the same. Numerous instances can be narrated of how the words have arrested the careless.

The other day a woman who was converted at one of the Torrey-Alexander meetings said that she had come to the service because she heard a ring at the door, and, thinking it was the postman, she looked in the letter box. She found two cards, with the words, "Get Right with God." "At first," she said, "my husband and I laughed at them, but the words got to burning themselves into our minds, and we both came to the meeting and got saved."

Major Cole still carries on evangelistic work in America, and was one of the speakers at the summer Convention held in Moody's church in Chicago. He rejoices at the far-reaching influence of the idea which came to him in answer to prayer. Truly, the weak things of the world are used by God to confound the mighty, and four words will often do good when a long sermon will be ineffectual.

INCIDENTS OF THE MISSIONS.

TELEGRAPH MESSENGERS CONVERTED.

Special prayer was offered for a service among telegraph messengers, and the workers had the great happiness of enlisting that evening eight lads under Christ's banner. They joined there and then the Telegraph Messengers' Christian Association.

A FACTORY PRAYER-MEETING.

Some men who had been converted at Liverpool asked permission to hold a prayer-meeting in one of the workrooms of the factory where they were employed. They were joined by several others, and the meeting was a very happy one, though quite a novel proceeding in the factory.

PARENTAL JOYS.

There was a great deal of rejoicing outside Kinnaird Hall, Dundee, the other night, when several members of the committee met, and grasped each others hands and said, "My boy is saved." "And so is mine." "And my girl is saved." Two sons and one daughter of the committeemen was saved on the same evening.

GIVING UP TOBACCO.

At Dundee, on a recent night, a man sat listening very intently to Dr. Torrey as he told how all had broken the Commandments. As he spoke of each one, the man said, "Yes, that is so; I have broken that one," and "I have broken that one," and so forth. He was chewing tobacco, but at last he threw it away and said, "There, good-bye, that's the last of you."

GIVING UP A DAY'S WORK.

A railway carter received so much blessing from the service in Liverpool, one night, that he gave up a whole day's work and pay to use his cart to bring boys to the meeting for young people. He went and fetched a number of lads from the outskirts of the city, and had the joy of knowing that his labour had not been in vain. Two other men from the same station were converted.

A FATHER'S REWARD.

A Liverpool gentleman, writing to Mr. Alexander, says: "The inspiration I got at the meetings, and the joy of sharing in the work, has been completely eclipsed by the glad news which reached me last night, that my eldest boy, a lad of fifteen years, came forward on the last Sunday night and accepted Christ Jesus as his Saviour. This morning I spoke to another child, a girl of seventeen, saying how I had hoped that she, too, would have given her heart to Jesus. She said, 'I did, father, long ago.' You can imagine how my wife and I are rejoicing. I can hardly see to write this for the tears of gladness filling my eyes."

THE EFFECT OF ENCOURAGEMENT.

A lady worker said: "I wish I could tell you what Mr. Alexander has done for my brother. He was at the midday meeting with a friend, and was much helped and encouraged by Mr. Alexander's interest and sympathy. Mr. Alexander was so interested in hearing of his work that the few minutes' walk they had together cheered my brother's heart greatly. My brother has gone back to Brechin, where he and a circle of friends have been praying for the mission ever since it started in Australia. I cannot tell all it has meant to my brother. He did not expect even to be noticed, and now he has gone back to his difficult work with renewed strength and courage."

BLESSING IN FAMILIES.

A worker in Liverpool says:—"I have great cause to praise God for the visit of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander to Liverpool, for during the mission my mother, wife, and youngest daughter accepted Christ, together with my eldest son, whom God had sent home on a visit after two and a half years' absence in America. My eldest daughter had already made the decision, and we are now all of one mind in the house, our united prayers going up to God for the salvation of another son in Africa. He is not too far off for God to reach him. Among my friends three in one family were converted—son and daughter at the Philharmonic Hall, followed two days after by their mother, who is lying on a bed of sickness. My youngest brother would not give in during the mission, but did so two days after it had concluded."

THREE FRUITS OF MOODY'S WORK.

The marvellous fruitfulness of Mr. Moody's life is continually being proved. Again and again a man or woman comes up to Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander and says: "I was converted at one of the Moody and Sankey meetings." Here is a case which has come to light recently. In the year 1897 the late Mr. D. L. Moody conducted a mission in Boston. At the close of one of his meetings in Tremont Temple a gentleman in middle life came up to him and said: "You do not know who I am, but I feel I must speak to you, as I leave for California to-night, and we shall probably never meet again. More than twenty years ago you were speaking in London, and I, with two other rough young fellows, wandered in to hear you. We were moral lepers, and had gone far in all kinds of sin. The Spirit of God touched our hearts through your words that night. We did not stop to speak to you, but when we came out of the house on to the walk we shook hands, and quietly said one to another, 'From this night we begin a new life.' One of the three died in Egypt at the head of his regiment, an earnest Christian soldier. The second is a heroic missionary in Africa, and I am the third." We may well remember the words, "Is there anything too hard for Me?" and take courage.

STORY OF A SHOP ASSISTANT.

"On the Monday morning following the opening day of the mission in Dundee, I went into a small shop to make a purchase," writes a worker, "and was served by a bright young lady, who entered at once into conversation, asking me if I was going to any of the theatres. I told her I was interested in the Torrey-Alexander Mission, and that Dr. Torrey was very strong in his denunciation of theatres. She asked me if I agreed with Dr. Torrey. I replied, 'Yes,' to which she answered, 'All people cannot think alike in these things.' I said they could if they liked, to which she answered, 'I suppose we can, but the trouble is we don't like.' I assented, and went away after inviting her to come to the mission, which she promised to do. On the following night I saw her there, and during the address she looked very serious and anxious. When Dr. Torrey appealed to those who would accept Christ to stand up, I did not look to see whether she did, but kept praying that God would save her that night. Later on Dr. Torrey told all who had risen before to stand up and remain standing. I looked up, and was rejoiced to see her come to the front, accepting and confessing publicly Christ as her Lord and Saviour."

THE EVANGELISTS' MAIL-BAG.

A WORKER'S JOY.

A well-known worker at Birkenhead, where Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander conducted services for four days, writes: "I wish to tell you in what an unexpected way I got my reward for this little bit of work (the writer had spoken in public about the revival in Australia, and had urged a visit from the evangelists). In all this I had been thinking of the unsaved outside, and had forgotten my own home. But I am inexpressibly thankful to God that my three boys, 9, 11, and 13 years of age, have all come out in your meetings for Christ. I have long been anxious for them to decide early, and now it is done!"

FROM A CHURCH ORGANIST.

One of the choir at Liverpool who is organist at a church in the city, sends a very interesting tribute to the help which he personally received from Mr. Alexander's leadership. He says in the course of his letter, "My object in writing to you is to thank you for giving even well-known hymns a new beauty to me, and to tell you how your solo-singing and conducting on the platform have overwhelmed me at times with emotion, and almost, if not altogether, broken me down. I will now be able to play the organ for Jesus better than ever before; and the church choir, who, with two exceptions, were singing, or acting as helpers in the hall, have also received such an impetus as they never had before."

FROM A HOSPITAL WARD.

Many readers will remember the story of the man who wrote a note to Dr. Torrey saying, "I am happy, saved, and sober," signing it, "Bob." Soon after the Glasgow meetings, this convert was taken ill, and he has been at the point of death. Writing to Mr. Alexander the other day, he said: "When you are speaking to the sinners around you in your meetings, tell them how few come to Christ on a death-bed." In quaint phraseology he continued, "I thought I was sent for, but I knew it was all right; still you know we all like to live a little longer. In the silent night when all was quiet, I got time to think. All my past life came before me, and the devil sat by my bedside and put everything into my head against Jesus and myself. I could not sleep; then I was afraid to close my eyes, for I seemed to see him sitting there still. I cried out for the nurse to come and give me a sleeping draught. She came and told me that I was too weak, and she dare not, as the doctor had not ordered me one. But she turned my pillow and put a damp cloth round my head. Then she opened the Bible and read to me those blessed words, 'Fear not, for I am with thee. Be not dismayed, for I am thy God.' The words came into my head, 'Have faith in God.' I felt His hand on my head, and slept the first time for four nights."

ECHOES FROM DR. TORREY.

You have just as much grace in your life as you appropriate.

It is our duty not to be anxious about anything.

What a tower of strength a man is who never gets excited.

The worst waste of time and energy is worry.

Prayer is God's appointed way of obtaining the Holy Spirit.

I don't believe in bringing the Bible down to the level of my own experience, but in bringing my own experience up to the level of the Bible.

The deeds done here in the body will determine your eternity.

Our idle unpremeditated words reveal what is in our hearts.

The great test of what a man is at heart is what he does with Jesus Christ.

If there is anything in the world which takes deliberation, it is communion with God by prayer and reading His word.

Pray before and after all the great events and achievements of your lives.

Jesus spent the whole night in prayer just before He chose His disciples.

The hour of victory is the hour of peril and temptation.

God will not give His glory to another.

There is only one way the sinner can approach the presence of a holy God, and that is by the way of the atoning blood.

We must come into God's presence by the blood and in the Spirit—Unto the Father through the Son in the Spirit.

If ever there is a time when we need to pray, it is when we don't feel like it.

Pentecost teaches us God's order. Efforts for the world are second, not first; and to be right and blessed must follow personal possession of the Divine influence for ourselves. We must be charged with spiritual electricity by contact with the great Reservoir of power, before we go forth to communicate the goodness to others.—Dr. Alex. Maclaren.

From Our Readers.

THE WORD OF GOD.

DEAR SIR,—I see from a recent issue of The Christian, that a good deal of anxiety attends the use of the common expression, "the Word of God which is contained in the Scriptures." Some understand it in a sense which I and others heartily repudiate, as if Scripture were a kind of miscellany, out of which one was to extract what in it is the Word of God, the rest being the notions of men. Any such idea is contrary to what the Word claims for itself that it is, and destroys the possibility of making Scripture a standard, as Paul, for instance, said to Timothy that it was.

But such an interpretation of the language "contained in" rests on the notion that the Word of God is something precious, no doubt, but that it is mixed up with a quantity of dross which must be separated from it, or wrapped up in something for carrying, which one tears off as a thoroughly inferior material, which one throws aside in order to get at the precious things which lie within. Not so. If the Word of God is to be distinguished from the Scripture, as the thing containing from the thing contained, it is like a wrapper made by God's own hand—say that in which the bud of a plant is contained, the one as living, and in a good sense as precious as the other; for if you injure the husk or cover, you injure the bud around which it grows.

There may be a sense in which we speak of the Scriptures as different from the Word of God which they contain; but only so far as to defend us from the accusation that we are worshippers of a mere book. But for all practical purposes the thing contained is as little different from the thing containing, as a column of figures is from the sum to which they amount when counted up. The expression is, perhaps, most familiar from the answer to the second question in The Shorter Catechism of the Westminster Assembly of Divines: "The Word of God, which is contained in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, is the only rule to direct us how we may glorify and enjoy Him." This suggests, surely, that what is contained in the Scriptures is contrasted with any words of God supposed to lie outside of them.

It is often alleged that by studying the Book of Nature we may arrive at words of God as truly such as the words in the Bible. Or scholarship has hunted up all the fragments of sayings attributed to Christ, though not recorded in the Bible. And we know that the prophets wrote books which are not found in our Bible, and it is asked, Are not these also a portion of the Word of God? In reply, we say, whatever may be asserted about these, this much is certain, that they lie outside the Bible, and that it is only the Word of God which is contained in the two well-known volumes of Scripture, that we hold to be the rule to direct us how we may glorify and enjoy Him.—Yours very truly, George C. M. Douglas.

KNOWING ROME.

TO go out to a Roman Catholic country for a visit, or for health, and stay a few weeks, or months, is a vastly different thing from living year after year in the midst of the people and coming to know much of the thoughts and manners of the Roman Church. Those who really know Rome look askance at the movement connected with the recent publication of the Scriptures by the Jerome Society of Rome. The letter by Mr. J. S. Anderson, headed "Rome's Gospel," made us thank God for the writer's effort to open the eyes of Christian people at home.

As a missionary among Roman Catholics for nearly fifteen years, may I say that Rome is wise! What she wants is England! And she is perfectly willing to run the risk of the light breaking in on a few dark souls, which (as in our work we have constantly proved) means their severing their connection with her, so that she advances to her goal—the conquest of England!

Dr. Robertson, in his magnificent work "The Roman Catholic Church in Italy," shows clearly enough that Rome's effort is not a religious but a political movement. But she will be "all things to all men," and gain the religious by religion. She has well studied the question how best to gain her ends. If she can in any way win the approbation of the earnest Christian public of Bible-loving England, her object will be easily attained. The worldly public she has already, through Ritualism.

May I ask—Is Rome the great apostasy? Is she Satan's masterpiece? Then is it likely that the arch-enemy will stop at any method for throwing dust in Christian eyes? If he can by his sophistry attract Christians to tolerate the blasphemies of Rome's service, for the sake of what follows, he will have scored immensely! Is it not as though a cry were wrung from the Apostle when he says: "What agreement hath the temple of God with idols? For ye are the temple of the living God." "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing." Marion E. Larritt.

THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

DEAR SIR,—Have not the Rulers of God's Bible Land brought the Barge of State to a point where two ways meet? Are we not the highly-honoured instrument in His hand for the furtherance, and not the frustration, of His gracious purposes amongst the nations of the earth? Should not the present deeply important political juncture be made the subject of united and earnest petition, that the Lord in His mercy may forgive all our shortcomings in Church and State, and grant to our Sovereign and his servants in high places that their ears may hear a word behind them saying, "This is the way, walk ye in it, when ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left"?

I can imagine no grander opportunity, nor more serious necessity for the public confession of our dependence upon the Divine guidance, as it is a question which involves weighty considerations of national and international interest. Our leaders have only to start the ball rolling, and all the churches and prayer meetings under St. George's Cross would heartily respond. But let an early week be set apart, for Time has wings, and the sooner we ask the sooner we shall have what we certainly require—Heavenly wisdom.—Yours truly, J. C. Robinson.

THE BLANKENBURG CONVENTION.

DEAR SIR,—A letter from Prussia draws my attention to a report of our last Blankenburg Convention, given in your number of September 3. Only last week I got a copy, and saw that the report contains an erroneous statement, and misrepresents the lines in which we are determined to walk. Kindly let me have the hospitality of your paper to give the necessary rectification.

As for erroneous statement, the subject, Heb. i.-iv., was in no way chosen against the views of Dr. Lepsius about Cain and Abel. When I proposed it at Easter-time, I quite ignored the fact that my friend Dr. Lepsius had gone so far in revising the Bible as to propose, on the ground of a corrupted text, to put in the story of Cain and Abel the name of a woman in the place of the name of Jehovah, which strikes Heb. xi. 4 out of our Holy Book.

There was no "policy," no pre-arrangement. When I stood up in the first meeting of our Convention to stigmatize the proceeding of Dr. Lepsius as a "folly wrought in Israel" (Josh. vii. 15), nobody in the hall had an idea of the testimony I was to give; it had appeared at my own horizon only one or two days before. It was a personal burden, the cry of a wounded heart, a cry of alarm to the Church.

If my testimony "aroused a considerable amount of discussion" amongst the attendance, the committee, with the exception of one member, stood on my side; and we would, concerning "plans for the future," rather renounce the privilege of having another year the annual delegation of Keswick representatives, than consider as a "debatable point" any hypothesis like that of Dr. Lepsius on Genesis iii.

I find your correspondent has misrepresented the general aspect of the Convention. The appreciations reported in the last number of the Evangelical Alliance paper (published in Blankenburg) are quite different from that of your correspondent. There are even people, it seems, who spoke of this last Convention as the most blessed that had ever been held in Blankenburg.—Respectfully,

Otto Stockmayer
(from Hauptweil, Switzerland), Member of the leading Committee of the Blankenburg Conference.

Sunday-Closing.

THE greatest stain on the peace and sanctity of the Lord's Day is the legalized opening of the public-house. Shops for the sale of all other articles, useful and ornamental, are in general closed, but the traffic in intoxicating drinks which does more to neutralize the good results of Christian teaching than all other trades put together is openly carried on.

For many years earnest endeavours have been made to get this anomaly put right, yet still the ever-swinging doors of liquor saloons remind us of the failure, thus far, of our efforts. Yet the legislature, back by public opinion, has so far admitted the evil as to prohibit the common sale of liquor on Sundays in practically every part of our Empire, except England.

Why must our own land be still cursed with this soul-destoying trade on the Day of Rest? It must be due to the apathy of Christian people, for if God's servants fully realised the evil they would give Parliament no rest until the boon already long granted to Scotland, Ireland, Wales, and most of our Dependencies is extended to England.

The Central Sunday Closing Association is preparing for a vigorous campaign during the coming winter, when no effort will be spared to influence public opinion in favour of this simple and much needed piece of temperance legislation. Those who value the sanctity of the Lord's Day are urged to help the movement.

A Missionary Farewell.

A NUMBER of workers of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, about to leave for various stations in India, took a public farewell, a few days ago, at Exeter Hall.

Lord Kinnaird, who presided, said that, despite discouragements which have to be encountered, there is encouragement in the fact that openings for missionary enterprise are multiplying.

Rev. A. R. Cavalier, secretary, introduced the missionaries, several of whom addressed the meeting. In all, seventeen are going out—twelve returning after work in India, and five going for the first time. Of the returning missionaries, four are going back to zenana work, four to educational work, one to medical work, and three to the villages. It was stated that the society's staff of workers numbers 432, of whom 157 are missionaries, 191 native teachers in zenanas and schools, nurses, &c., and eighty-four Bible women.

Miss Stanford, who ran the risk of being left behind owing to the lack of funds at the disposal of the committee, gave an animated description of how, among her own friends, the means had been raised, not only for the passage, but for more than the sum needed for maintenance during the first year. The other missionaries who spoke, included Dr. Grace Mackinnon, returning to medical service in Patna, and Miss Edge, who resumes her educational work in Bombay.

"Telling the Glad Tidings."

Sacred Songs and Solos, No. 24.

JOY! joy!" cried Frank as he ran into the nursery to his sisters and brothers; "Mother is coming home to-morrow, and she is quite well again." The dear mother had been away some weeks, after a dangerous illness, and this was indeed good news Frank could not help telling.

A dear girl, only about sixteen, was quite a cripple with rheumatism; her friend heard of a wonderful doctor who thought he could cure her, at once she went to tell the glad tidings.

A poor man is lying in the condemned cell, he is to die to-morrow. The gaoler comes in with someone who holds a paper in his hand; it is a pardon signed by the King. He reads it in a dazed kind of way, and says, "Oh! it is not for me, I cannot believe it." It was some time before he could be persuaded that the glad tidings were true.

In 2 Sam. xviii. we read of a terrible battle. Absolom, King David's son, had risen in rebellion against his father and tried to get the kingdom from him. David had begged all his soldiers not to hurt Absolom, for though he was such a bad son his father loved him. God helped David's soldiers to conquer, and as Absalom was fleeing away his head caught in the branches of an oak and he hung there till David's general killed him. Then runners were sent with the good tidings, the king was watching from the tower over the city gate, the messenger came up and said, "All is well," then the king said, "Is it well with the young man Absolom?" And when he heard that he was dead, oh, how he wept! The glad tidings of victory were forgotten in grief for his wicked son.

Here is another Bible story about "Glad tidings"; you will find it in 2 Kings vii. The town of Samaria was besieged, the Syrian enemies all round, and terrible were the suffering of the people. Four poor lepers were starving at the city gate; they said, "If we stay here we shall die, if we go in we shall die, let us go to the enemies' camp and beg, they can but kill us." When they got there, they found the soldiers all gone, and plenty of food and gold and clothes. God had made the Syrians to hear a great noise in the night, and they had fled in fear! So these four poor men ate and drank, and took away gold, &c., and buried it; till at last one bethought him of the dying people and said, "We do not well; this is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace." So they went and told. In Isa. lii. 7 we read: "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him who bringeth good tidings." Is that true of you?

The very best glad tidings ever given we read of in Luke ii. 10, it was so wonderful that angels were sent from heaven with the message, and everyone who believes this good news has great joy. This is the story the first disciples of Jesus told wherever they went (Acts xiii. 32, 33). Jesus has come, Jesus has died, Jesus has risen again, Jesus has gone back to heaven where He ever liveth to make intercession for us, and, better still, Jesus is coming back to fetch His children. And He says to you and to me: "Go and tell some one else" (Matt. xvi. 15); or, if you cannot go, "send the glad tidings all the world around." A poor heathen woman, to whom a lady told the story of Jesus, asked: "How long have you known this good news?" and when she said, "All my life," replied, "Oh, why did you not come and tell us before; how could you keep it to yourself?" Dear young friends, will you not tell the glad tidings and try to make others glad?

Pray, Lads, Pray!

Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the spirit (Eph. vi. 18).

Do you say it isn't manly
For a lad to kneel and pray?
There is no more manly action
In the wide world of to-day;
For the best of Men—the Lord of all—
Found a strength, indeed, in prayer,
And we who would be like to Him
Must seek and find strength there.

There's a joy surpassing knowledge
Comes to every lad of prayer;
He is strong 'gainst all temptation
And is happy everywhere.
For he knows his way is guided
By the God to whom he prays,
And God's favour lends a brightness
Which makes gladsome all his days.

It will draw an aid from heaven
That will help you bear each load,
Till life's burden is unloaded
At the very feet of God.
Pray, my lads! You'll ne'er regret it,
For, when ends "life's little day,"
It will prove a source of solace
When a boy you learnt to pray.

Personal.

Many thanks for flowers.

I am delighted to receive so many kind little letters expressing satisfaction and appreciation of the prizes and certificates sent out for the last Competition. There is such a number, however, that it would be impossible for me to answer each separately.

Derwent Turnbull, Gussie Baring.—Thank you for your letters. I am glad to find you can take up the "Searcher" again.

Valerie Sutton, John and Lizzie Jones.—You have missed four or five "Searchers" since the beginning of this term, but if you are very diligent and careful, you may be able to compete at Christmas.

Gwendoline Simons.—Thank you for your letter. I wish you every success in your examination.

Lessons from Moses (Heb. iii. 1-5; xi. 24-28).

MOSES has the credit of being the meekest of men, but he did not begin so. It is nearer the truth to say that he was very hasty and hot-headed. When he began his life-work, it was but a word and a blow with him. His meekness was not natural; but acquired by the grace and teaching of the good Spirit of God. To acquire it, it was needful for him to go into the Divine college of solitude and silence, and for forty years be banished to the wilderness of Sinai.

The story is an extremely interesting one! Saved from the water, he became the adopted son of Pharaoh's daughter, Thermuthis, and was educated in all the wisdom for which Egypt was famous. I have stood on the site, marked by a solitary column, of the great university at Heliopolis, where Moses was instructed, and became mighty in words and works (Acts vii. 22).

When his university education was concluded Moses must have returned to the Court, and resumed his position in his mother's household; and tradition says that he embraced the career of a soldier, and probably till the age of forty (Acts vii. 33), he was engaged in the lower and higher grades of military service. It is said that he was leader in a most triumphant campaign against the Ethiopians. Hence Stephen's words, "He was mighty in deeds."

Amid all his Egyptian surroundings, however, he never forgot, and never wished to forget, that he was a Hebrew. The lessons instilled into his youthful mind by Jochebed could not be effaced, and he was imbued, as all his people were, with the anticipation of a deliverer. This was the reproach of Christ of which we read in Heb. xi. 26. Perhaps it was only a dim longing for help against the intolerable wrongs to which the Hebrew people were subjected; coupled with an assurance that the God of their fathers would send them a great deliverer; but it contained the germ of the Messianic hope.

He resolved on a tour of inspection of his brethren's condition and burdens (Ex. ii. 11). Alone, or accompanied by a few attendants, he made himself familiar with the whole of the afflictions from which they were suffering; and the sights he had witnessed left an ineffaceable impression on his mind. What could he do? on the one hand were the treasures of Egypt (Heb. xi. 26), and all the seductive pleasures of sin (25). On the other hand were honour, conscience, gratitude to his kind protectress; and above all those Divine revelations of the future of Israel which were grasped by faith (23). At length he made his choice, quitted the palace, renounced his offices, and perhaps returned to the humble cottage in which he was born.

Then the pent-up fire burst forth. Going forth He saw an Egyptian smiting one of his brethren, and in an outburst of rage felled him dead. He had much to learn. The wrath of man cannot fulfill the righteousness of God. Not by might nor by power can man prevail. God had to teach him that He cannot ally Himself with the rage or pride of human strength, and therefore for forty years he was left to the discipline of the desert, where he led the flocks of Jethro (Ex. ii. 13, 14, &c.).

The result of this long discipline was that he became absolutely drained of the last drops of self-sufficiency, and lay as a helpless, broken vessel at the feet of God (Ex. iii., iv.).

Thenceforward he became a servant, and a servant only. This is his greatest designation, "Moses, the servant of the Lord" (Rev. xv. 3). He was used to rear the great house of the Jewish polity. In every detail we are told that he acted as the Lord commanded him (Ex. xl.). The epitaph that the Spirit of Inspiration inscribes over him is thus, "Moses, indeed, was faithful in all his house as a servant." It was because of his absolute obedience that he was capable of such commanding faith. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

The eighth annual Irish Christian Endeavour Convention, held in Londonderry, was largely attended. Rev. G. R. Wedgwood, of Belfast, presided, and the report was submitted by Mr. J. Newman Hall, B.A., who stated that there are about 5,000 active and 3,000 associate members in connection with Christian Endeavour in Ireland. Addresses were delivered by Revs. Dr. Stuart, James McGranahan, J. M. Alley, T. W. Davidson, and others. Altogether the Convention was a soul-refreshing time to those who attended, and should have a beneficial influence upon Christian Endeavour in Ireland during the coming winter.

International S.S. Lesson.

David's Joy over Forgiveness (Psa. xxxii.).

Golden Text.—Psa. xxxii. 1.

IN the previous lesson (Psa. li.), David appeared as a repentant sinner, confessing his sin and crying for mercy and forgiveness. In the present lesson (Psa. xxxii.), as a forgiven sinner, he rejoices because his sins are pardoned. He tells something of his state of feeling during the period of his silence, before Nathan revealed his sin to him by the word of the Lord. He tells others who have had their burden of sin cast away (Isa. xxxviii. 17), to shout for joy, and "be glad in Jehovah."

King David knew the Levitical law demanded confession of wrong doing, both individual and national; (Lev. v. 7, xvi. 21; Num. v. 7), that forgiveness was based on confession (Lev. xxvi. 43); every sacrifice was a confession of sin with its penalty—death.

The Results of Confession Withheld.

Misery and danger; grief of spirit; a troubled conscience, a heart bowed down (not "upright") (v. 11); "many sorrows" (v. 10); sickness of body; sleeplessness, and even loud weeping; a stain on his hands as well as on his soul (Psa. li. 14); a cloud between his soul and his God; the face of the Lord turned from him. He could not pray even if he attended public worship. His harp was mute, and all that for one whole year, though he knew "the Name of the Lord" as proclaimed to Moses (Ex. xxxiv. 5-7). He "kept silence"; was it "fear of man" or pride? It was some snare of the enemy.

The Result of Confession Made.

"I will arise and go to my Father." "I will confess my transgression." "I'm the sinner Jesus came to save" (Gal. ii. 20). Forgiveness, cleansing, record wiped out. Sincerity imparted, "truth in the inward parts." Sin's dominion broken. Safety, shelter, help in trial or temptation (Rom. vi. 12). (v. 7). Teaching, guidance, joy in the Lord, which is the only true blessedness. "He is mine and I am His." The prodigal son was not kept waiting, but NOW is the time named in verse 6. Then "tell it out" the good news that others may get like blessing (Rev. xxii. 17). Confession must be full, real, and hearty, with always a turning from sin to the Saviour (Prov. xxviii. 13). Verse 6. Will there ever be a time when God cannot be found? (Is. lv. 6, with 2 Cor. vi. 2, and Prov. i. 24-28; Luke xiii. 24-28; xix. 42). Jesus is the "Hiding place from the storm," the Refuge, "flee thither" (Num. xxxv. 11) for safety and joy.

The Lord Jesus Christ as our sin-offering and Great High Priest confessed our sin when "He was made SIN for us." On Calvary he cried out, "Why hast Thou forsaken Me?" He paid the penalty, and waits to give repentance and forgiveness to all who trust Him (Acts v. 31). His joy (Heb. xii. 2). He gives His children here (John xv. 11; xvi. 22) share the joy of service with them as He will the blessedness of glory (xvii. 24; 1 John i. 9). Confess you are a sinner. Confess the Saviour and He will confess you (Matt. x. 32; Rev. iii. 5).

Special Points.

1. David was a great king (1 Chron. xiv. 17), with a vast army of valiant soldiers (2 Sam. xxiv. 9; xxiii. 19-39). Loving friends and devoted courtiers (1 Kings v. 1), a wide home circle and a splendid palace, wealth in abundance, everything earth could give him for happiness, and still he wrote Psa. xxxii. 3, 4. Why? Because there was unconfessed, unforgiven sin on his soul, and he stood condemned before God (Psa. xxxviii. 3).

2. Even the brave King David was made a coward by sin; he feared men, loathed himself, and shunned God. Only by public acknowledgment could he undo any of the mischief and proclaim God's mercy for the help of others.

3. The leper can clothe himself in fair linen, but cannot cure his disease. The bitten Israelite could hide under the rocks, but only by using God's appointed means could he be cured.

S.S. Lesson Illustrations.

COVERED BY GOD'S LOVE.

When children are playing at the seaside they often draw pictures on the sands, which do not come up to the expectations of the little folk. They try hard to smooth the sands, and use every effort to make the designs more pleasing. After repeated attempts, the children are usually compelled to abandon the pictures and begin again at a fresh place. The defects, in fact, are never remedied until the tide returns and washes over the whole of the beach. In just the same way we endeavour, in our own strength, to write upon the sands of time. We make mistakes and find it impossible to correct our designs. It is only when the sea of God's love covers our futile efforts that our lives are smoothed and made fit for the Divine impression. Blessed is the man whose sin is covered (Golden Text).

AN INCENTIVE TO BRAVERY.

It is said that with a certain American regiment the name of a field in Mexico was used in the Civil War as a battle-cry. At that place the regiment had previously disgraced itself, and the men, fired with the thought of what had happened, determined to prove their bravery and burn out the old shame in deeds of heroic valour. In the case of David, the remembrance of his sin and the joy of God's forgiveness filled his heart with gratitude and love. When David said: "I confess my transgressions unto the Lord," then He forgave the iniquity of the sin (v. 5). We who have been forgiven much should love much, and prove, by the consecration of our lives to His service, that our penitence and devotion are sincere.

PUT YOUR TRUST IN GOD.

A lady who was once crossing a Scottish loch feared greatly, lest a storm should arise and jeopardize the safety of the boat. She turned to the boatman in her distress and asked him if she could put her trust in him for the voyage. He looked at the lady and replied, "No ma'am, don't put your trust in me; put your trust in God. The passenger feared, and asked if there was real danger; whereas the boatman meant that at all times trust should be reposed in the Master of the storms. David found that "he that trusteth in the Lord, mercy shall compass him about" (v. 10).

Personalia.

In the account of the missionary family, which appeared in last week's issue, the father should have been described as Rev. Jeremiah Peill, not Dr. Peill.

Our readers will be sorry to hear that Mr. Josiah Nix broke down in health during his mission at the Central Hall, Manchester. He preached with power three times on the 27th ult., but was so ill on Monday that a Manchester doctor ordered him home at once to Oxford, where he still lies ill.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes is leaving England on Friday next for Mussoorie, N.W.P., to undertake the pastorate of the Union Church there. He hopes to begin his ministry on November 8, and is looking forward to a winter's work among the educated natives. He will be glad of the prayers of all well-wishers of India.

Rev. E. S. Ufford, author and composer of "Throw Out the Life Line," is staying for a time in this country. At the noon meeting at Aldersgate Street, he told the story of the making of the well-known hymn. He hopes to have opportunities of singing and speaking, and may be addressed, care of the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate Street, E.C.

Mr. Wm. Quarrier was stricken down by paralysis last Sabbath midnight, and has since been lying in an unconscious condition. His wife and the members of their family are at his bedside day and night. Friends are asked to pray that (if it is God's will) this most valuable life may be spared a little longer to the great work God has given him to do, and to the family who love him so well.

Mr. Charles Inglis left England on Wednesday last, by the Teutonic, for the United States. His concluding mission at home, at Hitchin, proved a source of great blessing; the solemn, searching addresses on Sin and Resisting the Holy Spirit, producing conviction in the hearts of not a few. Mr. Inglis is now on his way to America for the twenty-eighth time; he is looking forward to a winter of great blessing, and begins work in Tremont Temple, Boston. The Lord wondrously used his word there last spring. We are sure that many of our readers will follow Mr. Inglis with prayerful interest.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

WISHAW.

THE concluding meetings of Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones at Wishaw were marked by a steady increase of interest. A correspondent writes: "The close was magnificent." The Wishaw Press says:— e

"That there has been no falling off in th attendances during the second week of Dr. Henry's temperance meetings, is not only a testimony to the magnetic eloquence of the lecturer and the sweet singing of his colleague, but shows the wisdom of the Temperance Council in arranging for a whole fortnight's mission, more especially as the results have been in proportion to the duration of the series of meetings.

"Two of the best gatherings of the series were held on the Sabbath. In the afternoon, at the meeting for women only, the hall was almost completely filled, and there was an equally large attendance in the evening at the men's meeting. At night Dr. Henry's remarks were addressed chiefly to young men, and perhaps on no previous occasion has so vast a male audience in Wishaw had the truth so plainly and so forcibly brought home to them as on that evening. Dr. Henry pointed to the degrading evidences everywhere of the moral and spiritual as well as the physical degeneracy of the young men in the nation, and emphasized the fact that drink was chiefly and primarily responsible for their slaughter. After enlarging on this head, the lecturer dealt in turn with gambling, impurity, infidelity, and religious indifference, and presented as a cure for them all faith in Jesus Christ."

The total number of pledges taken was considerably over 1,400.

CRIEFF.

Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones began a week's mission in the town of Crieff last Sabbath. Unfortunately the weather was most disagreeable, rain falling in torrents during the greater part of the day. This doubtless militated somewhat against the attendance at the forenoon and afternoon meetings. In the forenoon Dr. Henry occupied the pulpit of the North U.F. Church. In the afternoon he addressed a meeting for men only in the Parish Church Hall, and in the evening he occupied the pulpit of the Parish Church. Fortunately the rain had ceased by the evening, and as a result there was a very large congregation.

Reports had reached Crieff of the great work that Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones had been accomplishing in other places, and sanguine expectations had been formed. It is no exaggeration to say, however, that these expectations have been more than realised already. Of Dr. Henry's eloquence it is impossible to write too highly. A more masterly treatment of the subject of Total Abstinence it would be impossible to conceive than that which he gave last Sabbath evening. He chose as his text several passages of Scripture: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness." "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." "Thy Kingdom come." "We are labourers together with God." "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess, but be ye filled with the Spirit." His exposition of these passages was simply a masterpiece. For fully an hour the large congregation literally hung upon his lips.

The whole address was closely reasoned out, from beginning to end, and the hush that at times passed over the audience clearly showed that he was carrying conviction to many hearts. At the close of the service, the one opinion expressed on all hands was that a more forcible plea for total abstinence was never heard in Crieff. Dr. Henry speaks every evening this week in the South U.F. Church, and much good is confidently anticipated from these addresses.

Dr. Henry is sincerely to be congratulated in having as his colleague, Mr. Armon Jones, the brilliant Welsh singer. A more valuable colleague it would be impossible to hear; indeed, his singing in itself is quite sufficient to attract large audiences. His rendering of "I shall know Him by the print of the nails in His hands" held the whole audience spellbound. Mr. Jones more than deserves the great fame he has attained. Any community is indeed fortunate which secures the services of two such men as Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones.

Missions to Hop-Pickers.

KENT.

WE have had another busy season in the hop-fields of Kent, ministering to the bodily and spiritual wants of the pickers. Mr. J. W. C. Fegan's Medical Mission consists of fifteen workers, including doctors, sisters, nurses, evangelists, and helpers.

This year the mission lasted as usual about a month, and hundreds heard the Gospel in the tents, as well as outside in the hop-fields while picking at their bins; thousands of books and 1,300 cases were medically dealt with, while visits were paid to sufferers who were too weak to attend the hospital tents. Several deaths occurred as well as births, and many severe accidents were attended to.

During the storm that raged a few weeks ago nineteen tents, on one farm alone, were blown down, and their occupants driven out to face the elements wrapped in blankets and rugs. It was a most pitiable sight to see the children in their distress being hurried into an adjoining barn to await the day-dawn. The missionaries worked with a will, though they were thoroughly drenched in seeking to do all they possibly could for the comfort of the unfortunate people.

Any who wish to see what drink and sin in their various forms have done, need only visit the hop-fields, and especially the quarters of the "slum and alley" people. It is computed that there were at least 40,000 hop-pickers in Kent alone. In many instances they live, or rather, huddle together in barns, stables, or old army tents. Many have spoken with deep gratitude of the kindness shown by the workers, and for the medicine and medical treatment.

HEREFORD AND WORCESTER.

For the twenty-first season Mr. John Jones and myself have had the privilege of visiting the hop-yards of Herefordshire and Worcestershire. It has been heavy work tramping through mud and mire over 300 miles of rough ground; but by persevering toil we have thus reached 117 different hop-yards, going from crib to crib with heavy packs of tracts and books. In the yards and at the farms we have given 134 short, pointed Gospel addresses, thus preaching to many thousands of strangers and natives, not forgetting hundreds of gipsies. Again and again we were welcomed by old friends as the only visitors during the picking, so that with all that is done, there is no danger of overlapping. The larger books, &c., were eagerly received and carefully put away for the home-going, and if one person was missed they were sure to let us know. We have planted and watered; God will give the increase.

Obituary.

COLONEL J. W. F. SANDWITH.

A BAND of officers gradually becoming extinct is that of the Honourable East India Company, and in the death of Colonel John William Fleming Sandwith, another of its few survivors has passed away, at the age of eighty-three. In 1839 he made his first voyage in a sailing ship to join the 106th Bombay Regiment, and he used to tell how on this voyage round the Cape they met whalers to whom the news of Queen Victoria's accession was still unknown. He took part in numerous sieges and captures during the Indian mutiny and other risings. For these services he was given a brevet majority, and afterwards held various staff appointments until he was obliged by ill-health to retire from the Indian Army in 1867. His energy then found scope in England by acting as honorary secretary to various charitable societies, and especially in developing the Army Scripture Readers and Soldiers' Friend Society, a cause he had at heart until the day of his death.

MR. ALEXANDER NICHOLSON.

At the age of sixty-nine, Mr. Alexander Nicholson, of Bowes Park, N., and formerly of Bournemouth and Forest Gate, passed to his rest on October 9.

From his boyhood Mr. Nicholson had been an earnest Christian worker. He was one of the founders of Bow Common Mission, E., now a Wesleyan centre, and on removing from that district to Old Ford, E., he took active part in forming a new cause at Bow Chapel, where a splendid work eventually resulted. There he was Sunday-school superintendent, class-leader, and steward. Later he toiled devoutly at Bignold Hall, Forest Gate. On retiring from business he settled at Bournemouth, but suffering from a painful complaint he had to devote his time less to speaking and organizing, and more to helping the cause of Christ by writing and by gifts of money and literature. On the morning of the day on which the home-call came, he sent several remittances to Christian workers. Nothing delighted him more than to entertain those who could devote their whole time to the Lord's work, especially if they were poor in this world's goods. He had only lately returned to London—a step which he took in order to be nearer to his many friends and the centre of things. One of his greatest joys was to attend the noon-day meeting at Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. About a year ago he joined the Church meeting at the Gospel Hall, Wood Green, N. The good he did so quietly for nearly the whole of his life cannot be estimated.

London Prayer Unions.

THE London Prayer Unions, now federated in one, held a combined meeting on Thursday last at the Merchants' Hall, St. Mary Axe, E.C., when about two hundred business men met at the instance of Mr. Albert Head, president of the Insurance and Shipping Prayer Union.

In a few wise words Mr. Head counselled those present to "strengthen each other to practice what they pray." He told how he himself had been led to Christ during the Moody and Sankey mission thirty years ago, and urged upon them the daily study of the Word of God as an antidote to the temptations and perplexities of business life, without which they must drift as a mariner without chart or compass.

A searching and practical address followed from Rev. W. R. Mowll, who, in his own attractive style, spoke from the words:— "Watch ye; stand fast in the faith; quit you like men; be strong" (1 Cor. xvi. 13). These phrases he directed respectively against prevalent indifference, instability, indecision, and inability. It was a masterly appeal, charged with homely illustrations, which could not fail to produce a deep impression.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

A Fruitful Mission at Willington.

AT Willington, in the county of Durham, a glorious work of revival has broken out in a mission conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Albert Harrison, under the auspices of the Methodist New Connexion.

During the ten days of the mission no fewer than 122 souls decided. The old-fashioned method of inviting the people to come out to the communion rail was adopted. As a result of the services "much people was added unto the Lord." On the second Saturday night, after a musical service in the chapel, a crowd of friends rallied in the streets at ten o'clock, to gather in the frequenters of the public-houses for a midnight mission. Some 600 or 700 Christians assembled and sang the praises of God, and hundreds of people left the public-houses to see what was the matter. One publican at least, complained that his house was emptied, the men leaving in a body, and not another pint of beer being drawn that night. An immense throng gathered in the chapel at 11 p.m., and until half-past twelve a remarkable service was held. In the memory of the oldest Christian present, no such meeting had ever been held in Willington. About fifty men under the influence of drink were present, and several of them sought Christ. What a time it was! God was mightily present. The old hymns were in evidence, and the whole congregation seemed to be lifted on a wave of holy song.

At another service, following a public tea, Mrs. Harrison preached effectively, and many more precious souls were blessed. All the churches helped, and a great victory was given. The evangelists, in season and out of season, were found doing their Master's work. (Rev.) G. Coates.

Rev. T. Connellan in Glasgow.

When Rev. Thos. Connellan was in Glasgow last March, many of those who attended his meetings expressed a desire that halls should be secured in districts of the city where Roman Catholics, who are mostly Irish, would be likely to attend. This has been done by the Scottish Protestant Alliance, and from the 4th to the 11th of October Mr. Connellan addressed meetings in such places as the Tent Hall, near the Salt Market, Bethany Hall, Bridgton Public Hall, and other places, all in the slums of the great city on the Clyde. Except on Tuesday night, when there was a deluge of rain, the meetings were all crowded. A good sprinkling of Roman Catholics were always present, and there was no disorder of any kind. At one meeting the preacher had the pleasure of shaking hands with fourteen converts. At another about a dozen came forward to tell how the Gospel had made them free. Christians who are accustomed to experience great trouble from Roman Catholics at Protestant meetings, have looked on with great interest, and no doubt have learned some lessons.

No doubt a great work has been inaugurated, for several of the converts from Rome have already commenced to labour as evangelists among their brethren. At a drawing-room meeting held at Bridge of Allan on Wednesday afternoon, Mr. Connellan gave interesting accounts of his work.

Revival at Uckfield.

The remarkable two months' tent mission held by Mr. J. W. C. Fegan in Uckfield was brought to a close by a great farewell meeting on Monday, October 5.

In spite of the adverse weather (which culminated in a gale which wrecked the great tent for the second time the day after the mission was over) the interest continued to increase till the last. People came to share in the blessing from miles round. Following the spirit of conviction and true repentance, a wave of blessing has passed over the whole neighbourhood. The fearless exposure of sin and warning of coming judgment were more than some could endure. Like one of old they were "sad at that saying and went away grieved," but many others—saved and unsaved—bowed to God's message, and then came "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

Night after night towards the close of the mission the joy of harvest repaid the weeks of faithful labour in ploughing and sowing. Among the many features which evidenced the seal of God's approval are counted: The grateful acknowledgment of so many of the Lord's people that they had been helped to a deeper sense of the reality of a Christian life and a closer walk with God; the knitting together of those who had held aloof from one another through sectarian differences; the clear answers vouchsafed to requests for prayer for the conversion of some whose cases presented peculiar difficulties; the number of husbands and wives brought to the Saviour's feet; and the determination of those who had been blessed, that the work should be continued by united evangelistic services on Sundays, and meetings for the deepening of spiritual life on Wednesdays, in the Public Hall.

A Church Army Mission.

Captain Hanson, the prison missioner of the Church Army, has concluded a ten days' mission in connection with the C.A. branch of the parish church of Blackburn. A large tent capable of holding nearly 700 people was erected upon some land kindly lent by the Corporation in the heart of the slum district of the town. Almost within a stone's throw is the town's largest model lodging-house, and men from this place and the surrounding lodging-houses listened with rapt attention to the story of Christ's redeeming love. Gospel meetings were held nightly, and on Sundays an additional service was held in the afternoon. There were two special meetings for women; one was addressed by Miss Kitchener (cousin of Lord Kitchener and niece of Bishop Thornton, vicar of the parish), and the other by Mrs. Hanson, wife of the missioner. The tent was well filled on both occasions. On Friday night there was a service for men. The story of Jesus and His love was sufficient to draw a crowd which filled the tent to its utmost seating capacity. There was also a service for children.

On the last Saturday night two meetings were held. The first closed at 9.30, after which the workers gathered for prayer. At ten o'clock they went into the streets to invite the very worst men and women they could find to a meeting at 10.30. At this hour over five hundred people met together. The gathering was a remarkable one. Many of those present were of the very lowest and degraded character. Numbers were under the influence of drink, and interruptions were frequent, but God wonderfully blessed the meeting, for about twelve signified their desire to serve the Lord Jesus Christ.

The mission has been much blessed of God. To Him be all the praise and glory! One bright feature of the mission has been the interest taken in it by the vicar, and his curates, Revs. F. L. Parkyn and Elliker. Captain Cottle, who is in charge of the local branch of the Church Army, and his noble band of open-air workers, laboured indefatigably. C.

Work in Glasgow.

The tent mission at St. George's Cross is proving productive of result, surpassing anything that has been seen for some seasons, and very naturally the workers are greatly encouraged and uplifted in heart over God's dealings in grace with so many men and women and young people.

Mr. Richard Hill, the veteran evangelist, has been the preacher for the last fortnight, and, as his ministry has always a "good ring" about it, the Spirit of God has been able to make use of his ministry for the enlightenment and salvation of precious souls. On each Monday night there has been a specially-organized open-air procession with some of the workers carrying lighted torches; and accompanied with a brass band, the district has been made to know of the existence of the special mission. By the time this appears in print the tent will have been pulled down, to the regret of many, to whom it has been as the house of God and the gate of heaven.

Mr. W. D. Dunn is conducting a mission in Cranstonhill, and under his fervent preaching and interesting presentation of the Gospel, interest is being awakened and souls are being saved. Mr. Hugh McCallum sings the "Old, old story" each evening, and is much appreciated. J. C.

In Welsh Villages.

Mr. John Bollard, of Liverpool, has lately been conducting missions in Welsh villages. While the season has not been the most favourable for preaching under canvas, on account of the wet weather, yet it has been surprising how well the people have attended the meetings night by night. The tent was first pitched at Llanymynech, where from the commencement the power of God was made manifest. Large numbers gathered to hear the preaching of the Word, and on each Lord's Day and towards the close the tent could not contain them. Many have professed conversion.

We had to remove rather abruptly, but the way was immediately opened to pitch the tent at Llandrinio, another village two miles beyond Llanymynech. Here, also, God graciously blessed. Regardless of very inclement weather, the tent has been well filled each night, and on Lord's Day evenings many had to go away, unable to get in. All classes have attended—publicans, brewers, and even gipsies, many of whom have never been known to enter a place of worship. Having decided to finish the work for this season, we had our farewell meeting on September 16, when a good company met together. A Christian farmer, at the request of the people, subsequently waited upon Mr. Bollard, and asked him to continue meetings, in the village hall, and the evangelist will accordingly stay and continue to preach the Gospel. J. K. Heath.

In Hyde Park, W.

The annual meeting in connection with the open-air Gospel services held in Hyde Park, near Marble Arch, was held at Stafford Rooms, Tichborne Street, Edgware Road, on Thursday last. A large number of converts and friends attended. Mr. William Davis, who presided, spoke of the Lord's dealing with many who were present. Mr. G. Williams spoke of the many who by God's grace have been converted—some of them seven years ago, and others during the past season. Helpful words were given by Mr. Charles Cook, Mr. Holness, Mr. Shorey, and Mr. St. John. The meeting was a most blessed one. Many of those who had decided for Christ in Hyde Park rose and gave their testimony. "To God be the glory; great things hath He done."

Rev. James Sprunt at Cork.

Rev. James Sprunt has just conducted six days' special mission in the Baptist Chapel. Though the weather was unpropitious, the attendance increased. Mr. Sprunt is doubly gifted. Possessed of a clear voice, his attractive singing of solos appeals to all who have an ear for music, and is only second in importance to his lucid preaching of the Gospel. Mr. Sprunt's comments upon the passages of Scripture read, were particularly helpful to Christians. His sound evangelical teaching upon Second Advent truths was much appreciated. A good many remained for conversation with the evangelist. The short mission was quite free from sensational methods of revival; but the Gospel of our Lord's death, resurrection, and return was preached in the power of the Holy Spirit and with the blessing of God.

Jas. W. Pearce, Pastor.

Mr. E. J. Beaumont writes:—"God has worked in power at Peckham Park Mission, S.E. Quite a number of cases of blessing have cheered us during the month."

A large number of theatrical employés accepted Mr. William Forbes' invitation to tea a few days ago at Bloomsbury Chapel. Captain Woodward sent New Testaments and picture texts for the guests.

Mr. A. R. Sidders has recently closed a six weeks' open-air mission in Sheerness and neighbourhood, during which time many hundreds heard the Word of Life. There was some opposition, but, we thank God, many inquiries after the way of salvation.

H. Ashenden.

Mr. Ernest Luce has held an eleven-days' mission at Watford, in the Tabernacle (Pastor G. W. Thomas). The afternoon Bible lectures were much appreciated, and the young people's meetings were well attended. Awakening addresses were given, and an excellent choir rendered useful service.

Good work has been done in the neighbourhood of Westcliff-on-Sea by the Open-Air Mission through its worker, Mr. John Hemo. Scripture portions have been distributed broadcast, and the Gospel preached in many of the villages. Best of all, we have been informed of conversions resulting from the mission.

(Pastor) Arthur C. Sidey.

Despite the inclement weather we have had deeply interesting meetings at Shoreditch Tabernacle. Sunday last was a memorable day for the large audiences that assembled, as also Monday last. I closed the Mission with my dear friend, Mr. Cuff, on Thursday, 15th, when I gave (D.V.) a lecture to men only, on "The Curse of Manhood," at 8 o'clock. My Reading campaign begins Sunday next, the 18th, and continues for ten days. Henry Varley.

A most encouraging mission has been conducted by Mr. Musa Bhai, at Rotherham. All the meetings were well attended, especially by non-church goers. God was indeed in our midst. Christians were strengthened, and over seventy persons were brought to a saving knowledge of the truth. These were passed on to various places of worship. Later, the converts and friends met in the Assembly Hall, when Rev. D. Banks and others gave addresses.

Mr. Tennyson Smith has concluded a successful temperance mission at Stewarton, Scotland. The Parish Church was granted for the Sunday evening meeting, and Mr. Tennyson Smith preached a temperance sermon from the text, "The Son of God was manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil." The service was a very solemn one. At the close of the sermon the missioner made an appeal to Christians to join the ranks of total abstainers. A large number of persons did so. The Press speaks of the Mission as a "memorable" one.

At Blackwood, a populous and yet pleasant district of Monmouthshire, some workers have been led to attempt to reach those who attend no place of worship. Each Lord's Day night, after other meetings are over, People's Services are held, and among the attractions which God is blessing, is a large band composed of earnest Christian men, accomplished musicians, who lead the service of song. Good results are prayed for, toiled after, and expected.

Devoir Thomas, Secretary.

At Harmony Hall, Govan, as a fitting close to the special effort in the Gospel Tent (where God wonderfully blessed the preaching of Mr. W. D. Dunn and Mr. J. J. Sims), the workers met a few days ago for a social meeting, when there were present about fifty young converts, being part of the fruit of the effort. There were some bright testimonies given to the saving and keeping power of Christ, an encouraging address was given by Mr. James Duncan, and Mr. George H. Cooke spoke helpful words to the converts on Acts xx. 32. G. H.

Mr. George Nokes was the chief speaker at the harvest festival meetings at the Foresters' Music Hall, E. This undenominational festival was inaugurated forty-four years ago by Lord Shaftesbury, and was held for many years at the Pavilion Theatre. The Daily Telegraph says: "The lads of Hoxton, collarless and unwashed, filled the galleries, but the homely, practical words of Mr. Nokes at once caught their attention, and they listened in silence to the address which, as he said, he was giving as a brother to brothers. Mr. John Pearce, who occupied the chair, expressed his sympathy with the good work, and for the encouragement of the lads he told them how he began life, the son of a poor woman of Hoxton, in which district he lived till he was twenty years of age. Whatever success he had obtained in life he owed, first, to the influence of his mother, and secondly, to the religious services in the East-end theatres and music-halls."

Many persons in the populous but scattered district of West Thurrock, near Grays, have received blessing through the preaching of Mr. William Grove, who has just concluded a mission in the capacious hall locally associated with the name of Mr. William Vellacott. With characteristic Christian enterprise, Mr. Grove and fellow-workers held ten-minute open-air services at various points in the neighbourhood prior to the evening service, with the result that the building was crowded. There was no outward excitement, but a stirring up from within. The Holy Spirit was manifestly present, and several hearers professed conversion at the close of the service. In his concluding discourse, the preacher spoke with great earnestness, not only exhorting the unsaved to accept the one that receiveth sinners, but to make a public confession of their faith in Christ. Mr. Grove hopes to take up mission work in other needy Essex villages. A. D.

Shoreditch Christian Mission.—The annual report of the Shoreditch Christian Mission tells of much distress consequent on prevailing poverty. Seven meetings are held weekly, while each day the rooms are the resort of those in search of help or comfort in their troubles. A friendly hand is held out to all comers, and numerous instances are quoted of persons being benefited materially and spiritually. A visitor who addressed twenty-two boys one evening found eight of them remaining afterwards for private conversation, and it is believed that several then and there decided for Christ. Miss Annie S. Catlin (secretary) may be addressed at 24, Charles Square, Hoxton, N.

About Books.

UNBELIEVING CRITICISM.

Are the Critics Right? is the title of a capital book issued by the Religious Tract Society (2s. 6d.). It consists of Historical and Critical Considerations against the Graf-Wellhausen Hypothesis regarding the Pentateuch, and has been translated by Rev. C. H. Irwin, M.A., from the German of Wilhelm Möller. At the outset, one is interested in the work by reason of the fact that the author was formerly a follower of the views and theories that he now combats; and that Professor Dr. C. von Orelli, of Basle, has written a commendatory introduction justifying hearty confidence in Möller's ability and good faith. Like many others, as a young man the author found honest investigation discouraged by university professors, and he was content to know the opponents of criticism as perversely depicted in polemical writings. At length he was enabled to "hear the other side," with results that have been helpful both to knowledge and faith. Hence this book, which has already been translated into Danish and Norwegian. From beginning to end its pages are argumentative, and the letters JE, D, and PC are everywhere dotted about the chapters. To many the book will be hardly readable, but to those who are tempted to entertain the conclusions of the critics it may be cordially recommended, also to such as would intelligently estimate the situation or do something to counteract prevalent error and confusion regarding Old Testament history.

"The Anti-Electricians": A Parable illustrating how inspiration is treated. By Ada R. Habershon. (7½d. per dozen, post free. A. Holness.) As men who know nothing of electricity have called in question its reality, so such as have no knowledge of Scripture or experimental religion cavil at Bible teaching regarding inspiration. This is a powerful booklet, and interesting as well, from beginning to end.

Recent tragic events in Servia lend special interest to Belgrade, the White City of Death, being the History of King Alexander and Queen Draga, by Mrs. Northesk Wilson. (10s. 6d. net. R. A. Everett & Co.) The dark black tale, so frankly told, bears eloquent witness to the need for the restraining grace of God in public and private life. Folk-lore and illustrations make the book attractive to any who are interested in Servia.

Charles G. Finney: An Autobiography. Popular edition. (2s. 6d. Salvation Army Book Department.) This narrative, presenting memories and heart-yearnings of a veteran pastor possessed of a passion for winning souls, has been out of print for some time. In re-issuing it, the Salvation Army is doing a distinct service to the cause of evangelization. The low price should help the circulation of the book, which we heartily commend to the prayerful attention of earnest workers along all lines of Christian service.

Under the Shadow of Durgamma (2s. London Missionary Society, 30, Gray's Inn Road, W.C.) presents in the form of an interesting narrative some aspects of Hindu life, and of the difficulties and struggles through which converts to Christianity have to pass. The writer is Miss Beatrice M. Harband, from New Zealand, a missionary of the above society. Her story has the warm colouring of real life, and is based on facts and observations which came under her experience while stationed at Bellary, S. India. The book is written with the aim of stimulating missionary interest, and will not disappoint the reader.

The second volume of The Sermon on the Mount supplies "a Practical Exposition of the Lord's Prayer," forming a course of profitable and devotional reading for the family circle. Twelve discourses being by Rev. E. Griffith-Jones, there is more continuity of treatment than in the volume noticed in a recent issue. Rev. J. G. Greenhough supplies three chapters and Principal Forsyth two, while Rev. Frank Ballard, Principal Stewart (St. Andrews), and Rev. W. B. Selbie have also contributed. The first volume of the series (though last in order of publication) represents work by Revs. T. G. Selby, Dr. Townsend, Dr. Rowland, and George Milligan, in addition to the foregoing. There is good evidence that the authors know the ground, and that they are intimately acquainted with the needs of human hearts and lives. Earnest seekers and devout readers will not come here in vain. They are in the hands of sympathetic teachers who have themselves learned much in the school of experience. Additional interest attaches to several topics which are twice dealt with, the writers viewing them from different standpoints. Numerous "side-lights" are shed on a subject which is near and dear to the heart of every believer. (4s. 6d. each. James Robinson, Manchester),

Visiting Jews in East London.

IN the parish of St. Matthias, Bethnal Green, hundreds of Jews congregate, and are of the poorest class. Miss H. M. Codrington, who devotes herself to the visitation of their homes, reports that many listen with great interest and attention to the reading of the New Testament, and accept copies with much readiness, while some are prepared to pay for them.

"They are very ignorant even of their Old Testament. Few possess it, and often ask us to give them a copy. We are anxious to give them God's precious Word. Sixpence buys a Yiddish New Testament; 2s. 6d. a Yiddish Old Testament; and 1s. 5d. the Old Testament in English. We long to be able to satisfy the hunger for God's Word among them. There is another thing that would be a great help to us in our work among these poor Jews. The children beg for wool with which to knit cuffs, comforters, &c., as their parents are too poor to buy. Such employment would be a blessing to them, otherwise they spend their time playing and quarrelling on the streets." Miss Codrington's address is 5, Nichols Square, Hackney Road, N.E.

Women's Work in India.—The 1903 volume of THE ZENANA throws light on many phases of missionary effort among India's women. As a record of triumphs of the Gospel in the zenanas of our great Eastern Dependency, it will be read with a deep sense of thanksgiving to the Lord of the harvest who has so abundantly owned the efforts of His servants in this portion of the mission field. The book is well bound and fully illustrated, and may be had (2s. 6d.) from the office of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, 2, Adelphi Terrace, W.C.

The Fisk Jubilee Singers.—By reason of the ill-health of Mr. Loudin, the large company of above useful singers has been for the present disbanded. Meanwhile two of them, Messrs. W. W. Goodrich and W. M. Earley are doing good work in evangelistic services in London. They are at present helping Mr. Charles Cook at the Metropolitan Theatre, where on the opening night they sang to an audience which filled the huge building, with much acceptance. At the close of a solemn address on "The Consequence of Sin," on Sunday last, they sang most appropriately, "My God what a morning, When the stars are falling." They are engaged at Rotherhithe Free Church on the Sundays in November, and go to Edinburgh for six weeks on December 20. Meanwhile they have their week nights free. They can be addressed 27, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Blindness and Acute Suffering.

An Old Man, 74 years of age, blind through cancer in the eyes, which is now spreading all over the face. In addition to this sad affliction he is also suffering from an internal disease. He and his aged wife are greatly in need of assistance, as apart from the little their married children are able to give them they have nothing at all to depend on except charity. Who will help to make their old age free from anxiety? Surely pain and blindness are terrible enough without poverty.

The National Blind Relief Society.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Hon. Sec., Rev. J. PULLEIN THOMPSON, The Vicarage, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W.; or at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

THE RAILWAY MISSION
. . AND ITS . .
CONVALESCENT HOMES.

ABOUT 15,000 RAILWAY MEN are injured every year in the United Kingdom by accidents on the line.

Many of these men suffer amputation of one or more limbs, and after discharge from Hospital require nourishing food and fresh air to restore their strength.

THE RAILWAY MISSION CONVALESCENT HOMES at St. Leonard's and Southport provide for the men in their time of weakness.

The Homes urgently need funds. Contributions will be gratefully received by Richard Nixon, Secretary, 1, Adam Street, Strand, London, W.C., who will send collecting boxes in which thank-offerings for journeying mercies may be put for the Homes.

"The Christian" Almanac. As a supplement to next issue, our readers will be presented with The Christian Sheet Almanac for 1904. Looking regularly for a message from Scripture presented in this fashion, many have in past days rejoiced in the light and help received. We render thanks to God for the wide circle by whom prayer is made on our behalf, and feel that this bond of union is much stronger because of the daily link through the Word of God itself.

Home Bible Classes. A very useful service in a quiet way can be rendered on a Sunday afternoon by gathering in young people of the "better class" for Bible study and spiritual instruction. Of course, care is needed not to draw away those who attend Sunday-school, but there are many who have already left, as well as others whose parents, for some reason, do not wish them to attend that means of grace, but who have no objection to their attending a class at a private house. This is a rich and fruitful sphere of service.

Lovers of Pleasure. Speaking recently at a meeting in support of Home Mission Work in the diocese of Manchester, the Bishop of Burnley said some strong things in regard to the "pleasure-loving people" who leave the places in which they had made their wealth to poverty, wickedness, and suffering. Similar protests have been made before, in respect of other commercial centres, but the Bishop struck a new note in calling attention to the great difficulties in getting ladies to devote themselves to Christian service:—

> This did not apply so much to the northern as to the southern part of the diocese, where they found, with the growing wealth, a rapid departure of the rich from the cities to the places of amusement and pleasure; and there seemed to come over the lives of their young men and young women a hunger and thirst for nothing but pleasure, the joys of this world, and self-satisfaction.

This decadence of English womanhood is a very grave and disquieting sign of the times, for in the history of religious progress in these islands women have taken an active and a foremost part. In those who will be mothers of the next generation of the British race, anything tending to worldliness and selfishness must have a far-reaching injurious effect, and it is quite time for vigorous protest and earnest appeal.

Missions and "Criticism." The glowing address by Dr. Horton on the Church and Missions, of which we gave a résumé last week, has provoked certain remarks which need frankly facing, inasmuch as they touch the quick of the question. The need for new missionary enthusiasm is admitted. It is a commonplace that the Church's chief work is missionary. It is a sad fact, however, that interest in "foreign work" is largely spasmodic, and needs continual stimulus. One cause assigned for the lack of interest is that "Criticism" tends to paralyse action, until it has been fully ventilated, and its true significance gauged; and it is asserted that when the critics have done their work, a new enthusiasm for missions will result. We doubt it. The Higher Criticism tends to eliminate the supernatural, and, by a study of Comparative Religion, to place the faith of Christ in a common category. How can this generate enthusiasm for the Faith that brooks no rival, and that alone professes to be the supreme Revelation of God?

Expansion or Shrinkage. Not in ways like these can the Gospel be propagated; indeed, there would be little left to propagate, by the time some men had done with it. The Apostles won their victories by insisting upon the uniqueness of the Gospel. Neither "Criticism" nor "Comparative Religion" can alter this fact, that the Gospel alone offers full redemption to men; and the preachers of that Gospel, at home and abroad, are only successful when they arm themselves with this fact, and attack, not men's tastes, but their consciences. It is there where the work is done. A man cannot reach another conscience until his own conscience has been mastered by the Gospel message. The real reason of the lethargy existing towards Missions is a lack of full spiritual life. Vigorous life means expansion; the reverse leads to shrinkage.

The Early Triumphs of the Gospel. A very suggestive article by Professor Grützmacher, of Heidelberg, appears in the Expository Times, upon "The Secret of the Triumph of Christianity over the Ancient World." It is welcome, because it sets forth once more in a connected manner the simple facts of Christian conquest in the early centuries; and gives the historic lie to those unscrupulous Rationalists who distort Christian history. Candid men accept facts with all their consequences, even if doing so destroys their theories. Professor Grützmacher shows that the triumph of the Gospel over the ancient world was wholly due to its own power, and not to any accident of association. It is well to remind ourselves of this, and to re-affirm the truth for to-day, for too often timid hearts are tempted to rely upon association rather than upon the power of the pure truth itself. It is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, that wins Divine victories.

Sin and the Saviour. Dr. Howe in a paper on "The Fact of Sin," in the Homiletic Review, aptly quotes Dr. Maclaren's incisive saying:—

> Ninety per cent. of the doctrinal errors have grown up around defective views of sin.

Dr. Howe points out the degenerate modern tendency to deal with sin tolerantly and superficially as a cuticular disorder. The Bible never treats it so, or makes a protesting plea in its defence. Hence it is "the book of great penitents." All the modern theories break down in human experience. Progression and evolution cannot take the place given to our Redeemer in that cry from the depths, and from the heights: "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. vii. 24, 25). Renan himself said that the 19th century had thrown a great many things into the waste-paper basket that the 20th century would have to take out again. The fact that the Lord Jesus, in His life and death, was dealing with sin, is certainly one of them.

The Arbitration Treaty. The signing of the Arbitration Treaty between England and France is a welcome and practical outcome of the friendly feeling which has been growing between the two countries. Under the terms of the treaty, differences between the two nations, arising from commercial and political questions, are to be submitted to the arbitration of a third party. It will be noticed that those vital questions which concern the honour or independence of either State are excluded from the treaty. The gain is very little, but so far as it goes it establishes a principle which we may hope to see applied yet more widely. Italy also is signing an Arbitration Treaty with France. It would be an unspeakable relief to the whole civilized world if the principle of arbitration were completely accepted, and Europe relieved from the intolerable burden of militarism.

Christian Citizenship. Rev. F. B. Meyer's standard of citizenship, as stated in his recent appeal to his fellow Free Churchmen, is indeed a high and noble one; but it ought to be the normal one, and it doubtless would be, if numbers of Christian men and women were not quite apathetic in regard to such matters. Mr. Meyer says:—

> It is not sufficient to pray that God's Kingdom should come; we must help to bring it about.

If this practical part be taken, an intelligent interest in all that touches human life will develop, with the result that the pressing social problems of the housing of the poor, the power and danger of the drink trade, the purification of the streets, and others which bear no less injuriously upon moral and spiritual progress, will be solved at the hands of the followers of Christ. To bring to an end the autocratic reign of the brewer, the distiller, and the publican, and of that selfishness and greed which are at the root of the "overcrowding" evil, the Church of Christ must awake and arise.

Dens and Caves. The dismal fact that, at the present time, over one thousand of the population of a single London district, St. Pancras, are condemned to live in cellars, points to a condition of things of which the Metropolis may well be ashamed. Six hundred and forty of these underground holes have been reported upon as "practically irremediable," and a recent visitor to a number of them says:—

> The front apartment, into which daylight struggles by way of the area grating, is that in which the family live. The two rooms behind set aside for sleeping purposes are not blessed with daylight; but the little wash-house boasts of a window, overlooking a small backyard. On washing day, both the "living" room and the passage are obstructed with clothes hung up to dry. . . . No means of securing a free current of air are present in this depressing dwelling. . . . The children, the good wife says, "are often out of sorts." In short, all the laws of health are outraged, and it is no wonder that the death rate is abnormal.

"Smart Society." Not long ago the Bishop of Kensington declared that "Smart Society was rotten." Members of that same society are beginning to declare it themselves now. There are some of them who have the delicacy left to appreciate the difference between clean and unclean, and we heartily wish them well in their crusade against the sewer-like life which exhales its corrupt breath in the face of the public. The literary daughter of a duke, who is one of the leaders of the crusade, asks: "What excuse can be made for people, by birth gentlefolk, who allow stories and jokes to be circulated around the dinner table in whispers because they are too bad to be repeated aloud?" It is the old story—"pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness" (Ezek. xvi. 49) lead to uncleanness. It would seem as if we were developing at the two ends of the social scale, from two different causes, the same vices. But the root cause is the same in both—the banishment of God from life. If our philosophical agnostics would cease their guessing, and turn their attention to facts, they would understand that morality is impossible apart from God. Where God is ignored, every vice is free to flourish.

Lunacy in London. The recent report of the London County Council, so far as it deals with the alarming development of lunacy in London, is indeed a painful document, for it is admitted by those who are best able to judge, that drink and vice are the most potent causes of the terrible increase. Dr. Forbes Winslow has again commented upon the unpleasant fact that there is a greater proportion of insanity in London than in other places, and he has not hesitated to say that "drink stands out prominently as the chief cause for this dreadful state of affairs," adding that, "speaking generally, the children of drunken parents either become insane, or are affected with the same vice as their parents." More and more asylums are being provided and filled, and, in face of the dread fact and all the other shameful evidence against the drink trade, our leading statesmen continue to renew their promises of compensation to the brewer and publican.

Ridiculous Penalties. It would be a great gain to the community if the repeated urgent representations made by the Lord Mayor's Court and other courts to the Home Secretary, as to the utterly inadequate penalties passed upon bookmakers and betting men, bore some immediate fruit. The Lord Mayor had good reason recently to speak of the present fines as "ridiculous." What are a few pounds to men who can bleed their victims to the extent of hundreds of pounds? To impose a fine at all, is to admit an evil. A fine is supposed to help to remedy an evil. Then let the fines be raised to such an extent that they shall severely hit the professional betting men who are a plague in the streets in industrial centres. Until this is done we only play at justice.

An Inspiring Example. One of the most remarkable stories ever given to the world has just been published in the autobiography of Miss Helen Keller. When a child of under two years of age, she lost her sight and hearing, and these have never been restored to her. Yet to-day, at the age of twenty-three, she can speak French and German, in addition to her own language, and she possesses the knowledge common to young ladies of her station in life. All this she owes, under God, to the patience and genius of her teacher, the record of whose work is carefully preserved in the autobiography. The late Queen Victoria was greatly interested in this girl, and used to make inquiries about her. All who have ever heard of her case, are astonished at this triumph over apparently insuperable difficulties. The story will serve another purpose beyond that originally intended. It will show what can be done by perseverance in other directions. There are children in Sunday-schools and homes who are morally deficient, and apparently hopeless cases, who are sometimes given up in despair. The teachers of such may take heart by reading the narrative and learning its higher suggestions.

A Protest from Pusey. In very small type in its Answers to Correspondents, the Church Times makes an explanation which may be taken as a notable example of a distinction without a difference. It runs thus:—

INQUIRER.—The quotation made affords one of the most flagrant instances of misrepresentation which we have seen for a long time. Dr. Pusey did not say, "the Confessional is the most abundant means of leading souls to hell." What he did say, in connexion with the danger of giving indiscriminate absolution, and the failure to impress the penitent with a true sense of the nature of sin was, "This is one of the gravest faults of our day in the administration of the Sacrament of Penance. It is the road by which a number of Christians go down to hell."

Coming from Pusey, the statement, as given by our contemporary, is a noteworthy one, and in regard to its utterance Rome may well desire to be delivered from her friends.

Still a Mystery.

FOR two months the public have been in anxiety and her family in agony, on account of the mysterious disappearance of "the lady doctor," Miss Hickman. The discovery on Sunday afternoon of her body in the thick undergrowth of an enclosed plantation in Richmond Park, has sadly solved the question whether she were still alive, but the mystery of the means by which she came to her end awaits a possible solution at the inquest, which is taking place while this is being printed.

Her father, with whom and with his family the deepest sympathy is universally felt and expressed, has widely sent out earnest requests for prayer that the fate of his daughter might be made known, and this has been largely and tenderly responded to. On Sunday morning, at St. John's Church, Westminster, Archdeacon Wilberforce, speaking with more than usual pathos and emotion, told his congregation that some friends of Dr. Hickman (who herself had constantly worshipped there), had asked him to request on her behalf, and on that of her afflicted parents, prayer to God, that whether she were alive or dead, sick or well, the dreadful uncertainty that surrounded her complete disappearance might be removed, and her agonized parents' minds be set at rest as to her fate. The Archdeacon added his perfect certainty that in answer to effectual fervent and united prayer, the terrible mystery would at once be solved.

Then he proceeded with the prayer for Christ's Church Militant here on earth:—"And we most humbly beseech Thee of Thy goodness, O Lord, to comfort and succour all those who in this transitory life are in trouble, sorrow, need, sickness, or any other adversity." There followed a pause of several minutes, during which the congregation, in sympathy with their rector's pathetic words, knelt with bowed heads in silent prayer. The discovery made a few hours later, added the seal of answered prayer.

THE UNVEILING.

THE SEVEN TRUMPETS.

THE Seals, being broken, foretell, reveal, the course of events from the going forth of the Gospel to the end of the age.

The opened Seals do not express the infliction of judgment. They simply prophesy the things about to come to pass during the period which begins with Pentecost and continues until the coming of the Lord. Even the opening of the sixth Seal does not bring us to the infliction of God's wrath, but only to the terrified cry of the conscience-stricken dwellers on the earth.

The Gospel of peace brings not peace to the earth but a sword, as the Lord Jesus said, because it awakens the enmity of the spirit that worketh in the children of disobedience. It creates antagonisms in families, and war among the nations. Then war brings famine and famine brings pestilence, whether physical or spiritual. Those who have not received the word of the truth of the Gospel persecute the saints, whose souls cry to God from under the altar of sacrifice, as the blood of Abel cries to Him from the ground.

The Trumpets sound an alarm, a signal, and usher in a succession of judgments. The first four only affect the environment of men. They affect the earth we tread upon; the sea which divides and yet unites the nations; the rivers and fountains which figure the streams of human life; the heavenly bodies which give light and heat. Whereas the later three affect the person, the conscience, the soul and spirit, as well as the body, of men themselves. These are emphasized, by an eagle flying in the mid-heaven, as three Woes: (1) The judgment which every sin inflicts upon the sinner in his own person; (2) the judgment which God inflicts upon him in this life; (3) the final judgment represented by the Bowls, in which is filled up the wrath of God, against sinners who will not repent, but, while they gnaw their tongues for pain, blaspheme the God of Heaven.

SYMBOLS IN REVELATION VIII.

Silence in heaven about the space of half-an-hour. An hour is a circle, and like other whole periods would imply a complete process. Trace the hour in John's Gospel ii. 4; vii. 30; viii. 20; xii. 27; xiii. 1; xvi. 32; xvii. 1; xix. 27. This "hour" includes the time from our Lord's arrest to His ascension. The indefinite term "about half-an-hour" is appropriate to a solemn interval of silent waiting, before the trumpets, which are to usher in the judgments, are blown.

The seven angels who stand before God. Angels, messengers, ministers, who do His commandments, hearkening to the voice of His word (Psa. ciii. 20; cp. 1 Kings xviii. 1.

Seven Trumpets. On which the seven angels sound their signals of judgment (Exod. xix. 16; Joel ii. 1).

Another Angel. The Great Priest over the house of God (Heb. iv. 14; x. 21).

The Altar. The Altar of burnt offering, under which were seen the souls of them who were slain for the Word of God and for the testimony which they held (Rev. vi. 9-11).

Much incense given unto Him. The incense represents the worthiness, the fragrance, the delightfulness to God, of our High Priest. It was said to be given Him, because He had laid aside His Divine prerogative, and because all His life, from the Incarnation to the Resurrection, was by the Holy Spirit.

The Golden Altar before the Throne. The veil had been rent and God was seen in the vision as throned between the Cherubim above the Mercy-seat. Or as others think, "In place of the Ark of the Covenant we contemplate the throne of God."

Fire of the Altar cast upon the earth. The prayers of the saints are not for vengeance, but they are answered "by terrible things in righteousness by the God of our salvation" (Psa. lxv. 5; lxvi. 3, 5).

"Ye are Brethren:"

A Plea for Evangelical Unity.

By Rev. J. P. GLEDSTONE.

THE recent services at Tottenham Court Chapel, London, the chapel which George Whitefield founded in 1756, have caused me to read very carefully a good deal of the history of religion at that time; and one thing that has profoundly impressed me was the unity of the Evangelical forces. The men inside the Church of England and the men outside who held the Evangelical faith co-operated as they have never done since. Whitefield himself was on the most cordial terms of friendship with Nonconformists from the very beginning of his career, and thus gained for his influence and teaching a far wider range than Wesley did for his. Stress of circumstances made him a practical Nonconformist, and the same is true of Wesley and of Lady Huntingdon. Both Whitefield's chapels, the Tabernacle in Moorfields, and that in Tottenham Court Road, were registered as Independent chapels. Yet he never formally separated from the Established Church, neither was he cut off. The same was true of the other leaders.

The one commanding thought at that time was to WIN THE PEOPLE FOR CHRIST.

In that Whitefield would co-operate with anyone. And he had many who were like-minded.

Grimshaw, the vicar of Haworth, in Yorkshire, built a chapel for the Methodists in his own parish, and often preached in it. When Titus Knight, a collier, had been converted through the preaching of John Nelson, in Halifax, and had himself heard the inner call to preach, and had qualified himself by acquiring an exact knowledge of Greek, Latin, and Hebrew, he and a small number of poor folk wanted a small place in which to worship; and they appealed to Grimshaw for help, and he again to Lady Huntingdon, who complied with the request. Two cottages were made into one in Jail Lane, and the first Congregational Church in Halifax gathered in the building. This was the predecessor of Square Chapel, from which Mr. Jowett, of Birmingham, was sent into the ministry. Three of Knight's sons entered the ministry, two as Churchmen (one of these became vicar of Halifax), and one as a Nonconformist. Grimshaw frequently preached in Whitefield's chapels.

This new chapel (Square) also brought out the fraternal feeling of Mr. Venn, Vicar of Huddersfield, as the following facts show: "In the first page of his [i.e. Rev. Henry Venn's] controversy with Dr. Priestley, he thus expresses himself: 'I may affirm, that whoever is acquainted with the lives and labours of many Dissenting pastors, must either feel high veneration for their names, and rejoice in their successes; or be devoured by a preposterous, horrible bigotry to his own way.' He associated familiarly with Mr. Scott, a Congregational tutor, and sent more than one student to his academy. But the most remarkable proof of his superiority to party feeling was, that when the Independent Chapel was erected in Halifax, he collected among his friends in London £170 for the cause."

A VICAR-EVANGELIST.

Berridge, the vicar of Everton, Bedford, came regularly to London to preach in Whitefield's chapels and to share in pastoral work along with such good men as Captain Torial Joss, a wonderful sailor-preacher; Captain Scott, a remarkable soldier-preacher; and Thomas Adams, a plain countryman who graduated in the school of persecution and in the college of open-air preaching. Berridge was a scholar, a Cambridge moderator, a devoted preacher, an unwearied pastor, a bold confessor never ashamed of his Master. He went about as an evangelist, proclaiming the Good News in the open-air, or in any place where he could gather a congregation. Whitefield's chapels offered him a congenial sphere, to which he went for some weeks every year, and where he helped forward that wonderful work of conversion which seems to have progressed for almost, if not quite, a century.

Cornelius Winter, writing some time after the death of Whitefield, says: "The state of things at the Tabernacle and Tottenham Court Chapel then (i.e., in Whitefield's days) differed from what it is at the present day, in this, that the supplies were not very considerable, Mr. Kinsman excepted. Hence there was a great disproportion in the congregation; yet conversions were very frequent, by means of the substitutes provided by Mr. Whitefield in his absence, notwithstanding the inferiority of their gifts to his own." Berridge was not poor in gifts, though by no means Whitefield's equal; and what he had, he would give at any time and in any place to the work of Christ. Nonconformity had no odium to frighten him. He preferred his own communion, but was willing, for the Gospel's sake, to JOIN HANDS IN GOOD WORK WITH ANY.

The following quotation from the "Memoirs of Rev. John Townsend, founder of the Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb, and of the Congregational School," (Caterham), is full of suggestion. Townsend's family were church people, but Whitefield was a welcome visitor at the house, and was, indeed, the pastor of Townsend's father. Townsend, as a youth, used to hear the good men who came to the two famous chapels; but the sermon which most deeply impressed his mind, and which he reckoned most effectual in his conversion to God, was one preached at Tottenham Court Chapel by Mr. (afterwards Dr.) Peckwell from Psalm ciii. 13. Alluding to this circumstance many years afterwards (in 1816), when preaching himself in the same chapel on behalf of the Missionary Society, Mr. Townsend thus expressed himself:—

"It was in this house of God that the Gospel came home to my rebellious heart. I have in my immediate view the spot where I sat, when, with a mind deeply impressed, and eyes streaming with tears, I implored the mercy of Heaven. How can I say whether I wept most tears of sorrow, because I found myself a lost sinner, or tears of joy, because I perceived the fulness and the freeness of that salvation which I have long been, and am still, privileged to preach to others?"

Now, who was the preacher when this event took place? Dr. Peckwell, rector of Bloxham-cum-Digby, Lincoln. God was not angry with His servant for going and preaching in an Independent chapel, else He would not have sealed it with the conversion of a man who became one of the most useful in London.

If there are human arrangements that prevent or in any way impede this happy co-operation of men of every name for the furtherance of the Gospel, then surely the sooner they are removed the better. The greatest hindrance to fellowship is Sacerdotalism, which separates itself by unwarrantable assumptions, and then bans those from whom it stands aloof for being schismatics; but then this has no place among Evangelicals anywhere. The separating wall is of man's building, not God's, and as our fathers joined hands in God's service, so ought we. It would be for a sign and a wonder if Episcopalians and non-Episcopalians were again to be seen in hearty co-operation. Surely, the Evangelicals of each section ought to be nearer each other than Evangelicals and Sacerdotalists in the Establishment, or Evangelicals and Rationalists in Nonconformity.

Nuns in Workhouses.—At a meeting lately held at Roscommon, Lady Dudley's scheme for District Nursing was discussed, and it was resolved to apply to the County Council for help. This body referred the matter to the Urban District Council, but the latter, doubtless instructed by the parish priest, refused so much as to consider the application, on the ground that there was no necessity for a nurse, and that it was an attempt to interfere with the prerogatives of the Sisters of Mercy. Thus is illustrated the subserviency of public bodies to priestly dictation in Ireland. At present, out of about 150 workhouses in Ireland, nuns act as nurses, and are paid salaries as such, in nearly 130. No wonder that, while the Roman Catholic population is decreasing, the nuns are rapidly increasing.

Tussles with Sceptics.

By Rev. JOHN TUCKWELL.

THE conflict still goes on. Recently, on arriving at the place of meeting, I was accosted by two gentlemen, who introduced themselves as "Freethinkers," one of whom gave me his name with two university degrees appended to it, saying he would be pleased to debate with me. I duly acknowledged the compliment. Whilst talking together, the secretary came up, and asked me to debate with him. I replied that I had no wish to debate for debating's sake, my object being only to defend what I believed to be the truth. However, although no platform had been brought out, a broken chair was procured, the university man opened the meeting, and the secretary followed. The latter, in closing his address, referred to me, and challenged me, if in the crowd, to come forward and reply. This I did; after which, dropping his previous suavity of manner, he attacked me with violent personalities. I appealed to the chairman, who was standing by, to stop it. He replied that he would put it all right in a minute or two. When the speaker employed some unusually objectionable language concerning our Lord Jesus Christ, I could not help whispering to the chairman, "Did you tell me that you had been a minister of Jesus Christ?" "Yes." "And you mix yourself up with this kind of thing!" "I don't approve of it," he replied. "I will put it all right directly." I really think he felt the painfulness of his position, and I am not without hope that the speaker himself has since regretted the episode. The chairman expressed his regret and disapproval, which brought me the sympathy of the meeting.

On my next visit I found no platform, but my opponent of the previous occasion was walking about on the look out. We met, and had a long conversation on various points at issue between us. The rest of the time I spent in talking upon Scripture subjects with two other little groups—like a peripatetic philosopher. The following week, one of their ablest champions was in the field—a Scotsman, a fluent speaker, unscrupulous, smart, capable, boastful of his blasphemies. Two other opponents came forward while I was in the outskirts of the crowd. At length, elbowing my way through, my appearance became the signal for a fierce outburst of wrath, in which I heard myself for not coming forward until the speaker was tired, &c. The speaker would go away and get some refreshment, and then he would come back. Would I wait? "Yes, certainly." I waited, and after listening to another torrent of infidelity, I was given ten minutes to reply.

During my ten minutes, I corrected my opponent's false interpretation of Lev. xiv., which he had ridiculed as a "cure" for leprosy; and exposed his misrepresentation of the account of Sennacherib's disaster, which he had said related how 180,000 men were slain, and then woke up and all went home. He had denied the scientific possibility of the Deluge, and I refuted him; and he had attacked the story of the Creation, which I defended. After another torrent of fury, he challenged me to a debate on any subject I liked on some other evening.

I accepted the challenge, and chose the story of the Creation. The day and the hour were fixed, and he and his company left. I then secured the broken chair, and for about half an hour reasoned upon the truth of Scripture, and preached the Gospel to some hundred men.

On concluding, I was surprised to find myself greeted by general applause. An elderly gentleman then mounted the chair, and in very kind terms expressed sympathy with me, and proposed a vote of thanks, which was carried heartily. The meeting then broke up. My hope is that the changed tone of my opponents is an indication that the truth is beginning to take effect, and that blessing is coming. The strain of such efforts is very great, and the sympathetic prayers of God's people will be greatly valued.

Back to Calvary.

By Mrs. PENN-LEWIS.

GOD has been calling His people to their knees, and in response to the movings of His Spirit upon them "making intercession according to the will of God," they have been pleading for a world-wide revival—for the gathering of the redeemed out of all nations ere the Lord appears for His own.

Since the petitions have been so large, asking nothing less than revival throughout the whole world, we may expect the omnipotent Lord to respond with large answers, revealing to His servants Divine schemes far above our thoughts, as the heaven is above the earth, for the world-wide proclamation of the Gospel of His Son.

The conviction is increasingly growing upon me that the message which will bring the mighty working of the Holy Spirit in a world-wide revival will be the renewed preaching of the Cross of Calvary as Paul preached it. The essence of the Gospel, so to speak, as summed up in his words, "Jesus Christ, and Him crucified."

But we must remember that the Gospel as Paul preached it included not only reconciliation with God through the blood of the cross, but deliverance from the power of sin by the believer's fellowship with the Lord upon His cross, through which he is "crucified to the world," and the world crucified unto him. Then is made known to him the riches of the glory of this mystery, which is "Christ in you, the hope of glory."

THIS TWO-FOLD MESSAGE OF THE CROSS

must be proclaimed anew, ere the Revival will come, and the Church be prepared for translation at the Lord's appearing. The adversary of souls knows this, and he is devising all manner of devices to hinder the preaching of the Cross, knowing that his time is short.

Multitudes are being ensnared in "Doctrines of demons"—Theosophy, Christian Science, Spiritism, and other isms—one and all revealing their source by their rejection of the Cross; while, alas! in many churches, professing the Christian name, we have silence over the Gospel of the Cross, and sometimes direct antagonism. "Do speak about the Cross and His sufferings. We never hear about that now," said one, to a worker conducting a meeting. Alas that it should be so.

One such world-wide plan, bearing unmistakably the marks of the Divine mind in its conception and preparation, came before me in my visit to Madras, India, in February, 1903.

It is impossible in a short space to tell the story of the long preparation of the M.E. Mission Press in Madras, under the superintendence of Rev. Dr. Rudisill. I can only briefly say that in the Press are a set of eight machines given to Dr. Rudisill in a remarkable way. They were invented by a gentleman in Pennsylvania, U.S.A., and kept solely for his own use for advertising a patent medicine which he was selling in enormous quantities. By these machines he was able to issue a little book consisting of sixteen pages of the size of two inches by three, at the rate of one hundred thousand per day, or twenty-eight millions per year. The inventor had refused to have his machines duplicated, but of his own accord gave a complete set to Dr. Rudisill, who accepted them rather dubiously, not knowing clearly what use he could make of them.

After they reached India, and were set up in the Press, it came to Dr. Rudisill that the wee booklet could be filled with verses of Scripture, and the Word of God thus be scattered in millions throughout India; then by a device of his own added to the machines he found that he could print in

NINETY-EIGHT LANGUAGES AT ONE TIME!

As the year 1903 dawned, it found Dr. Rudisill with specimen booklets prepared. In February, by a chain of events which he relates in a pamphlet* telling the story, he saw that the Lord had given him the Bible Booklet machines for the express purpose of scattering throughout the world, in every language into which the Bible is translated, the Gospel of Calvary—the precious message which tells the soul of freedom from the guilt and power of sin, and the indwelling of the Risen Lord.

The message for the Bible Booklet has now been prepared. In sixteen tiny pages is given every aspect of the Cross in the very words of Scripture, each page headed with its subject as follows: "The Place called Calvary"; "God sent His Son"; "The Word of the Cross"; "The Sufferings of Christ"; "The Propitiation"; "Reconciliation"; "Sins Blotted Out"; "The Throne of Grace"; "The Father"; "The Holy Ghost"; "No longer in Bondage to Sin"; "Not of the World"; "O Death, where is thy Sting?" "Crucified with Christ"; "Christ in you"; "Jesus Crowned."

Will all those who have pleaded for a world-wide Revival, not only give thanks to God for this token of His response to prayer, but continue to bear up before the Lord the carrying out into action of the stupendous plan thus prepared by Him, and ask that all who are concerned in the translating, printing, and circulating of the Bible Booklet be given quickness of understanding to recognise and co-operate with the Spirit of God in the fulfilment of all the counsels of God in this matter; and let them ask, too, that every tiny Booklet may be a message of life to the soul it reaches.

It may be asked whether the message of the Cross thus scattered in heathen lands will be sufficient to lead a soul out of darkness into light, without further knowledge of the Scriptures.

In the first place, if the Bible Booklet falls into the hands of a seeking soul, without doubt it will lead that one to obtain a copy of the Scriptures for further knowledge; but at this point comes the question to ourselves whether we really believe with all our hearts the statement that "The Word of the Cross . . . is the Power of God" (1 Cor. i. 18, R.V.). The Greek word translated "power" in this passage is "dunamis," and it has been pointed out that this word does not mean latent power, but power in action. The Word of the Cross is to all who believe. It is God's "instrument to energise a dead world, for through it Omnipotence can manifest its power."

Have we messengers of God dared to believe that Divine energy is in the "Word of the Cross," or have we limited Omnipotence by thinking that His "Word of the Cross" needs many words to explain it?

Is it not rather the key devised by the all-wise Creator to unlock the hearts of men? "It fits me, as a key fits into a lock," said one, and this is true of every heart of man, be he heathen or so-called "Christian."

We are shown this in the story of the way Philip preached the message of Calvary from the prophecy of Isaiah to the eunuch in the desert. The energy of God was in the message, so that the man of Ethiopia went on his way rejoicing.

That the Lord Himself has devised and prepared this world-wide plan for scattering the message of Calvary through the Bible Booklet, we can have little doubt. Since this is so, we may believe that it "shall accomplish" that whereunto He sends it. The "Word of the Cross" will not return unto Him void, but it will prosper in His hand. "Amen, O Lord," so be it throughout the whole wide world, that the Crucified and Risen Lord may see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied!

A Missionary on Furlough.—Unprayed for, I feel very much as if a diver were sent down to the bottom of a river, with no air to breathe, or as if a fireman were sent up to a blazing building and held an empty hose; I feel very much as a soldier who is firing blank cartridge at an enemy, and so I ask you earnestly to pray that the Gospel may take saving and working effect on the mind of those men to whose notice it has been introduced by us.—James Gilmour, speaking at Exeter Hall.

The Overcoming Life.

BIBLE READINGS.—II.

ACCORDING to St. John, also, there are two opposites at war in the believer, and these he names—(a) Whatsoever is begotten of God. (b) The world (1 John v. 4).

The overcoming life itself he names twice:—First as a new Force—"Whatsoever" (1 John v. 4). Second as a new Personality—"Whosoever" (1 John v. 18).

This life is begotten of God. It is the life born from above (John iii. 3). That is to say, it is the spiritual life.

Ultimately this spiritual life must destroy the world-life. John says we overcome by faith (1 John v. 14).

Christ Himself was the first Overcoming One, and He it is who is reborn in every believer (Col. i. 27). The child of God, born from above, has, nevertheless, a distinct individuality of his own (Phil. ii. 12, 13), and the "Whosoever" that is begotten of God in the soul is the Christ-life which makes the believer more alive than ever, for he has now the more abundant life promised by the Lord (John x. 10).

In the believer this spiritual life overcomes all temptation even as Christ overcame (Rev. iii. 21).

To sum up: (1) Christ Himself is the first Overcoming Life (John xvi. 33; Rev. iii. 21; Rev. xvi. 14; Rev. xvii. 14. (2) We are commanded to live the overcoming life (Rom. xii. 21). (3) The overcoming life is possible to every believer (I John ii. 13, 14).

Postal Officials in Rome.—In connection with Mrs. Wall's work among postmen at Rome, in co-operation with the International Postal Telegraph Christian Association, the men themselves have now petitioned for the appointment of a Bible-woman to visit their homes. The fund is nearly complete, and it is hoped that enough may be given to pay for a Festa, or evening tea and Gospel address, with magic lantern, when the addresses might be obtained. Communications may be addressed to Miss Hodgkin, Wraycroft, Reigate, Surrey.

THE LATE

Mrs. D. L. Moody.

THE great personality of Dwight Lyman Moody overshadowed that of his wife, yet each was the true complement of the other, and his own summing up of the matter was that she was "the best wife God ever gave to a man." In the nature of things any account of her life is difficult to write. Those who would gain some idea of her share in the work of God during the last forty years must look underneath all that was accomplished by her husband, remembering that so far as he leaned at all on an arm of flesh it was to his wife he turned for sympathy, comfort, and guidance—remembering also that whoever might fail in prayer he knew she could be absolutely relied upon to hold him and his work up before the throne of grace.

The two young people became first acquainted in 1856 as fellow-workers in the Wells Street Sunday-school, Chicago, Mr. Moody being then nineteen years of age, and Miss Emma C. Revell four years his junior. Two years later, at the time when he had renounced worldly ambitions, and had launched out into what was considered a wild undertaking, she promised to be his wife, and they were married in 1862. When writing his father's biography, their son (Mr. Will R. Moody) felt that it was not permitted to him to offer to one still living the credit that her heroism, faith, and affectionate devotion deserved; but he summed up his feelings by saying that her husband found in her his greatest human resource. To her wise counsel he gave more heed than to any other.

It is worthy of note that when Mr. Moody suddenly announced in 1867 his intention to visit England, the state of Mrs. Moody's health was one reason for the trip. She was suffering from asthma, and their doctor had suggested that a sea voyage, with an entire change of air and scene, was desirable. In this respect the trip fulfilled its object, Mrs. Moody being entirely and finally cured of her trouble.

When the city of Chicago was burned to the ground in 1871, the Moody family had retired to rest before the loud call of danger was sounded in their neighbourhood. The two children were taken away in a neighbour's carriage, the parents halting to save a few tokens of friendship. One of these was a portrait, painted in 1867, which is still at Northfield, and which Mrs. Moody declined to leave behind, in spite of expostulation on the part of the subject of the picture.

In 1873, Mrs. Moody came to England with her husband and Mr. Sankey; and the first reference to their work which appeared in our columns contained the announcement that she and the children would remain with her sister in the neighbourhood of London while the provincial missions were being conducted; and many are still with us who learned to know and love her during these years. It was on their return to America after that visit that the little farm was bought which became their home and the dearest place on earth to both. In his own family circle the great evangelist found rest and refreshment of spirit.

One never forgotten pleasure was a trip to the Holy Land made in 1892, by invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Mackinnon, Paul Moody being also of the party. Together they visited the scenes so dear to their hearts. Mr. George D. Mackay, of New York, who joined them for three weeks, wrote of it after as "A blessed experience."

When Mr. Moody was passing to be with the Lord, he turned to his beloved helpmeet and said, "You have been a good wife to me." As he was assigning the different portions of his work to the members of his family, his daughter asked "But what about mother?" "Oh," was the reply, "She's like Eve, the mother of us all," as he had relied on her, he expected each of them to do the same. To the last she was in his thoughts. "This is hard on you, mother," he said a few moments before he died, "And I'm sorry to distress you in this way. It's hard to be kept in such anxiety."

Now she too has passed within the vail, leaving the fragrance of a life lived for and with God. No more than justice would be done to her memory if we said "they" in reference to many matters for which our word has been "he." Not on earth will it ever be known what has been her share in the revivals of the last generation.

THE LATE MRS. D. L. MOODY.

Appreciation by Rev. F. B. Meyer.

The death of Mrs. Moody makes another gap in the circle of familiar faces. I had known her rather intimately since 1873, when she came with Mr. Moody to York at the beginning of that great mission which made his name world famous.

She was an ideal wife. Her one aim was to take care of him, without appearing to do so, and to make it possible for him to fulfil his marvellous opportunities as they unfolded. She had no desire to attract attention to herself, to monopolise the conversation, or obtrude the responsible part she was bearing in their common work. She was so retiring, so reticent about herself, and so absorbed in all his undertakings.

Yet Mr. Moody leant on this quiet gentlewoman to an extent little realised by the outside world. They talked over everything in common. I shall never forget seeing them driving together past me one evening, in the rapidly gathering dusk. They were too much occupied in close conversation to notice anyone or anything, but I can see them now leaning towards each other in the free interchange of their inmost thoughts.

She was gifted with excellent judgment and common sense; and in his long absences from home was well able to direct the operations of the great Northfield institutions; directly, so far as the young women were concerned, and in conjunction with her sons and nephew for the rest. She had a remarkable gift for discerning character and of influencing her helpers; but there was no haste, no rush, no assumption, nothing to show that the life-destinies of hundreds were being influenced by her sweet and gentle control. I have never known a woman, with so much responsibility on her, and accustomed to so much honour and reverence, who was quite so natural, quiet, and at leisure. You could not imagine her being in a hurry; but nothing she undertook suffered from neglect.

In Northfield or Chicago, on a Mission tour (for in later years she often accompanied her husband), or in her last visit to Great Britain, she was always the same gracious, noble, calm, and lovely Christian woman. Her face mirrored the rest of her heart in the universal love with which she was surrounded; and in the peace of God that filled it. Her home-going will cause a great blank at Northfield; but that she should be with her Saviour is far better.

Macedonian Distress.

THE Society of Friends at the recent meeting of its representative body, whose name, "The Meeting for Sufferings," commemorates the purpose of its original institution, appointed a committee to ascertain what action can be taken to relieve the suffering peasantry of Macedonia. The experience gained on two former occasions in Bulgaria, the first after the Russo-Turkish war, and the second in the relief of the destitute Armenian refugees after the massacres at Constantinople, will facilitate relief operations in that country among the many thousands of Macedonians, mostly old people, women, and children, who have escaped massacre only by crossing the frontier, leaving their goods and stock to the vengeance of the Turks.

A letter just received from the town of Bourgas estimates the number of refugees in that neighbourhood at ten thousand, and still larger numbers are assembling at other points nearer the Macedonian frontier. The severe Balkan winter is already commencing, and these poor people, many of whom are camping out without even necessary clothing, and very inadequately supplied with food, must perish unless provided with shelter and the means of supporting life through the winter. It is surely a matter that may appeal to every Christian heart.

Two ladies of the Society, one of whom resided for several months in Bulgaria to superintend the relief of the Armenian refugees, and the other of whom has recently visited South Africa on a similar philanthropic mission, will probably start for Bulgaria within the next few days to commence the relief work there as quickly as possible. This will in no wise clash with that of the Macedonian Relief Fund, which is arranging to give assistance to the distressed residents in the disturbed districts in Macedonia itself.

For both of these good objects we bespeak the prompt and liberal sympathy of the Christian public, regardless of creed or denomination. Communications regarding the Friends' Macedonian Relief Fund may be sent to Isaac Sharp, Devonshire House, Bishopsgate Without, E.C.

Church Congress Echoes.

THE forty-third meeting of the Church Congress, held last week at Bristol, may well be regarded as one of large usefulness. Much energy had been thrown in matters of organization, and not a few of the papers read attained a high level. The Bishop of Bristol made a vigorous and outspoken chairman, and the Evangelical school of clergy were strongly in evidence, and had occasion to be well satisfied with the Congress. We subjoin a few notable utterances from some of the most striking addresses.

"VARIATIONS IN RITUAL."

PREB. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.

I speak as representing those who call themselves Evangelical and Protestant in the Church of England. All we ask is that there should be non-admission against any attempt to introduce ritualistic performances meant to bring in doctrines not found in God's Holy Word or in the Prayer Book; but, on the contrary, distinctly rejected at the time of the Reformation. We are the Church of the Reformation. Having cleared ourselves of obstructions, we ask that these might not be brought in again.

SERMONS.

REV. CHANCELLOR EDMONDS.

The gift of utterance is a noble gift when clear of cant, of affectation, of vulgarity; which it will be, if the word is conceived and expressed in Scriptural language—clear, too, of exaggeration and of false fires—clear, too, of every attempt to cause emotion, except as the consequence of an impression made through the conscience on the reason, or the understanding, or the will; offered in prayer in the study to the gracious acceptance of God the Holy Spirit before it is preached; and offered to men in the pulpit in humble dependence upon Him who only can give completeness to our incompleteness, and make our weakness strong. I add two words for their good whom it may concern. One from Coleridge—a warning against "vague and unprofitable declamation," eddying round and round. "Sterility of mind," follows such a ministry, he says. The other from the late Dr. Hort: "There is no congregation in the world which needs nothing but warning and exhorting; all need teaching likewise." It is not only here and there that this subject is of interest; it is not only in our own Church that it is vital. Pulpits can ring with other "utterance" than the mystery of the Gospel. Christian communities go up and down together in these things. In the great interests of religion no community is isolated.

"No preaching," said the Bishop of Exeter a few weeks ago, when he was dedicating a new pulpit in a country church; "no preaching in God's name, however accurate in regard to doctrine, however eloquent and stirring, will ever win the flock of Christ, except the voice of the Shepherd is there." This witness is true.

The Shepherd's voice grows more distinct as in the great fugue of Jewish history the ear detects the ever-recurring theme—"Lo! I come—in the volume of the book it is written of Me—to do Thy will, O God." That same voice is heard above all the stir of our own days, and in every book of the Scriptures of the New Covenant the word which we heard from the beginning is heard again, growing clearer and clearer to its climax—"Behold, I come quickly." "Preach the Gospel." "Lo! I am with you alway."

MESSENGERS OF THE TRUTH.

REV. G. E. A. PARGITER.

For seven or eight years I was in India as head of a missionary college. When I first went out, I started with the idea of winning the natives by intellectual appeal to the mind. Deeper study of the Gospel has taught that the only effectual way to reach them is by spiritual methods. There is great danger in magnifying intellectuality, and people unfortunately are given to abrogating their own opinions, and following a leader. Young men are sent out to India with the idea of becoming intellectual leaders. Just as there are primal needs of the human body, there are primal needs of the human spirit. Christ is the one thing they need. It is the missionary's duty to produce in men's minds a sense of the guilt of rebellion against God's Holy Law. If we present faithfully the Law of Christ, conviction of sin will be produced, and that is the first sign of awakened Christianity. As missionaries, at home and abroad, let us go to the primal facts and needs of human nature, and give in its simplicity the knowledge of Christ. There are immense difficulties in presenting the Gospel to Indians, for the Indian mind is willing to receive every religion and every form of philosophy, without their making any great impression on them. We must not talk of the Church to people of the East, but must put our whole soul into the preaching of the living Christ.

THE BIBLE AND MODERN CRITICISM.

DEAN WACE.

There is a very large school of critics, and, I am afraid, the dominant school in this country and in Germany, who practically deny the historical character of a great part of the Old Testament. For example, Professor George Adam Smith tells us that we really know nothing more about the patriarchs than that they were the names of persons who probably lived about that time. That is tantamount to saying that the historical accounts of the lives of the patriarchs in the Book of Genesis are not true, and that is one of the gravest assertions that could possibly be made. That sort of criticism I view with the greatest anxiety. The audience must not suppose that there are not deep and grave questions at issue in the criticism of the day; and my own belief is that the turning-point of the matter lies in this—that literary criticism of the Old Testament is secondary, but that the question of its substantial historical truth from beginning to end is a vital matter. I have never seen any argument that would bear examination which tended to show that the history as it is told in the Bible is not true.

BETTING AND GAMBLING.

REV. J. W. DIGGLE.

Few will contend that gambling in its lowest forms is innocent. Rather is it wholly and confessedly mischievous. Its haunts are comparable only to dens of thieves. It skulks in caves of wickedness, in low backrooms, in places where the demons of lust and greed delight to dwell. Its ordinary language is that of lewdness and villainy. "Welsher" is synonymous with cheat and scoundrel. When races are to be held in any place, it is quite common to placard the place and its avenues of approach with notices of caution against thieves and pickpockets, as if thieves and pickpockets were regarded as a natural accompaniment of gambling races. In its most vulgar forms gambling thus seems indissolubly connected with every kind of vice, and flourishes most amid the most immoral surroundings. By general consent the sobriquet usually adopted for a gambling-house is "a gambling-hell." There drunkenness and debauchery flourish; robberies and frauds of every kind are committed; miseries and profligacies abound; and from thence the maddened victims, to escape from intolerable ruin, at times rush forth into the jaws of self-inflicted death.

The disease of gambling is eating like a cancer into every grade of the community, and it is the example of the wealthy and the educated which is largely responsible for this maleficent growth among the generality of the people—a growth which is debasing the national ideals, is withdrawing men's minds from the dignities and the certainties of labour, and fixing them on the sensations of speculation and the hazards of luck. I appeal to the rich to reflect on these things—if not for their own sakes, yet for the sake of the poor. I appeal to every patriot to abandon the habit for the sake of his country. And, lastly, I appeal to every Christian to avoid even the appearance of this evil in lotteries, and coupon competitions, and bazaars, and small stakes of every kind, lest he should put a stumbling-block in the way even of the least and the worst of those for whom their sinless Saviour died.

MOHAMMEDANISM AND CHRISTIANITY.

REV. DR. ST. CLAIR TISDALL.

Semitic Monotheism teaches in the Koran that idolatry or "the association of partners with God" is the one unpardonable sin. The great truth upon which this statement is based has paralysed the scanty efforts of the Greek and Roman Churches to win converts from Islam. But it offers encouragement to the Protestant missionary, provided he explains that the doctrine of the Divine Trinity is not contrary to, but based upon, Monotheism; and that the Virgin Mary is not one of the persons of the Godhead, as Mohammed was led by the practices of the "Christians" of his own time to believe to be the Christian creed!

As one more illustration of the opposite ways in which racial characteristics affect missionary work, I may mention that the national pride of a Persian renders him disinclined to accept a foreign faith, while his Mohammedan contempt for Christianity as a polytheistic system—for such he conceives it to be—tends to hinder him from listening to the Gospel. On the other hand, his innate desire to inquire curiously into everything new and strange, coupled with his philosophical and rationalistic bent of mind, and his knowledge that Islam was forced upon his nation by the hated Arab conqueror, all this leads him to read the Gospel, even at considerable personal risk.

Lastly, we never forget that the lives of too many Europeans in non-Christian lands often led heathens and Moslems to believe that one "racial characteristic" of Englishmen consists in irreligion and immorality. This is one of the greatest difficulties in the way of the Gospel.

THE MISSIONARY'S EQUIPMENT.

MR. EUGENE STOCK.

Racial differences there are; and they ought to be frankly recognized, diligently studied, and wisely dealt with. There is a general agreement that missionaries should be more fully acquainted than they sometimes are with the religions of the people whose conversion they seek. Their ignorance is really not so dense as is often assumed. At least, they generally know more than their critics. Still, without question, there is room for improvement. I would submit, however, that it is possible to lay too much stress on this point.

Suppose a band of Buddhist or Mohammedan missionaries came from India to try and convert us to Buddhism or to Islam. Would they take great pains to know by heart Butler and Paley, Hooker and Pearson, Lightfoot and Westcott? Yes, I think they might, if their object was to take our religion and their own and make a scientific and impartial comparison between them, with a view to showing us that, whatever the admitted merits of Christianity, Buddhism, or Islam was better.

But if they came, not as scientific students of comparative religion, but as men honestly and deeply convinced that they were messengers of the great God, commissioned to tell us some stupendous fact about His dealings with men known to them and not known to us—as, for example, that Buddha or Mohammed had reappeared with a fresh revelation from heaven—would they trouble themselves about the niceties of Christian theology? Their attitude, surely, would be, not that of scientific inquirers or lecturers, but of men with a message—a message of infinite importance to us; and the great qualification for the ministry would be an absolute assurance of the truth of their own message, and a determination to make any sacrifice that other men might benefit by it.

My point is, not that we are to despise or neglect the study of non-Christian religions, but that a full and experimental knowledge of Christianity, and of Christ, is of far more practical importance. There are diversities of gifts in the Church and diversities of operation. Let us hold in high respect the student missionary who knows the Koran or the Chinese classics by heart. Assuredly there is an important sphere for him to occupy. But, after all, a survey of the mission field will show us that the man whom God honours by using him to bring sinners to the Saviour is the man who goes with a direct message, and who also knows by experience his message is true.

Congregationalists at Bournemouth.

(BY OUR OWN REPRESENTATIVE.)

IT was a spirited thing of the Congregationalists of this far away watering-place to invite the Union of England and Wales to hold its autumnal session there, and the result justified the faith and enterprise. The arrangements were good, and the meetings, viewed at any rate from the outside, were a great success. There was a general feeling among the ministers and delegates that the spiritual tone was high and well sustained; yet I could not help asking myself again and again—Is this the kind of gathering where we may expect the highest kind of good to be done? Could anyone imagine this gathering visited with a mighty outpouring of the Holy Spirit? Is there quiet enough? Is there expectancy? Is the heart of this huge concourse set on one thing? A prominent man once said to me after we had emerged from such a gathering: "This kind of meeting is not prepared for Pentecost." The spirit of the speaker was not censorious; but one is led to ask: "Must not Christian brethren ponder the value of the smaller and perhaps more elect company in which unity, faith, and prayer shall be the open doors through which may come streams of blessing?" All the same I am sure that many a minister has returned to his home and work greatly quickened and strengthened, and many a layman too.

TWO NOTABLE FEATURES.

Two things struck me as prominent all the week—(1) the determination to maintain the authority and use the power of the Gospel in seeking the salvation of men; the Bible to be used in doing something, not torn in pieces before the eyes of congregations: and (2) the missionary note; the assembly seemed like a host of men and women preparing for crusades in many lands; there was a stir and a pulsation which told of great enterprise.

Rev. AMBROSE SHEPHERD, of Glasgow, preached a sermon on the Monday night which contained some remarkably plain words about the harm that is being done by the criticism of the Book that ought to be expounded, preached, and applied to the consciences of sinners, instead of assailed and doubted. He affirmed that this critical method had destroyed several large classes of men in Glasgow, who used to come together for the study of Scripture. His opinion was that the application to any other literature of the same arbitrary and pitiless methods as have been applied to the Bible would reduce it to absurdity.

He did not speak as an expert, but as a working minister, who sees the practical effect of things said and done. Yet he is not afraid. "Have faith in God!" was his exhortation, in view of all the threatening of the clouds. In the same strain was a remarkable deliverance from Dr. HORTON, to which attention was called last week in THE CHRISTIAN. It has already provoked adverse remark, and no doubt Mr. Shepherd will have his turn in due time, but the men who pen these things have none of the practical experience that Dr. Horton and Mr. Shepherd and others have. I am confident that this outspokenness on a vital question was received with gratitude by large numbers of ministers.

A POSITIVE GOSPEL.

The same true note rang out in some at least of the speaking on the "Seat of Authority in Religion;" one speaker insisting that it was only in the regenerate heart that the authority of Christ was regarded—a point of vital importance in view of the fact that so many discuss this question from without, and are in no position to speak of an authority by which they are not ruled. Dr. FORSYTH dealt with "The Need for a Positive Gospel." He emphasised the word "positive." They must see to the positive Gospel, and that would settle the spiritual life. The so-called liberal theology of his early days was disappointing in its results. That theology, he said, must go back to orthodoxy to find its old core. They wanted a Gospel authoritative and objective, as modern as the questions concerning it. The religion of the hour was evolutionary, impressionist, and institutional, and, said Dr. Forsyth, a positive Gospel corrected extravagances of these things.

Very carefully he elaborated these points with the approval of his audience. They needed a positive Gospel to correct them from the lack of undenominational education. It would protect them from the effects of culture, and nothing more than culture. Again, it would protect them from the dropping down of Christianity to philanthropy alone. It would protect them from letting down piety to mere piety.

THE CAUSE OF MISSIONS.

The missionary note, as I have said, was everywhere and in almost everything. An address of seventy-five minutes by the President was given to it, and was a fine illustration of how a luminous, instructive, stimulating address may be built upon a historical basis; history and biography might advantageously supersede a good deal of the arid speculation and dry argumentation of which in time past the churches have had so much.

The missionary note was in Mr. SILVESTER HORNE'S sermon on our Lord weeping over Jerusalem, and then cleansing the temple. "It takes an idealist to reform the actual. The city of wrong will only change its attitude by the man who has seen the city of God. We are beginning to learn that the only substantial foundations are those which are seemingly unsubstantial, because invisible, whose builder and maker is God. This vision will abide in squalid homes and amongst our low-browed, stunted artisans; it will disturb our ignoble sleep, it will be a scourge to selfishness, and it will be a reproach to complacency and ease. We may, said the preacher, be disloyal to the vision, but we can never destroy it.

"Christ knew all about the condition of Jerusalem. He wept, not because it was subject to Rome, but because it was subject to sin. Emotional religion! says your practical man. Tears, idle tears! Brothers, I shall have occasion to say these were not idle tears. You can never save the city without tears! You cannot build the city of God without tears! You cannot build the spiritual commonwealth without tears. Though it may seem a paradox, you will never see the vision unless you see it in a mist of tears.

"The first condition to save the people is to love them. The first step towards the reformation of the State is the reformation of the Church. Christ went straight from weeping over Jerusalem to reform the Church. The function of the Church is to be eyes to the age. This visit to the temple was to purge the eye of the State. If we in England have bad laws, how much is due to the pagan spirit which we see in these modern times!"

GREAT TEMPERANCE MEETING.

This same feeling of loving compassion prevailed in the great temperance meeting which gathered at the close of Mr. Horne's sermon. Dr. GARVIE thrilled us by describing a scene he had witnessed in the slums of Glasgow, which had for ever determined him to be on the side of total abstinence. A poor drunkard said he had seen in one corner of his room the image of Christ, who said to him, "Don't drink"; and in the opposite corner an image of Satan, who said, "Drink"; and to Dr. Garvie the poor wretch said, "I will drink." To save souls from this deadly sin was the object of Christian temperance workers.

Rev. BERTRAM SMITH, of Leeds, who, along with Rev. F. WRIGLEY has been so blessed of God among the poor of that city, produced a never-to-be-forgotten impression upon the assembly by an impassioned speech on the conditions of life as he sees and knows it. One incident was a visit he had quite recently paid to an old man, over seventy years of age, who held the best testimonials from his employer for steadiness and trustworthiness, and yet had nothing in his old age but a pauper's fate. How could it be otherwise, seeing his wages had only been a pound a week? When Dr. BRUCE suggested at the Lord's table that gifts for the old man would be received at the doors, a generous amount was raised.

The number of societies that hold their meetings at the time of the Union meetings, and yet have no organic connection with the Union, is striking, and perhaps they are all the stronger for being officially unrecognized; they may be bound and weakened when they come into an official status, however the Christian Endeavourers and lay preachers desire it.

At a meeting of the latter Mr. JAMES JACKSON remarked that "some churches employed the services of religious adventurers (not of their church) in the conduct of town missions, and thereby prevented many experienced and capable men of their own faith and order from getting a call. He urged that in the interest of perishing humanity, of their churches, of their ministers, and of their unions, they ought to resort to Apostolic usage, as Christians would never be Christianized by paid ministers alone."

SPIRITUAL LIFE OF THE CHURCH.

In a paper on "The Church's Spiritual Life in relation to its Duty to its own Members," Rev. F. W. CLARKE, of St. Helen's, made some searching observations, his last point being this: Almost more than one dare say or think, the spiritual life of the Church depends among us upon the spiritual life of the minister. It does so more than it ought, yet it cannot but do so largely, and the consequent responsibility is almost overwhelming. Is the Church as a whole to be so truly in touch with Christ as to be able to speak His mind? The minister must be in continual communion with Him? Is its moral standard to be high? How bright must his spirit and example be! Is it to bear witness to the forgiveness of sins? How fully the Gospel of pardon and redemption must possess his being! Can its apprehension of things unseen be vivid and potent unless his faith be strong? How shall his people pray if he does not? How shall their life be high if his be low?

THE LATE WAR.

While the Watchers' Band was holding its quiet meeting in the Presbyterian Church, the assembly was holding an excited meeting at Richmond Hill Congregational Church, and Dr. HORTON was delivering some sentiments which some of his brethren think would have had more consistency had he attacked the Government for and before the war. What were they to say to a Government which permitted the country to enter into such a war in absolute ignorance of the very facts which were vital to the situation, and the very facts which every one of them might have known? A poor signalman who slept in his box—if there was a life lost—was prosecuted for manslaughter. He said it deliberately—those Ministers of theirs were chargeable with hundreds, if not thousands, of lives. And their sons were sleeping on the veldt, and would not return, because the men who held the honour of England in their hands were too incapable or too lazy to understand the situation which that war brought about. When he read of the cardboard boots, of the flimsy uniforms, and the short range guns, and the short sighted rifles; and when he remembered the lads of his own church who went out at their country's call trusting to the capacity and honour of an English Government—he felt that it was time for them as Englishmen—if not as Congregationalists—to express the opinion that if the neglect and incapacity of the War Office were permitted to pass without a most signal and decisive condemnation, the hope of ever recovering their position in the world must be allowed to die.

Why did he obtrude these matters upon them when questions of such importance were waiting for consideration? He would give the answer—they could not rely on the populace of England to understand such questions as that, they were too besotted with drink and gambling; they read their papers to learn the latest betting news, and probably would never read the reports of the inquiry into the management of the war. They could not rely on the governing class—that governing class were personally interested in some of the worst of the neglect, the worst of the oversight, the criminality.

TO WHOM WAS ENGLAND TO LOOK TO-DAY?

He remembered it was their forefathers who brought Strafford, Laud, and the Royal head to the block for offences which were not intrinsically worse than the offences which the present Government had committed. He said that they, as the sons of the Independents, were not to show any of that timorous misgivings which had silenced the tongues of men during past years.

They were to speak out, and to speak boldly. He thanked God they were no longer called to wield their weapons in the cause of their country; but he praised God that they were the descendants of the men who did wield those weapons; and they were able to stand as the sons of the army of Independence, and express the right judgment of the best part of England on the scandal and mismanagement of the Government. There was one little company of Englishmen at any rate, and they were the descendants of the old Ironsides, who demanded that the Ministers who were responsible for that neglect and that shameful regardlessness of the lives of men—of their fellow countrymen—would have the grace to confess it, and to come to the country and ask what the country thought of them? They demanded that the Government which had flouted the Puritanism of England should confess at last that they no longer represented the country, whose confidence they had abused. The speech was received with prolonged applause and enthusiasm.

PUBLIC QUESTIONS.

The assembly expressed its opposition to the Education Act; its reprobation of the inhumanity of Turkish rule in Macedonia; and its pleasure at the way in which licensing magistrates have been using their powers to curb the drink traffic, its indignation at the attempts of the Government to limit magisterial authority, and its determined opposition to any attempt to protect the trade by new legislative measures. All this kind of work the assembly always goes into with vigorous enthusiam, and yet upon the first and last of these points I could have put my hand upon persons, Congregationalists, who would not have voted for these resolutions.

GENERAL BUSINESS.

The Union appointed with perfect unanimity Rev. J. A. Mitchell, B.A., of Nottingham, secretary, in place of the late Rev. W. J. Woods, B.A., and Mr. Mitchell accepted the post. I believe the choice to be as good as could have been made. The young people were remembered in a meeting held specially for them; the churches in adjacent country towns had meetings or sermons; and every morning there was a service and a sermon in Bournemouth itself, a new departure which some think was justified by the result. Rev. Burford Hooke had his usual good success with the Colonial Missionary Society, which is doing great things in the colonies. His report, brief and living, was rich in encouragement, particularly as it pointed out the good work done by young men who were trained at home in Sunday-schools, and now remember the claims of Christ amid their abounding temptations to forget Him. Rev. George Jackson, Wesleyan Methodist, of Edinburgh, was the preacher for the Society, but his sermon was not so effective as the speech he delivered in the evening. Mr. Holmes made an excellent chairman, sympathetic and intelligent.

If there be one meeting in October more popular than another, it is that at which farewell is taken of the missionaries, some veterans, some recruits, who are on the point of departing for their fields of labour; and the meeting this year was as crowded and impressive as any. Thus the influence of the meetings of 1903 will go to far away places, to every corner of our country, and will remain to bless the town that showed its hospitality so freely and generously. The Mayor, who is a Congregationalist, and who will serve in the office a second year, spared no labour and no pains, and the best of all was that he was in sympathy with all that was done. His was no mere official countenancing of a public visit made to the town.

The Clifton Conference.

THE forty-first annual gatherings in connection with this Conference were held in the Victoria Rooms, Clifton, under the presidency of Rev. James Ormiston, rector of St. Mary-le-Port, Bristol. On the Convener taking the chair on Tuesday morning, he called for a brief period of silent prayer, and this was followed by quite a fervent devotional service of some length. Each meeting of the Conference thus opened, showing that the addresses were by no means to be taken as the only important feature in the day's proceedings.

At the opening gathering, the Chairman announced the subject to be considered—The Christ of God. On the first day attention would more particularly be confined to "Christ as the Son of God." He deeply regretted the absence of Rev. Canon Head (vicar of Clifton), who was unavoidably prevented from attending to deliver the first address. His place, however, was taken by the vicar of Christchurch, Clifton.

Rev. T. C. Chapman claimed for their Lord, not only the chief but the exclusive place in their hearts as their Saviour, for there was none besides. He spoke most sympathetically upon Jesus being their Justifier, Sanctifier, and Everlasting Peace.

Mr. John Wood (Evangelization Society) directed attention to the fourth Gospel as being most emphatically "the Gospel of the Son of God." Life, light and love were its leading lines, and in Christ they could see the three.

The last speaker of the morning was Mr. G. E. Thomas (Bath), who almost confined himself to pressing home the question, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?"

In the afternoon, a number of the usual societies at the Conference, such as the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society, the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland, were most ably represented.

In the evening, Pastor W. Fuller Gooch referred to the perilous times in which they lived, as a summons to them to unite together in bearing testimony to the truth and authority of the Word of God.

Rev. Canon Spence, who in the afternoon had so eloquently represented the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland, impressively argued that if the Christ had been but a high type of humanity, then no miracle would have been needed to prove it. But His whole life might be regarded as an illustration of His words, "I and My Father are one."

On Wednesday the topic was "The Christ of God as the Son of Man," Pastor Fuller Gooch remarking upon two facts against which the great enemy of souls had ceaselessly raged viz., first, the revelation which God has made in His Word, and next in the Living Word who was in the beginning with God, and God. He proceeded to argue that the humanity of the Son of God is as essential as His Divinity. He was Son of God and Son of Man, literally, however wonderful the terms.

Rev. W. Turpin (Eastbourne) and Rev. W. Sykes spoke, each in substantial agreement with the first speaker. In the afternoon there was a large meeting, and much interest was excited by an address in Italian (translated by Dr. Burt, of Rome), who testified that there were many priests in Rome who wanted to leave the Romish Church and to become Protestants; and some had already done so, and are now in the Home Refuge for Converted Priests. Dr. Baedeker also added a few telling remarks upon the bondage of priests.

Dr. Barnardo, the last speaker, spoke with great pathos and effect upon the work with which he is so closely identified.

There was a numerous gathering at the evening meeting, over which Rev. James Ormiston presided. The speakers were Dr. Waller, Mr. F. Bergen, and Rev. T. Houghton.

There was no conference on Thursday morning as in former years, but in the evening in the Memorial Church, Rev. W. Turpin preached. The subject of his discourse was "The Divine appreciation of His beloved Servant," based upon Isaiah xlii. 1-4.

The Bible League.

IN view of the many open doors set before it, the Bible League asks the earnest prayer of all believers in the Word of God as a Divine Revelation to man, that its efforts to uphold the sacred authority and infallibility of the Scriptures may be furthered by the increasing blessing of God. The following extracts from a letter, addressed to the hon. secretary by Pastor Frank White, may serve to stimulate others to co-operation, as well as to prayerful and sympathetic thought upon the work of the League:—

"I rejoice for your timely and faithful admonition in the current 'Occasional Paper' of the Bible League. I grieve for the 'serious deficiency' in its funds, especially at a time like the present. Never has its unique witness in my judgment been more imperatively called for than now. The faith of not a few is being overthrown by these daring impugners of the Word of God. 'Their word' is eating its way like a gangrene into the very vitals of the Christian faith. 'Nevertheless, the firm foundation—i.e., the sure Word, the truth and truthfulness of God as opposed to men's fictions, standeth.' Come what may, 'He abideth faithful, He cannot deny Himself.'

"The two-fold 'seal' of this sure foundation is, 'The Lord knoweth them that are His,' and 'let every one who nameth the name of the Lord, or nameth Christ as his Lord, depart from iniquity.' A plain allusion to Isaiah lii. 11: 'Depart ye, depart ye, go ye out from thence, touch no unclean thing; go ye out of the midst of her; be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord.'

"Moreover, it is not a departure or standing aloof from the iniquitous teachings of such men as Hymaneus or Philetus—men certainly to be classed with teachers of to-day who deny the historical reality of the great supernatural facts of the Gospel, on which the faith of God's elect alone rests—but a separation, a standing aloof from such teachers themselves.

"This is evidently the meaning of the apostolic injunction in vv. 20, 21 of 2 Tim. ii. 'If a man therefore purge himself from these'—i.e., the vessels of dishonour—vessels put in the name of the Lord of the House to a base and unprofitable use, "he shall be sanctified, hallowed—meet, or profitable, for the Master's use—prepared unto every good work' (in contrast to those who in Titus i. 16 are said to be reprobate, or found worthless for any or every good work). This is surely namely, a revival of reverence for revealed truth; a revival of holy jealousy and zeal for the paramount claims of God, and the maintenance in its sacred entirety of the 'Doctrine of Christ'; a revival of tender heartfelt concern for the future of those young disciples of the Lord, who are being offended and stumbled by such strange teachings coming from the lips and pens of men, some of whom are standing in the high places of the Church, and sitting in the chairs of our Christian colleges. Let us cry for such a revival, labouring meanwhile patiently and prayerfully in the Word and doctrine.

"Does not the present crisis demand this of us? Even at the very beginning of the Church's history—a time of rare purity and simplicity—the Apostle's cure for the first workings of evils in the new community of the saved was to select 'seven men of honest report and full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom' for the particular business of serving tables, while they would 'give themselves continually to prayer and the ministry of the Word.' Might not we modern ministers of Christ imitate them in this? Would not this be a Diviner way of benefiting and blessing, not only our Christian flocks, but the poor perishing world around us, than very very much of that which at present is so filling the hands and hearts of Christ's pastors and preachers. We might not appear to be 'up to date,' but we should certainly be back to date, and prove ourselves more like true successors to the blessed Apostles."

The Waldensian Synod.

By H. GRATTAN-GUINNESS, D.D.

THE meetings of the Waldensian Synod at La Tour continued for five days, occupying, with little intermission, the whole of each day. Much work was got through, including discussions and divisions on numerous practical questions. The morning of the last day but one was devoted to the reception of delegates from England, Scotland, France, Germany, and Italy.

It was my privilege to address the Synod on the Fulfilment of Prophecy in History, especially their own history, and the relation of the memorable suppression and restoration of the Waldensian Church and people in 1686-9 to the suppression and exile of the Huguenots in France, at the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685; and the triumph of the Protestant cause which followed, at the accession of William of Orange to the throne of England in 1688-9, since which date England has never had a revolution.

This era was a notable crisis in Protestant history, and the two centuries which have followed have witnessed the outpouring of a series of predicted judgments on Papal Christendom, including the events of the terrible French Revolution, the destructive Napoleonic wars, and the fall and termination of the Papal temporal sovereignty, which had lasted 1,114 years, and the coincident emancipation and unification of Italy, and formation of the Protestant German Empire. This great era has been also marked by a world-wide proclamation of the Gospel, in which the Waldenses, as evangelists of Italy, have played an important part; and in the whole movement of the era, extending over the last two centuries, may be clearly traced the fulfilment of the sure word of prophecy.

On the Sunday following the Conference, we attended the morning service in the church at Lucerne, and in the afternoon visited the old church of La Tour, known as the "Temple des Copiers," erected in the middle of the sixteenth century, at the time of the Reformation, and subsequently destroyed and restored. Both buildings are of the plainest character; small windows, placed high for security, admit the light; the seats are of unpainted wood, and the walls whitewashed. A table with a green baize cover, for use at the communion service, stands at the head of the central aisle in front of the pulpit.

The morning congregation consisted of about equal numbers of men and women, the men for the most part sitting on one side of the central aisle and the women on the other. The attention during the service was profound, and the singing both hearty and harmonious. We much enjoyed our interview with the pastor, Dr. Gay, a bright and gifted man, who has frequently visited England and America. He received us with great cordiality, and gave us one of his works on Waldensian history.

We were much impressed by the fact that the pastors whom we met in the Synod at La Tour, and at their homes in the valleys, were men of considerable intelligence and education, and of a beautiful Christian spirit. The total number of ordained ministers in the Waldensian Church is now ninety-four, of whom twenty-one are located in the Valleys, while the remainder occupy missionary posts in the principal cities of Italy and Sicily. Out of a population of about 20,000 in the Valleys, no less than 14,000 are members of the Waldensian Churches. The number of communicant members of their churches in Italy is above 19,000 out of a total Protestant membership of 25,000. Forty-four pastors are engaged in the Italian mission work, together with sixteen unordained evangelists, fourteen colporteurs and Bible-readers, and sixty-four teachers, making in all 138 missionary workers.

The largest part of the evangelization of the thirty millions of Italy is conducted by the Waldensians. The name of "pervert" is never flung in Italy at Waldensian evangelists. Roman Catholics who often stigmatize converted priests as "perverts," say to the Waldensian pastors, "You have a claim to be heard when you preach the Evangelical faith which you always believed, and for which your fathers fought and suffered."

Industrial Missions for Africa.

AT the Golborne Road Congregational Church, North Kensington, Mr. Joseph Booth, of Nyassaland, B.C. Africa, recently delivered a discourse upon Evangelistic and Industrial Work in Central Africa.

He stated that, in the month of July, 1891, he arrived in London from Australia, in order to urge upon missionary societies the importance of using their revenue more largely upon reproductive lines of effort; and so make mission-stations, as far as possible, self-supporting and self-propagating, in order the more rapidly to overtake the world's evangelization. Rev. R. K. Mackay (of the Golborne Road Church) was the first London minister to give his pulpit for the advocacy of the cause; no visible response having been elicited in London or other parts of Britain, he went as a missionary free-lance to tropical Africa (East).

By August, 1892, he had settled in the vicinity of the Shiré Highlands, and another voluntary worker followed from Australia, by name Edward Mangin; but fourteen days after his arrival he died of fever, and was buried near the Church of Blantyse, B.C.A. No stone marks the place of his burial, yet he was the pioneer missionary of the Zambesi Industrial Mission, which came into existence about September, 1892, through the co-operation of Mr. R. Caldwell (its present secretary), Pastor Mackay and others. In 1894, the Nyassa Industrial Missionary Society took shape, and in 1896, the Baptist Industrial Missionary Society of Scotland.

Mr. Booth gave various interesting incidents relating to evangelistic work during the pioneer period, and claimed that the joint efforts of the three above-named societies had demonstrated the importance of combining industries with educational and evangelistic mission work. Many thousands of Nyassaland natives, who, twelve years ago, were ignorant savages or domestic slaves, are now leading industrious and harmless lives, their children attending elementary schools, whilst a goodly proportion are professed converts of good repute.

The speaker urged that the time had come when industrial mission effort should have larger consideration and ampler resources; that its value as a means of developing, uplifting, evangelizing, and employing our British African fellow-subjects on a broad Protestant basis, should be recognised.

There are ten tribes in Nyassaland for which something has been done; whilst on the vast East African Protectorate, Ugandaland and Somaliland Protectorates, there are over fifty tribes, and in British West Africa fully forty tribes, for whom, as yet, we have done scarcely anything industrially. To most of these we have taken a gun and demanded a tax; to some we have taken the Bible; but to none have we given beneficial, systematic industries.

The speaker proceeded to give an account of a recent tour of inspection of the countries and peoples of the Uganda and East Africa Protectorate, and furnished some curious information as to habits and customs. He particularly advocated the importance of cotton culture, and said that "between latitudes twenty degrees N. and twenty degrees S. of the Equator, we have far more African territory suitable for cotton culture than has the United States of America."

Mr. Booth urged that an Industrial Mission fund of £100,000 of gift money should be called for; further, that £100,000 on an investment and share basis should be provided; and finally £50,000 gift money for the education and industrial training of African women should be forthcoming in the next five years.

Signs in America.

By DR. A. T. PIERSON.

THERE are some peculiar evidences of God's providential and gracious working that may be observed by those who study the signs of the times reverently. One of the foremost enterprises of the day is the Inter-Continental Railway, first suggested by a United States Consul thirty years ago, and then discussed at the Pan-American Conferences. It contemplates a vast system of railway, connecting the great lakes of the North with Central and Southern America, ultimately giving us a grand trunk line to Tierra del Fuego, with branches along the great waterways—the Amazon basin alone covering from four to six million square miles.

To the student of missions, this scheme of commercial magnates and millionaires is God's working to make millions of people, now remote from us, accessible to Bible and tract distribution and to the Gospel herald. The preliminary steps have been taken in the necessary surveys, and 500 more miles will be built before the close of the year, shortening to about 4,000 miles the necessary distance to be covered.

CHRISTIAN PUBLIC MEN.

A second interesting feature in our American life is the boldness of Christian men in official positions in manifesting Christianity. President Roosevelt is a very decided and outspoken disciple of Christ, and may be depended on in any crisis to take a stand on the side, not only of morality, but of religion. His address on the Bible will not soon be forgotten, and his bold championship of human equality, official fidelity, and obedience to law, is refreshing. Secretary Cortelyon recently began his official duties in the new Department of Commerce and Labour with public devotional exercises.

One awful sign of the times is the alarming

GROWTH OF LAWLESSNESS AND LYNCHING.

In a letter to the Springfield Republican, the eminent Harvard psychologist, Prof. William James, describes the lynching spirit as a profound social disease that is so rapidly spreading, that, "we shall have negro burning in a very few years on Cambridge Common and the Boston Public Garden." Prof. James's letter was hardly published before the report of the lynching in Danville, Illinois, afforded a lurid verification of his prophecy in a Northern town—the home of the man who has been selected by the Republicans as the next Speaker of the House of Representatives, a town that has hitherto been regarded as a centre of light and leading for the eastern part of Central Illinois.

No doubt, at the bottom of this lynching there is much latent race-hatred, as most of the victims are blacks. But in connection with this is undoubtedly a still more dangerous defiance and contempt of law. The old triangular contest is upon us—infidelity and irreligion at the opposite angles of the base, and the common apex in which each naturally culminates—disregard of both human and Divine law. The evil is deep-rooted, and the appetite for cruelty in connection with these acts of violence grows, like the tiger's taste of blood, into a maddening fury.

The Basuto Mission.—In place of Pastor Dieterlin, who is ill, Pastor A. Casalis is once more visiting Great Britain in furtherance of the work of the French Mission in Basutoland. Already meetings in aid are being arranged at Plymouth (October 28) and Bournemouth (October 30). Other engagements during November are at Notting Hill, Marylebone, Reigate, Eastbourne, Cambridge, and London. Friends able to organize meetings should communicate without delay with the hon. secretary in England, Mrs. Sutherland Taylor, 190, Albion Road, Stoke Newington, N.

Converted Priests in Italy.—Rev. Dr. W. Burt, presiding elder of the American Methodist Episcopal Church in Italy, and Signor B. Cozza, ex-priest, have been arousing interest in the work amongst Italian priests, and the refuge that was opened for them five years ago in Rome. During the last ten days Dr. Burt and Signor Cozza have been addressing sympathetic audiences at the Clifton Conference, and at Bristol and other places in the West. After holding other meetings, in the neighbourhood of London, they will tell the story of the work on Thursday, October 22, at Exeter Hall (Lower), at 3 p.m.

The Last Time.

By Wm. WOODS SMYTH.

IF we unfold to our mind the page of history for all time, and, as it were, place our finger at that point where the testimony of Jesus by the Holy Ghost became incident upon men, and changed the whole destiny of the great nations of the earth, we perceive—apart from the exceptional events of the creation, the taking of man into fellowship with God, the fall from that high estate, and the Deluge—that all events subsequent to the Pentecost have been of considerably greater magnitude than those preceding that period.

Or, to state the question in another form—excepting only the supernatural foundation of Israel, all national histories after Pentecost have been of much greater magnitude than those going before the advent of our Lord and of the Holy Spirit. The Kingdoms of Egypt, the Empires of Babylon, of Assyria, of the Medo-Persians, and of Greece, were relatively small compared with the Empire of Rome. Daniel's prophetic forecast of the great kingdoms of the earth is agreeable to these historic facts, and modern discoveries have added to the greatness of the earth's territory once dominated by Imperial Rome.
